Angle,

Angle (Nangle)

A single street village near sea level at western end of the Castlemartin peninsular

There is evidence of pre Norman strip fields still existing behind each freehold as they have since approx. 800 AD village. Flat topped houses and colonnaded Globe Hotel reflected, it is alleged the participation of Colonel Richard Myerhouse in the South African Wars. The last remains of five old sailing vessels are slowly rotting away on the beach one of which was the schooner Progress reputedly the fastest ship in her day on the cod run to Newfoundland another the 45ft two masted ketch Mary Jane the last ship to be built in Jacob's Pill.

First records using the name date from 12 century and it was sometimes recorded as Nangle.

Earthworks and Monuments according to The Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments (RCAM)

The Devil's Quoit, or Newton Cromlech:

This structure stands on the stretch of sand known as Newton or Broom Burrows; at high tides the sea reaches the stones. One, possibly two, of the supporters has fallen so that the fine capstone, 12 feet in length, is borne one end by a single stone. Fenton (Tour, 405) speaks of the structure as having probably been covered, but there is now no trace of a possible mound. About forty paces to the East is a prostrate monolith which may have had some connection with the cromlech.

Castles Bay or Skomer Neck Camp:

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 38 SE. lat. 51° 40' 22" N, long 5° 07' 00" W)

What must have been an unusually interesting earthwork has in recent years been much disturbed through various causes, military, agricultural and natural. Fortunately it was examined at the end of the 19th century by Lieut. Colonel W. Ll. Morgan, R.E., an ex-Commissioner, who has written of it: A bank and ditch, 200 feet long from cliff to cliff, cuts off an area of about half an acre from the mainland opposite to Sheep Island. The width from cliff to cliff is afterwards reduced to 100 feet and a deep natural gully, 60 feet wide, cuts off the rest of the promontory, about two acres in extent (defended by steep cliffs) from the first-named area. The smaller area might either have been the bailey of the larger enclosure, or possibly the gully was used as a ditch to protect it from the sea. Probably the first is the correct solution, as Fenton (Tour, 404), quoting from George Owen's (1602) that the remnant of a tower stood in this further enclosure in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and that the tradition is that this was a place of retreat for the new Norman settlers to save themselves from the natives. The rampart mentioned above is 6 feet high (or rather was, for it has mostly been destroyed by the erection of a War Office building) across the tongue, with 8 feet fall to a ditch 5 feet wide, the ground rising to the front. The entrance is near the east end.

The surface of the larger area or promontory is dotted with depressions, which, in the absence of spade examination, have every appearance of hut circles. Some of these might profitably be excavated.

West Pickard Camp:

(This name does not appear on any map or document till the 1842 tithe assessments). (6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 38 SE.; lat. 51° 40' 00" N, long. 5° 05' 20" W).

This promontory camp is situated midway between West and East Pickard Bays. Although much damaged from exposure enough remains to show it to have been of horse-shoe shape, and to have measured 220 feet by 160 feet. To the west the defence is formed by the naturally steep cliffs; to the north and east a bank rises some 8 feet from the enclosed area, falling externally 15 feet to a ditch of an average depth of 3 feet. The entrance was at the south-east angle. Any footpath which may have led down to the sea has disappeared through falls of the cliff. Visited, 8th June, 1922.

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 38 NE.; lat. 51° 04' 5", long. 50° 51' 6").

Separated at high tide from the church and churchyard are the remains of a moated dwelling which has been frequently termed a "Fortified Rectory" upon part of the ruins a Small house has been built which is called "Castle Farm," (first recorded in 1729) and by this name the site is locally known.

On plan the site gives a square enclosure, protected on its north and west sides by a well-preserved wet moat, on the south by an inlet of the sea, and on the east originally by the third side of the moat, which, however, has been here filled-in to form a road At the south-west corner stands the shell of a tower of the "peel " type 15 feet square, and some 80 feet high. This is the part of the structure which is illustrated and described in Arch. Camb. (1868, ITI, xiv, 77) as a "Fortified Rectory."

The north-east angle was protected by another and possibly similar tower, of which the vaulted under-croft still survives in use as a cart-shed. The south-west tower is of four stories, the lowest vaulted; all the floors have fallen, as has also the saddle-back roof. The first floor was reached by a flight of forty-seven steps.

The three upper storeys have fireplaces, that in the middle chamber being placed across an angle. In the ground floor chamber is an opening, probably intended provide access to the cellar beneath; in the wall outside are corbels which may have carried a hoisting arrangement; all of which point to smuggling activities at possibly a late date. A prominent feature on the four sides of the exterior is a row of large corbels which possible supported a wooden galleys entered by a doorway still traceable at the head of the stair. The moat is stone-faced and in good preservation, the water being supplied by a small stream.

Immediately adjoining the filled-in side of the moat are the remains of an outbuilding with oven and circular chimney on square base, probably an addition, when about the end of the 17th century an inn called the "Castle Inn" occupied the enclosure. Over the entrance to this ruined dwelling is a stone bearing a human face in high relief. This is known locally as the Gerald stone (Gerald de Barri Giraldus Cambrensis, vicar of Angle c. AD 1200). The stone is probably the terminal of a hood-moulding from an earlier house on the site.

In the adjoining field is a fine columbarium, with domed roof and several rows of nest holes. Visited, 8th June, 1922.

East Block-house:

On the cliff overlooking Rat Island, about three-quarters of a mile west North Studdock farm-house, are the poor ruins of a Block House which, according to George Owen, was erected temp. Henry VIII.* The term East distinguish it from a somewhat similar building (now destroyed) which was known as the West Block House, in Dale parish. It is described in the Pem. Arch. Survey (p. 88) "24 feet from north to south by 13 feet from east to west. It was divided into two unequal chambers, each lighted by two windows looking east and west. The walls seem originally to have been about 15 feet high, but much has fallen, some recently. There seems to have been an enclosure on the north side, and a second building little distance off to the south-east, which was 22 feet by 9." Since this report the remains have deteriorated considerably. - Visited 8th June 1922

Ruined Almshouse:

To the immediate south of houses in the village of Angle, are the remains of a building marked "Castle" on the 6 in. Ordnance survey sheet. Of this once massive structure all now standing are three sides of a square walled enclosure heavily overgrown with ivy. It seems but little changed since the year 1868, when it was described and illustrated in Archaeologia Cambrensis (III, xiv, 76). It appears to have been a building, 90 feet by 13 feet, of two storeys in height. The west side, containing the entrance, has disappeared. The upper floor was lighted by two or three large windows; a fireplace and a cupboard with stone shelf by it side can also be traced. In the absence of clear indications the building may be put down as of late 15th or early 16th century date. Visited, 8th June, 1992

NOTE. The building goes by various names. Fenton (Tour, 402) quotes a letter from Canon Lewis of St. David's to Browne Willis, dated 12th January, 1719: "There is at Angle yet standing entire, an old square building said to have been a nunnery." Of a nunnery at Angle, however history is silent, nor do the remains point to such an establishment. "The Old Rectory" is another name locally used, in common with that given to the building on the north of the church. Whatever its original purpose, there can be little doubt that it is the building thus alluded to in the MS. Diocese Book of 1715, preserved in the Diocesan Registry, Carmarthen - "There is . . . a ruined almshouse at Angle and £30 left by the will of Griffith Dawes, Esq. of Barneston [Bangeston] near 40 years since, but no part thereof is yet paid by his administrators towards the repair thereof."

Angle The Parish Church Ded.: St. Mary.

The church consists of nave (50 feet by 20 feet), chancel (30 feet by 14 feet), north transept (192 feet by 13 feet), west tower (19 feet by 16 feet) and a modern south porch. The tower opens to the nave by a pointed arch, it is of three storeys with a pointed barrel vault to the lowest and a domed roof to the belfry, the stones being further covered with tiles, a not uncommon feature of the church towers of South Pembrokeshire. The apex of this tiled dome is on a level with battlements, which, with the usual corbel table, crown the tower. In the south-west angle is a projecting turret with seventy-six stairs. A doorway to the west is blocked; above it is a modern window. The belfry has two square-headed lights. The font of the Norman cushion type, has been scraped and coloured. The nave north wall and the north transept are probably 13C, and the font is Norman. The 15C tower has a vaulted lowest stage and a dome roofed belfry. The nave south wall, the porch, chancel, and north chapel are all Victorian.

The Church was heavily restored in 1853 by R. K. Penson but no actual account of the work done could be found.

This benefice was formerly a rectory as well as a vicarage. The rectory was vested in the Priory of Pembroke, which was a cell to the Benedictine Abbey of St. Martin at Seyes in Normandy. In consequence of this, Pembroke Priory, during the wars between England and France, was constantly being seized by the King of England. Prior to 1461 the priory was taken into the king's hands, who granted it on 22 Dec., 1461, to the Abbey of St. Albans. Pat. Rolls.

The church of Angle was assessed in 1291 at £8, the tenths payable to the King being 16s. - Taxatio. There is a ruined chapel in which no divine service is performed, called St. Mary's, within half a mile of the parish church; a ruined almshouse and £30 left by the will of Griffith Dawes Esq. of Barneston [Bangeston] near 40 years since, but no part thereof is yet paid by his administrators towards the repair thereof. Diocese Book for 1715. The site of this chapel is at Chapel Bay.

On 10 Sept., 1853, the parish schoolroom of Angle was licensed for divine service during the restoration of the church.

On 5 Aug. 1886, the vicarage of Angle was merged in the rectory by an Order in Council, whereby the sinecure Rectory was suppressed as from 10 April, 1885.

Browne Willis in his list of churches (see Paroc Wall.) mentions a chantry dedicated to St. George as being dependent on Angle Church. This chantry is very probably the neat little building, described by Fenton as being in the north east corner of the cemetery at Angle, and built over a vault.

1851 Census of Religious Buildings

Rev. Thomas Dalton (who was also vicar of Warren and Castlemartin) records that :-

Average congregations: (12 months): morn. 100 to 160 + 42 to 45 scholars; aft. 100 to 160 + 42 to 45 scholars.

Remarks: The Parish of Angle comprises a Sinecure Rectory with a Good Glebe House & Garden, with three fourths of the tithes (Agricultural) leaving the Resident Vicar or Incumbent one fourth with 3 acres of Glebe. No habitable House of Residence without paying a high rent to the Proprietor and the performance of the whole duties of the Parish. The Population consists chiefly of Fishermen with their families including farm labourer's families employed by the Farmers in the neighbourhood or otherwise: Thomas Dalton. Vicar.

Sinecure rectory and discharged vicarage; rectory rated at £10.. 10, of net annual value of £157 with glebe of 20 acres and a glebe-house; vicarage rated at £3 19s 2d, endowed with £600 royal bounty, of gross annual value of £80: patron, Bishop of St. David's: one fourth of the tithes appropriated to the vicarage, and the remainder to the rectory.

1 service in English.

Incumbent: legally not resident.

Non Conformist

There are no non-conformist chapels; but according to the 1851 census of Religious buildings Thomas Harris of Milford states

I am a Baptist Home Missionary having not, as yet any chapel erected, therefore do preach in a cottage and in the open air. We have no Sabbath School for the want of a place to keep it in. I preach in Castlemartin hundred in ten or eleven different places week nights included - the average congregation: mornings 40 - 50, evenings 50 - 70.

Chapel:

In the burial ground north of the church is a small detached chapel (15 feet by 12 feet), beneath which is a chamber, probably an ossuary; both have plain vaults. The chapel, a little fisherman's chapel built in 1447 is entered by a western doorway with a plain pointed arch, and approached by steps, has at the east end a square-headed window of two trefoiled lights, and on the south a similar light. The stone altar is said (Arch. Camb., 1880, IV, xi, 842) to have come from St. Twinnell's church. In the south wall is a plain piscine. At the west end of the north wall is an empty tomb recession the floor opposite to it is a much-worn full length uninscribed effigy of an ecclesiastic, probably the one noted by Fenton (Tour, 401) as being then "in the churchyard almost covered with the shard". The undercroft has a plain vault entered from the east end by a pointed doorway, and is lighted by two small quatrefoils on the north and south sides.

On the south side of the churchyard is a plain cross standing upon a calvary of three steps; it has been restored.

Angle: St Mary Parish of Castlemartin

"The Church has small fisherman's chapel above a crypt and with small stained glass window showing Christ walking on the waters."

"Standing in the Corner of Angle churchyard there is a little chapel 15 x12, now known as "the Fisherman's Chapel". Dedicated originally to St. Anthony it replaced s a small single chamber over a vault built in 1447 by Edward de Shirburn. A tomb recess lies empty on one side, and a priest's effigy on the other. It was built by the Shirburn family as a chantry [a chapel where mass could be said for the departed]. Its vaulted undercroft was intended as an ossuary [a repository for bones].

[A similar chapel stands in the churchyard at Carew, and there are traces of others in the area. They make an interesting link with Northern Brittany s Parish Closes].

Chapel of St George the Martyr

By the 16th century the chapel at Angle was known as the Chapel of St. George the Martyr. A will of about 1500 transfers endowments which had belonged to the Chapel of St Anthony, then recently washed away from the shore of West Angle Bay, to this Chapel (seats 14).

St Mary's Chapel and Well:

On the northern shore of the parish, at a point about half a mile north of the village of Angle, are sites called on the Ordnance sheets Chapel and Chapel Well, where stood a ruined chapel in which no divine service is performed, called St. Mary's within half a mile of the parish church" (MS. Diocesan Book 1715). No trace of the building remains. It stood within a small circular enclosure formed by a bank which at the beginning of this century was about 2 feet high (Pem. Arch. Survey). This is now barely distinguishable, nor are there any signs of burials. The well has been covered and a pump introduced. It would appear that there was a road or track to this site as there are records dated 1595 and 1596 referring to St Mary s well road.

St. Anthony's Chapel West Angle Bay:

On the shore of West Angle Bay about one mile west of Angle village is site called in the Tithe Schedule (No. 14) Old Church. This would appear to have been destroyed before the year 1500. In a field on the West side of Pill Bay can still be traced the site of a Church. The field is called Church Meadow and coffins and bones were said to have been found there. In 1997 parts of a skeleton were revealed by a landslip and two boys were found to be using a skull as a football on the beach. Remains were removed to a museum.

Ellen's Well:

This is marked on the Ordnance sheet as being on the cliffs half a mile east of Chapel Bay It could not be traced, nor any information obtained about it.

Globe Hotel:

is first mentioned in records in 1871 when it was kept by George and Maria Griffiths. The present Georgian style Globe Hotel was converted from two houses in 1904 used as a military convalescent hospital in WW1 and in WW2 military personnel were billeted there.

Historic Events and Records.

1170 April Henry II sailed from "The Nangle" on his expedition against Ireland with "Strongbow" 3 Ships [some date it Oct. 18 1172]

Gilbert de Angulo joined in the Pembrokeshire conquest of Ireland under Henry II., and was granted lands in Meath (hence the Nangles of West Meath to this day); he lost them by rebellion, was pardoned in 1307, and granted lands in Connaught, where his descendants took the name of MacHostilo, now Costello.

1171. "Among the Norman French Knights of Pembrokeshire who took part in the descent upon Ireland was a Nangle or Angul. The family established itself near Navan in the county of Meath and founded a church at a place called Cannistown or Canonstown. One branch of these Irish "Angles" became known as "Costellos". (Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments County of Pembroke).

1173 - 6. Gilbert and Jocelyn of Angle rewarded for their service in Ireland with estates in Meath, Ireland Gilbert with what later became known as the Barony of Morgallion, Jocelyn with Ardhronan and Naven.

1174 - 1175 not dated. Gir. Camb, De Rebus (R.S.), Vol. 1 p24.

Gerald de Barri, seeing that almost throughout the diocese of St. David's. and especially in the region of Demetia and Keretia, by the lack of care of the prelates, neither tithes of wool nor cheese were given, went to Canterbury to which at that time, the church of St. David's., like the whole of Wales, was subject to provincial law, and showed these defaults to Archbishop Richard, then primate of all England and legate, who sent him back to Wales as his legate, to amend these irregularities and others, which he should find there. The archbishop in his letters warned and enjoined all for the remission of sins, that those who had not formerly given these tithes, should give them. To those who were willing to give at his monition, he relaxed a third part of the penance enjoined, but the obstinate and those who refused to give, he ordered should be coerced strictly by ecclesiastical censure. All the Welsh forthwith obeyed these monitions and agreed to give those tithes, as did all others in the whole country, except the Flemings of Ros, and their accomplices, who would have been put under interdict for a long period, had not the sentence imposed been relaxed by the archbishop at the instance of Henry II to whom they went.

William Karquit, sheriff of the province (provincia) ordered his officers and apparitors to take eight yoke of oxen belonging to the priory of Penbroc, where Gerald de Barri was fulfilling his legation, and drive them to the castle. When required for the third time to restore the same, he utterly refused and even promised worse, Gerald sent word to him that unless he restored the oxen he would be placed immediately under sentence of excommunication, to which he replied that he would not dare to excommunicate the king's constable in his own castle. Gerald replied that when the sheriff heard all the bells of the whole monastery rung at triple intervals then he would know without doubt that he was being excommunicated.

Immediately the messengers had returned, by authority of his legation, with candles lit, he solemnly gave the sentence of excommunication on him, in the presence of the monks of that place, and many of the clergy of the country, and likewise caused all the bells to be sounded together, as was customary, to confirm the sentence or rather to announce the fact. On the morrow, the robber came to the castle of Lanwadein, before David, the diocesan bishop, and Gerald and his colleague, Master Michael, whom the archbishop had attached to him, who had gone there, restitution having been made and satisfaction given, when he was beaten with rods, he was to be absolved.

1175 - 6 not dated. The inhabitants of the cantref of Dugledu and those of Angle were recalled under the sentence of interdict. The latter, though dwelling in the province (provincia) of Penbroc, were Flemings, and like those of Ros and Dugledu had spent money to obtain the immunity, which they likewise wished to enjoy.

1175 - 6 not dated. The parishioners of Angle, which was a church of Gerald, archdeacon of Brecon, and which was under interdict, and its parishioners excommunicated on account of their rebellion, sought the grace of absolution, with the leave and blessing of David the bishop of St David, with whom he was staying at Kerreu, Gerald set out to grant it.
(Ger. Camb. De Rebus (R.S) Vol. 1 p29).

1215. Irish grants to a Walter and Phillip de Angulo the grant to the latter being confirmed in 1232.

1247. Richard de Angulo held of the earl a knight s fee at Angle;

1278. Stephen, and Philip de Angulo granted various lands and demesnes in and about Angle, together with wreck of the sea, to Robert de Shirburn, with remainder in default of male issue to his daughter Joan, wife of Robert de Castro. The Golden Grove book (page 336) gives Philip de Angulo as marrying daughter and heir of Stephen de Angulo, and their daughter Isabel as marrying Robert Shirburn, the son of John Shirburn.

John de Shirburn was Sheriff of Pembrokeshire. He possibly came here with Earl William de Valance, as the home of the Shirburns was in Lancashire. Robert, his son, was Sheriff in 1298, as we see in Philip de Angulo's Charter; the next was Walter, who was a Juror at Pembroke in 1327 and 1331; after him came his son Nicholas, who received in 1340 from Lawrence Hastings, then Earl of Pembroke, a general pardon for offences committed, probably during the Earl s long minority. Nicholas died in 1350 (his wife s name was Margaret). His son John was a Juror at Pembroke in 1357, and did service to Sir William de Carew; he died in 1362, leaving a daughter, Alice, ten years old.

1290 6th November. John de Scyreibur who witnessed the confirmation of a Charter by which Fishguard was given to the monks of St. Dogmaels - had a son Robert who was Sheriff of Pembroke in 1298.

1298. This was the same Philip who granted that other charter to William de Rupe or Roch, which was found by Dr. Scott in the British Museum, and of which the following is a translation:-

British Museum Stone Charter, XXXII. 14.

Know all, present and future, that I, Philip de Angulo, has given, granted, and by this my present Charter confirmed to William de Rupe (Roch) all my land which I have in the tenement of Angle, with appurtenances, together with the dowry of my mother, Isabel, when it shall occur, and a certain Island called Sepinilond (Sheep Island) and all my rents of Angle, as well of a windmill as of all my men, with suit of Court and services of the same, without any retention there-from to me or my heirs.

To have and to hold the aforesaid land, with the aforesaid rents, which is aforesaid, with the appurtenances, to the said William and his heirs or assigns from the lord in chief of the fee according to measurement, and as it is assigned to the said William by ancient fixed bounds and limits, freely, quietly, in peace, hereditary, for ever; in meadows, marshes, ways, paths, waters, pastures, turbaries, commons, wreck, in all easements, save only in forinsic (foreign) service in all things the lord in chief of the fee as is due there-from and customary.

But I, the aforesaid Philip, and my heirs and assigns, bind ourselves to warrant and acquit and defend forever against all men, the aforesaid land and appurtenances, together with the aforesaid rents, to the said William and his heirs and assigns. And that this my gift and grant, and confirmation of my present Charter, may remain ratified and established in the future, I have strengthened this present deed with the impression of my seal.

John de Castro and many others, given at Angle on the Feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin in the year of Our Lord, 1298.

In 1314 to 1375 we find Philip de Angulo and his son John holding a fee nominally of the Earl (it appears to have remained in their family notwithstanding the charter to William de Rupe in 1298), but the domain seems then to have passed to the Shirburns, who held it for two centuries; their dwelling, or castle, as also of the de Angulos, was that of which a small part still stands at the head of Angle creek, behind the church, and is still called Angle Castle.

A square tower, showing three storeys, with windows and fireplaces, is all that now remains, but at a short distance there stands an old Norman Columbarium, or Pigeon-house, still in a wonderful state of preservation. This was supposed to indicate the dwelling of a Baron in Norman times, as none of less rank might keep pigeons. In Owen's time, Angle Bay ran out shoal, as it does now, saving neere the towne, where is good landing at all tymes of the tyde; we therefore can conclude that the de Angulos and Shirburns were able to bring their ships right up to their castle walls.

John Cradock of Newton was a Juror in 1327. Another John held lands in Castlemartin in 1347; he died in 1350, the same year as Nicholas de Shirburn, and Roger (Fenton says Robert), his son, then aged seventeen, married Margery de Shirburn, Nicholas's daughter, the day after her father's death.

On the death of her brother John in 1362, leaving only Alice, aged ten, Margery may have inherited Angle; Fenton calls her a daughter and co-heiress (with John). Roger, or Robert Cradock, is buried at Angle, which makes it appear probable. He was called Lord of Newton in Roos (Roose, in Llanstadwell parish), his descendant, Sir Richard Cradock, married a daughter of Sir Thomas Perrott, and the heiress of Jestynton, and changed his name to Newton; he died in 1444, and is buried at Bristol; he was Lord Chief Justice of England. The family of Cradock, or Caradog, was descended from Prince Jestyn ap Owain ap Hywel Dda, who built Jestynton.

Robert de Vale, Lord of Dale, had property in Angle, for in an old deed he grants lands In Angulo to Stephen the son of Alexander de Angulo; and de Shirburn may have succeeded to the property by marrying a daughter of Stephen.

1566. According to the report of the Commission to suppress Piracy

Angle is mentioned as one of the two biggest villages in the Haven - Could there have been a good reason why this attention was drawn to the Village.

1595. George Owen writes in a MS. giving the course of the strata of coal and lime in Pembrokeshire:

The second vayne of lymestone, and cheefest of the two, beginneth at the south of Milford haven, west of the Nangle, at a place called West Pill, where the one side of the Pill you shall perceive the lymestone, and the other a red stone; which kulde of redde stone --accompanieth the veine of lymestone almost throweout, as it were a cognisance of the lymestone being hott and fine, and therefore the redde stone is in coller and substance like a stone burned with fire. This vayne . . . passeth estward. . . to Pater Church, Lanion, Lanfey, and to Williamstone by Carewe; and soe estward to St. Florens, and to the norther side of the towne of Tenby, where between it and the Windmills it also goeth to the sea, and . . . there it taketh water, and passing under the sea . . . sheweth itselfe right east of Tenby in the cliffes of Llanridean in Gower . . . about twenty miles from Tenby, all under salt water.

1603. George Owen, writing of the islands round the coast of Pembrokeshire, says:

Sheepe Iland,

being neere the East side of Mylford at the entrance without the Blocke House, which is but a small temper because as I guesse, sheepe have onely accesse thereunto; for at lowe water it is drye, and therefore scarce deserveth the name an Isand and hath nothinge in yt worth the notinge. Further within the mouth of the havon on the same side, is the land called Ratt Iland, but of the inhabitants more comonlie called Thorne Iland; this is a prettie Iland but verie little, full of deepe Grasse, a muskett shotte from the mayne; this and the last before ys the land of Water Rees Esquire.

Owen mentions Sheep Island elsewhere as Shippe, and that it is only accessible on foot after half ebb, and speaks of the remains of a tower, built on the narrow neck of land approaching the island, which served the country folk and their cattle as a refuge from the raids of the Welsh. This tower has now disappeared, but Fenton says it was standing in Elizabeth s time, and that it was the Norman settlers who used it; but the earthworks, which are still visible, point to Danish origin: probably the tower was added to these.

There are also earthworks traceable above West Pickard Bay three-quarters of a mile to the east of Sheep Island.

Speaking of notices to quit, George Owen says: Henry Owen in a note says: The farmer then was the old tenant at Midsummer to remove out of the old hall house."

Henry Owen in a note says: The farmers houses as distinguished from the cottages, so used also in Galloway the chief house in the manor, was in many parts of England called the Hall House. In his list or Pembrokeshire Manors, George Owen gives in Castle Martyn Hundred, Nangle, Hall place in Nangle, thus showing that there were two separate manors.

In his notes Henry Owen says: "In Lansdowne MS. Sir John Perrott is said to have held the moiety of a manor, there styled that of "Nangle alias Halecorte" (does this mean the manor of Hall only not of Nangle?), and also lands of Studdock, in that parish Sir John Perrott also held land at Pennar, Wallaston, Lanbeath, East and West Popton Redhill, Shutlake, Moreston, the mill at Pemboke Ferry, Benton, also Linney and Frains Lake.

In another list of the Manors in Elizabeth's reign George Owen gives:

Castell Martyn Sr. Edward Herbert of Powis. (d 1594)

Nangle Walter Rees, curia bidem.

Halle Place in Nangle Perott.

Stacpoole Stanley.

Estington Perott.

Henllan Whyte.

It is curious that in so small a place there should be two manors, but such was evidently the case, and to this day the Squire's residence is always alluded to by the villagers as Hall, not the Hall.

In Anno 19 of Henry VIII., the Collectors of the Tallage were diverse gentlemen and gentlewomen of the best accompt who owned lands in these Vynyes or Lord-ships; those for Nangle were:

Thomas Perrott, armiger.
Elizabeth Tankard, vidua

1613. Lewis Dwnn in his Visitation mentions that in 1613 John Devereux, son of Patrick Devereux, gent., of Ireland, married Margaret, daughter of John Harries, of Hall, Nangle, and that Owen Margan, B.A., was then its Rector. Patrick and Margaret Devereux had a son, John, and a daughter, Elizabeth, who married William Bangwm (Beneger?) of Castell Martyn

Lewis Dwnn also speaks of William Kiner (rather Keener), eldest brother of John Kiner, alderman of Harffort, marrying
Jowan Kembl off Angel. Their son William Kiner of the Hawl off Angel married Richard Rawd (probable Rowe) off Keel Martyn

Fenton in his Tour in 1811 also speaks of Hall as belonging till of late years to a family called Kinnar. (The field behind the house still bears the name of Kenner s Meadow). Among the twenty-four Common Councilmen, from whom the first Mayor of Haverfordwest (John Howell) was elected, occurs the name of John Kynner.

Fenton mentions a tradition that three sisters, co-heiresses, built each a house in Nangle; one the Castle, one Hall, and one a building now called the Nunnery, probably also used at some time as such; but he gives no date, and there is no evidence that I can find in any other record to confirm the statement.

1633. According to Cawdor MS 26/1000 the open fields to the South and West of Angle had not been enclosed.

1786. John Campbell of Stackpole purchased the Bangeston estate.

1794 circa. [St. Petrox] extract from a Letter from Cha[rle]s Pigott Pritchett, rural dean of Pembroke, to William Stuart Bishop of St. David's

"The state of the churches in my district is now become so decent and in tolerable order that it is unnecessary for me to trouble your lordship with particulars. I wish I had as good an account to give of many of the vicarage houses. That of Nangle stands in most deplorable condition".

1795 December 8. Holyland. Adams to John Campbell Esq.

I thank you for your kind letter which I received yesterday and perfectly agree with you in opinion relative to the exportation of corn, the supplying the markets, and also that no language should be held to irritate mob, but unhappily great cause was given for alarm by Roch of Paskeston and Hervey of Angle buying up wheat to export. The report from the magistrates to the Duke of Portland s letter was that wheat is the shortest crop and that there is certainly not enough in the country for its consumption. If then the middling class are sufferers, will they not complain, and their complaints go a great way to irritate the lower orders of people who have most intercourse with them?

The farmers had withheld from supplying the market for a fortnight to enhance the price (then too great), and notwithstanding every argument of policy and interest to them they would not be prevailed on until the people became tumultuous. Now they are justly alarmed, as are the corn factors. The farmers have promised a constant supply to the markets and the factors will not export. So far good is come from evil. You seem to think that party jealousies were the cause, but I do assure you I never saw all ranks, parties and classes of people so irritated (farmers and factors excepted) and all joining in the same language. The heat is now, thank God, allayed, and I trust no cause will be given to revive it, for then no one can pronounce what consequences will ensue. Your name has been glanced at as acting in contradiction to the spirit of resolutions you brought forward at the quarter sessions by letting Bangeston to Harvey. I told Mr. Mirehouse of it, and afterwards when it was reported he was concerned with Harvey I desired Mr Hand to tell him of it that he might justify himself: enclosed is his letter to me and my answer.

Since Harvey has declared Mirehouse is not concerned, but you'll see by M's letter to me there was a plan which he says you were unacquainted with. I mention this as I am zealous for your honour and think I should not act right by you in not acquainting you with it. The Fencibles with Captain Ackland and the Yeomanry paraded on Saturday last and will again next market day, so that I hope all will be quiet. But I repeat it depends on supplying the markets and no exportation. I hope Lady Caroline and the boys were well when you heard.

Miss Adams joins me in every good wish for you all.

Endorsed: Pray present my best respects to Mr. Greville when you see him.

1805. John Mirehouse bought property of Angle from Lord Cawdor

1810. There is a record of a Sailing ship being built at Angle, the only one which appears on the registers of the ports of Milford or Pembroke. It would have appeared to have been a vessel of 29 tons.

1823 22nd March. John Mirehouse died and was buried in Angle Church. He was a great agriculturist and improved the output of the land in the area considerably - see Edward Law.

1894 January. Loch Sheil a ship with a cargo of whisky went down off Thorn Island, much was alleged to have been smuggled ashore by Angle residents. According to Mason writing in 1905: "On the night of the 30th January, 1894, a large merchant ship named the "Loch Shiel" laden chiefly with cases of Scotch whisky for Australia, on making the Haven for shelter, ran aground on the rocks at the back of Thorn Island, practically the northern boundary of West Angle Bay. On this occasion Mr. Mirehouse, of Angle, and the crew of the lifeboat, did some brave work in rescuing the crew of the unfortunate ship, which ultimately became a total wreck. The cargo and wreckage floated about the harbour for weeks after, the Salvage of which did not all find its way to the Receiver of Wrecks. Perhaps the following sidelights will demonstrate:-

Some Cottages not very far from the scene underwent rapid internal alterations smooth walls freshly papered where cupboards appeared before. On an occasion of a villager's marriage at Dale, which took place shortly after the wreck, a yacht laden with a visiting party from Pembroke Dock, fired a salute from two cannon on board. Which, by the way, disturbed all the crows in the surrounding woods - not a few - which, if not very musical, added fresh interest to the event of the happy couple and procession returning from the church. The visitors from the yacht were duly invited to partake of supper on shore, and on sitting down to a well-provided table, each yachtsman faced a bottle of whisky - manufactured on the premises, no doubt. However, it tasted Scotch; and contributed to the making of much joy during the evening, finally rendering beds and blankets superfluous articles to the yachting guests that night.

1904 Col. B. W. B. Mirehouse was local landlord. Angle Estate had belonged to the Mirehouse family since John Mirehouse, a Cambridge agricultural student came from Cumberland to farm at Brownslade. He was a schoolfellow and friend of Byron.

Angle, The Hall of.

Fenton recorded a local legend that three co-heiresses decided each to build a residence at Angle: one built a castle, the other a very handsome building in the village, and the third built a mansion a little way out of the village, to the south-east called the Hall which appears in its day to have been very respectable and belonged till of late years to a family of the name of Kinner, a name that still exists in the village. The Kinners were engaged in trade and farming at Angle and Haverfordwest, and intermarried with families like the Voyles, and Walter of Roch.

In 1587 Sir John Perrot was lord of the manor of Hall place in Nangle.

The herald, Dwnn, in 1613 recorded the pedigree of William Kiner off the Hawl off Angel The family continued at the hall for nearly two more centuries; John Kinner was assessed at four hearths in the Hall in 1670; and William Kinner was mayor of Pembroke in 1703. The house is described in 1739 as The Hall alias Court House in Angle. In 1786 William Kinner was owner-occupier of Hall lands while John Hook Campbell owned a part of the same lands. Early in the 19th century the Hall was purchased by John Mirehouse of Brownslades and became the main seat of that family.

Notably an improving landlord and an enterprising farmer, the new owner was also a JP, and in 1810 High Sheriff. He improved the Hall as a residence which his descendants through the female line still occupy. The Tithe Schedule 1841 describes John Mirehouse as owner of Hall Manor, with George Thomas as farming tenant there, one of the fields being known as Kiners meadow. The estate eventually passed to R B Levett who had married a Mirehouse daughter and their son R W B Levett took the surname Mirehouse in 1864. R. W. B. Mirehouse of the Hall was High Sheriff in 1886 and owning an estate of 3,450 acres.

Population

According to the Census 1831 1841. There was a decrease in population in Angle parish of 74 from 458 in 1831 to 388 in 1841. In 1841 there was 100 houses inhabited and 6 uninhabited. The population consisted of 160 males and 228 females. The decrease continued long term because the population in 1951 was recorded as 317.

ANGLE, or NANGLE, a parish in the hundred of CASTLEMARTIN, county of PEMBROKE, containing 458 inhabitants.

This parish is situated at the south-western extremity of the county, and in an angle of Milford haven, Wording excellent anchorage for small vessels; from which circumstance it probably has obtained its name. Limestone of very excellent quality is found here in abundance, which, being susceptible of a fine polish, is formed into mantelpieces, and a considerable portion of it is burnt for manure. The female inhabitants are employed in plating straw for bonnets, hassocks, and matting, and, during the season, the men are occupied in dredging for oysters. The living consists of a sinecure rectory and a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St. David's., the former rated in the king's books at £10 10. and in the patronage of the Crown; and the latter rated at £5 19s. 2d. endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of St. David s; two-thirds of the tithes are appropriated to the rectory, and one-third to the vicarage. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A school for the gratuitous instruction of about twenty-five poor girls is entirely supported by Mrs Mirehouse of Brownslade in the parish of Castlemartin.

Near the entrance of the haven are the remains of an ancient building, called the Block-House, of the origin or purpose of which there is no historical record: From its situation it appears to have been erected for the protection of the entrance, probably in the reign of Henry VIII., or Elizabeth; but, from the excellency of the masonry some tourists have ascribed to it a Roman origin. Near the church is a mansion called the Hall, the property of John Mirehouse, Esq., of Brownslade, to whom the whole parish belongs, and now in the occupation of a tenant. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £229. 16s.

PARISH OF ANGLE. - on the 26th of December I visited the above parish, which is served by the same clergyman as Warren. He resides at Angle. There is a small school in the village kept by a person who is also a baker and keeps one or two cows. The school had been broken up for the Christmas holidays, and would not be open for the next three weeks. The master receives annually from the sinecure Rector, the Reverend W. North, Professor of Latin Literature at St. David's College, Lampeter, £5 for educating eight poor children of the Parish; and an additional £5 from Mrs. Mirehouse, the lady of the principal resident proprietor of the parish for educating 10 others. The inhabitants of the village are chiefly fishermen. The labourers who live in the parish are very poor. Wages are 8d. per day with food, or 1s. on their own finding. Mr. Dalton informed me that there had not to his knowledge been any wrecking for the last four or five years. Wrecking was not confined to the labouring class, but extended also to the farmers, who would not scruple to take possession of any articles which might be thrown ashore. The schoolroom was open-roofed, rendered, and in good repair. It was part of a dwelling-house. The schoolmaster's mother lived in the other part. The proprietor of the parish is paid £3. 10s. per annum for the house. There was a garden belonging to it.

1935 Angle - a report of county school inspections singled this school out as being the worst in the county as far as vulnerability to disease and epidemic because of primitive hygiene facilities.

During the Second World War land was taken over for an airfield for coastal defence. Pembroke Dock was a large seaplane base with squadrons of Sunderlands as well as smaller seaplane.

One Sunderland had problems when its hull was damaged by wreckage when taking off after carrying out a rescue at sea. It was impossible for it to land on water as the hull would have been torn right open so it made a landing on the grass of Angle airfield.

NB when I was in the RAF. I told some aircrew about this and they would not believe me but there is a film taken at the time on YouTube.

Bangeston.

According to RCAM.

The mere "shell of a mansion" seen by Fenton (Tour, 404) has practically vanished, and in its grounds immediately to the north-east now stands a coast-guard station. The site of what was once the fish-pond is easily found. Visited, 8th June 1922.

The earliest record of the Benegers of Bangeston appears to be in 1172, when a branch of the family took part with Strongbow in the Irish Invasion. There is an Irish saying that anything very astounding beats Banagher. Could that have arisen from any feats performed by the Benegers? One Ralph Beneger of Bangeston rebuilt Pwllcrochan Church in 1342. It contains two inscriptions recording his name, and an effigy of him in his canonical habit, as Rector.

Griffith Dawes of Bangeston is the next owner of whom we hear, though how it became his does not appear, possibly by marriage with a Beneger heiress. He was the son of Henry Dawes, by Lettice, daughter of William Walters of Roch (her brother's daughter, the famous Lucy Walters, went to France and there met Charles II., by whom she became the mother of the ill-fated Duke of Monmouth). Henry Dawes was the son of Griffith Dawes, whose widow Joan, daughter of Richard Fletcher, married Henry White of Henllan, near Pwllcrochan (now a ruin), who was Sheriff in 1592. Griffith was the son of Nicholas Dawes, by Katherine Butler of Johnston. Griffith Dawes of Bangeston was Sheriff in 1665. His only daughter and heiress, Ann, married Griffith White, son of Henry White of Henllan, who was Sheriff in 1658. The Whites were a very old Tenby family, and acquired Henllan through Jestina Eynon, daughter and heiress of John Eynon of Henllan, who married John White. One Griffith White of Henllan, three times Sheriff, was buried in Rhoscrowther Church in 1589. Henry, or Harry Dawes, father of Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, appears, according to Lewis Dwnn, to have lived at Castlemartin. This fits in with the theory that Bangeston came into the family by Griffith's marriage; but it is also possible that Henry lived at Castlemartin during his father's lifetime, if his father was at Bangeston.

On June 16, 1686, Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, or, as it is put, of Banaston in the Parishe of Nangle, Esquire., Thomas Lort, of East moor, Manorbier, and Francis Dawes of Pembroke, gent., with Devereux Hammond, James Lloyd and Francis Smith of Tenbie, gents., as representatives of Alice Bowen of Gloucester spinster bought from Thomas Williams of St. Florence, for £290 10s., the land of Carswell (at St. Florence), then occupied by Richard Rowe, for the relief of the poor and aged of Tenbie. The farm, to this day, belongs half to the Trustees of the Tenby Charities, and half to the Rector and Churchwardens of St. Mary's, Tenby.

Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, as before stated, had an only daughter, Ann, who married Griffith, son of Henry White of Henllan. Griffith died before his father, leaving an only child, Elizabeth, who thus inherited Bangeston from her grandfather. Griffith Dawes of Bangeston died January 16, 1692, aged seventy, his monument, with a small marble coat of arms bearing the three Daws was one of three monuments which were rescued from destruction when the south transept of Angle Church became ruinous, and was pulled down. They were replaced a few years ago, pieced together as far as broken fragments would allow, in the north transept. One of the other two is a plain grey marble tablet to Mrs. Elizabeth Pritchard, sister of Mrs. Alice Dawes (probably Griffith's wife), who died January 17, 1725, aged eighty-six; the other, a handsome marble monument surmounted by a coat of arms, to Brigadier General Thomas Ferrers, the third husband of Elizabeth White, granddaughter of Griffith Dawes of Bangeston, who died October 26, 1722. Elizabeth White married four times. First, Thomas Lort, son of Sampson Lort of Eastmoor, Manorbier (Sampson Lort, John Lort of Prickeston, and Sir Roger Lort of Stackpole were brothers; sons of Henry Lort of Stackpole, Sheriff in 1619). Grandfather Dawes is said to have disapproved of the match, and to have hurried across the fields from Bangeston to Angle Church to stop the wedding; but Thomas (a sailor) and the wily Elizabeth had got a chaplain with a special licence at the boat-house at the foot of Bangeston Hill, and so outwitted the irate old gentleman, crossing the Haven afterwards in a boat.

Elizabeth's second husband was Richard, Viscount Bulkeley;

then came Brigadier General Thomas Ferrers, to whom she erected the marble monument, on which she describes him as her truly mourned and dearly beloved husband,

Lastly, she married John Hook, who was Sheriff in 1755, and who survived her. She left no children by any of her husbands, and John Hook therefore bequeathed Bangeston to his godson and namesake, John Hook Campbell, Lyon King at Arms; he was a grandson of Sir Alexander, who married Miss Lort of Stackpole, brother of Sir Plyse Campbell, and uncle of John, first Baron Cawdor; he died in 1795. His son Matthew married Ellstacia, daughter of Francis Basset, of Heanton Court Devon, and had a son, also Matthew (who married Anne, daughter of William Adams of Holyland, and died without issue), and three daughters, co-heiresses; of whom Eustacia married her cousin Sir George Campbell, G.C.B., brother of John, First Baron Cawdor; he died in 1821, leaving no issue.

Matthew Campbell appears to have got into money difficulties which obliged him to sell Bangeston; the valuable lead roof was stripped off, and everything removed that could be turned into money, and the bare walls soon assumed the look of ruin and decay.

This must have happened after 1789, as Richard Gough, in an Addendum to Camden, mentions Bangeston as then occupied, and Fenton in 1811 laments its ruined state and recalls its remembered hospitality, therefore the dismantling must have occurred some time between these two dates.

Fenton also mentions its Norman founder; if this is correct he must have founded an older house than the ruin we now see, whose long, unfortified façade, large oblong windows and general sumptuous style point to much later and less troubled times, when the fear of the enemy was not constantly before men's eyes. The walled enclosure immediately in front of the house, now overgrown with trees, and a carpet of daffodils in spring, called the Bowling Green. There is a large kitchen garden with magnificently high walls, an artificial pond in the wood adjoining, and traces of an old watermill; also an avenue of beeches, leading away to the westward, still recalls the glories of the old house.

Matthew Campbell was a great friend of Fenton's, and entertained him at his house in Pembroke on his Tour in 1811.

Bangeston, with Hall, Angle, and the bulk of the Angle property, was bought in 1805 by John Mirehouse, Esq., from Lord Cawdor, and remains in his family to the present day. Bangeston being a ruin, Hall became the dwelling house, but at the time of purchase the family resided (as Lord Cawdor's tenants) at Brownslade, and did not take up their residence at Hall until 1864.

Beneger of Benegerston -- Beneger. —

According to Owen

A family long resident in the county, who gave their name to Bangeston, formerly Benegerston. There are four Bangestons, namely, in Angle, St Mary's Pembroke, Stackpole and St. Issell's. The Benegers held, as co-parceners with Wogan and Robelyn, two fees of the Earl at Cosheston in 1246, 1324, and 1348.

Beneger John 1300 was seneschal of Pembroke in 1300, and in that office was a witness to the charter of Martin Philip the son of Martin Thomas, "

Beneger William had passed, by a fine, to Symon Richard a messuage and sixty acres of land at Aylwardston" (Alleston). We find many of the family jurors at Pembroke and Tenby in the 14th century.

Fenton states that "Beneger, of Benegerston, were men of great note in Pembrokeshire," and observes . " a branch was in the suite of Strongbow on the Irish expedition, who perhaps, might have laid the foundation of a family of that name in Ireland."

de Beneger Adam is mentioned by Giraldus Cambrensis.

Bosheston

I have very strong memories of the Rev Ball then Incumbent of the parish who showed us so much kindness when my Scout troop camped in his field. The weather was appalling but thanks to him and some of his parishioners the scouts had a great time.

Much of the information contained here I am indebted to him for.

A neat little village near the south coast of the Castlemartin Peninsula. The parish churchyard has a 14th century Cross bearing the head of Christ at the intersection. Nearby features of interest include the popular Bosherston Lily Ponds, St. Govan's Chapel, and the delightful Broad Haven (South) beach.

1938 approximately 1/4 of the parish was acquired by what is now the Ministry of Defence as part of the Castlemartin Range

Bosheston Topographical Dictionary 1839 Lewis

BOSHERSTON, a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Pembroke; containing 225 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the shore of the Bristol Channel, by which it is bounded on the south; and the rocks on this part of the coast are worn, by the repeated action of the sea, into caverns of considerable depth, and of singular and romantic appearance. Of these, Bosherston Meer, extending about a quarter of a mile from the sea, is the most remarkable: at the entrance it presents only a small opening on the surface of the ground, but gradually it expands into a spacious cavern of increasing depth, which has never yet been explored. Previously to the commencement of a storm, the confined air is much agitated, and the most terrific noises issue from the cleft, which are heard at a great distance: during the violence of the tempest immense columns of spray are occasionally thrown up. The Stack Rocks, on the coast, are frequented in summer by innumerable sea-birds of various tribes. By far the greater part of the land in the parish is enclosed and in a state of cultivation, but there is a considerable expanse of open downs.

The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £11. 6. 8d.; patron, Earl Cawdor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £110. 10., and there is a glebe of sixty-five acres, valued at £62. 10. per annum; also a glebe-house. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was handsomely ornamented by John Campbell, Esq., a member of the Cawdor family. The children in the parish have access to a day school in Stackpool-Elidur, supported by Earl Cawdor.

A little to the east of Bosherston Meer, and also within the parish, is the hermitage of St. Gawen, situated in a fissure of the rock apparently formed by some violent convulsion, about half-way in the cliff between the summit and the base, and only a short distance from high-water mark. A flight of steps, rudely cut in the rock, forms a descent to a "chapel," about twenty feet in length and twelve feet wide, with an altar formed of a coarse stone slab, harmonizing with the rude and simple character of the place. On one side a door, opening from the chapel, leads into a small cell, cut in the solid rock, and in form resembling the human body, which is said to have been the solitary retreat of St. Gawen. Beneath the hermitage is St. Gawen's well, held in great repute for the miraculous efficacy in the cure of diseases superstitiously ascribed to it. The scenery around this sequestered spot is of the wildest and most romantic character: large fragments of rock are scattered in confused heaps in every direction, and huge masses of rugged cliffs, threatening to detach themselves every moment from the higher precipices, which impend over the sea-worn base of the rock, give to the scene an appalling grandeur of effect. Gawen, from whom the promontory of St. Gawen's Head derives its name, though now popularly regarded as a saint and an anchorite, is said to have been a nephew of the renowned King Arthur, and one of the knights of his Round Table; and Hoole, in one of the notes attached to his translation of Orlando Furioso, asserts that on "a breach of the sea, near Milford Haven, is a natural rock, shaped into a chapel, which tradition reports to have been the burying-place of Sir Gawain, King Arthur's nephew."

The Parish Church Ded: St. Michael.

Church late 13c Probably built on the site of an earlier church.

This cruciform buildings known in 1488 as ' the church of Stackpole Boshier " consists of chancel 21 1/2 feet by 13 feet, nave (32 1/2 feet by 18 feet), north transept (12 feet by 9 feet), west tower (16 feet square), and south porch. In the latter half of the 19th The Church was restored in 1855 when the Norman windows where replaced by the present Gothic style and much other restoration was done, including a new chancel arch and roof In the south-east angle of the chancel are a plain double piscina and an aumbry; in the south-west angle is a squint. On either side of the chancel arch are two corbels which supported the rood beam. The transepts and nave are vaulted, both transepts opening to the nave with plain pointed arches. The tower is of three storeys, and finished with battlements above a corbel table; at its south-eastern corner is an unlighted vice of seventy-six stairs. A stone bench, which in the year 1850 ran round the tower, has been removed. The three floors are lighted by plain slits. The font has been scraped and altered; it was apparently of the square Norman type commonly found in the county. The Norman font has been lined with lead and provided with an oak lid.

1872 three light stained glass window by Clayton and Bell depicting life of Christ dedicated to rector for 41yrs- were erected

Two interesting female effigies are illustrated and fully described in Arch. Camb. (1909 VI, ix,345). They appear to be of 14th-century date. -one hidden by pews -- one of the Dowager Duchess of Buckingham, one of a crusader

The south transept has a squint and contains a crudely made figure, whilst the north transept contains an effigy of a veiled lady with a dog at her feet. Both transepts have 14c logical headed piscina and pointed tunnel-vaults like that of the probably slightly earlier nave. There are corbels for a rood beam across the chancel arch but the arch itself has been renewed. The west tower has a round arched vault.

The Church was extensively restored in 1855 along with the other Churches on his estate. by John Frederick Campbell, first Earl of Cawdor. the big local landowner at the time, then living at Stackpole Court Its old high backed pews have disappeared and its Norman windows have been replaced by those of later Gothic design. The Cawdor arms may be seen in the tiling of the Chancel and Sanctuary floor.

The East Window

This lovely window of nine lights. depicting the Annunciation. the Nativity. the Baptism. the Agony in the Garden. the Crucifixion the Burial . the Resurrection. the Ascension. and Pentecost. was erected in memory of the Revd William Allen. Rector 1831-1872. The Diary of William's wife Frances was discovered recently covering the period from 1832 to 1865 it furnishes a fascinating picture of country clergy life in South Pembrokeshire in the early 19th. century.

The transept Windows

These four lights are erected in memory of another incumbent of Bosherton the Ven, David Edward William's (1913-1920), who was Archdeacon of St. David's. (1900- 1920), and it is interesting to note the choice of lights, In the South Transept they depict St. Teilo, the Rector's favourite saint, and St. Govan, the local saint, surmounted by the Arms of Exeter College, Oxford, where the Rector was educated. The North Transept lights show St. Michael, the dedication of the Church, and St. David, the Diocesan patron saint, surmounted by the Arms of St. David and the Diocese of St. David's.

The Squint Window and the West Window

These were erected by a schoolmistress who taught for many years in the old Bosherton School (now the Church Hall). The Squint window depicts St. Nicholas as the patron saint of seafarers, and is in memory of Petty Officer George Evans, her husband, who was killed in the battle of Jutland. The West Window is a depiction of Jesus. The Resurrection and the Life, and was erected in memory of her father, James Walter Davies of Pembroke Dock.

Tombs Under the North Transept window there is what is thought to be the tomb of a Dowager Duchess of Buckingham, an antecedent of the Duke of Norfolk The fact that she was a widow maybe gathered from the veil and cloak shown on the figure carved on the tomb. That she was of noble birth can be seen by the coronet on her head and the dog at her feet. Under the South Transept window there is a stone tomb surmounted by a figure depicting a Crusader. It is thought to have been carved in the 14th. century

War Memorial

On the North wall of the Church there are brass tablets commemorating the men of the Parish who lost their lives in the First World War. and a coast guard killed on duty in the Second.

Other Memorials

On the Nave walls are two stone tablets placed in memory of local families. and near the organ there is a framed vellum inscription stating that when electricity was installed in the Church in 1958 each light was dedicated in memory,' of some local individual. The Church was rewired and new lighting installed in 1987

The Church was completely re-roofed in 1991- 1992.

Churchyard Cross.

This stands to the south of the church. From a base of three steps rises a plain octagonal shaft 56 inches in height. At the intersection of the arms is a much-weathered face of the Saviour in high relief (Arch. Camb.. 861, III, vii, 218, ill.). It is probably of 14th-century date.—Visited, 14th June, 1920.

Glynne, Notes (Arch. Camb., J888, V, v, 124).

The old Cross in the Churchyard is believed to be part of a stone crucifix destroyed during the Dissolution of the Monasteries, found by local people, it was then placed on a pillar probable to serve as a preaching cross. - face of Christ carved on west side.

The Preaching Cross

Outside the Church. erected on a two-tier throne there is an unusual Preaching Cross - unusual in that it has an unnaturally short upright, and that it has a face carved on the centre of the cross. It has been suggested that originally there was a full stone crucifix which was mutilated and partly destroyed, perhaps during the Reformation, and that local folk found the cross but being unable to find its stem, placed the cross on a simple upright of locally-hewn stone, and erected it to serve as a Preaching Cross.

St Govan's Head, Bosherton

St Govan's Head is on the south coast of the Castlemartin Peninsula, in the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park, 2km south-east of Bosherton. This part of the coastline is within the Royal Artillery Corps Castlemartin Range. It is a headland of vertical limestone cliffs. The peninsula is a flat plateau consisting of Carboniferous limestone rock, about 350 million years old. The plateau was formed by marine erosion when the sea level was much higher than today, then lifted up by movements of the Earth's crust about 50 million years ago.

1923 Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments St. Govan's Chapel and Well

At a distance of one mile and a quarter south of the parish church and concealed in a rocky gorge on the sea coast stands the small well-chapel of St Govan. The descent to it from Trevalen Downs is by a flight of fifty-two rude stone steps. The building is in a fairly good state of preservation. It consists of a single chamber 18 ft by 12 ft having a plain pointed vault covered externally with rude tiles. At the west end is a single empty bell-cote. The main entrance is to the north through a pointed doorway 60 inches high to the lintel and 30 inches broad. A second door in the north east angle six steps above the level of the interior gives access to a natural rock chamber of very small dimensions, whilst a third doorway in the south west angle leads to the well on the cliff a few yards below the chapel. At the east end of the main structure is a stone altar 72 in by 21 in by 3 in with a height of 33 in. having above it a simple slit for light. A stone masonry bench runs along the north and south sides with a return in the south east corner to the altar. To the left of the main entrance on the wall is a square stoup in the south wall is an aumbry and between it and south east angle is an opening 20 in by 12 in inside. Opposite to the main entrance is another light. In the west wall under the bell-cote is also a narrow slit ; below it the natural rock forms part of the walling.

The present floor is of clay, which may possibly cover one of rough stone slabs, its level is three steps below the exterior at the north doorway. beneath the stoup is a small spring of fresh waters which is said never to flow over the floor of the chapel. The building may be of 13th-century date.

The Well, which lies between the chapel and the sea, is protected by a plain hood of masonry; the entrance is to the north. 'The spring has been dry for some years past. Fenton (415) notes that in it 'crippled patients bathe their limbs, many of whom come from the remotest parts of the principality to seek relief here and leave their crutches behind, a votive offering on the altar, as I perceived placed there when I last paid a visit to this hermitage.'—Visited, 14th June, 1929.

White Well

About 250 yards north of the parish church is a well concerning which no traditions of sanctity or of healing appear to have survived.—Visited, 11th June, 1922.

Bosheston Mere

This is a very curious blow-hole on the cliffs near Stackpole, not far from St. Govan's Chapel, the quaint little hermitage nestling halfway down the great limestone cliffs and said to have been the final refuge of Sir Gawain, one of Arthur's Knights of the Round Table, who thus at the end of his life became Saint Gawain, or Govan. This blow-hole is connected underground with the sea-caves, and at certain states of wind and tide the sea, dashing into the caves and imprisoning the air, forces it up through the narrow passage and out through the blow-hole with a shrill and terrific sound, like a prolonged scream or whistle, the edges of the hole being polished like marble by the friction of small stones and earth, carried up by the rush of wind. The mere is said to 'play' when the sound is heard, but this happens now more seldom than formerly, though persons now living have heard it frequently possibly some fall of rock may have obstructed, or partially obstructed, the passage.

'Near Stackpole Boshier, otherwise Boshierston, upon the sea-side, is a pool or pit called-Boshierston-Mear; the depth whereof several that have sounded have not yet discovered. This pit bubbles and foams, and makes such a noise before stormy weather that it is heard above ten miles off. The banks are of no great circumference at the top, but broader downwards, and from the bottom there is a great breach towards the sea, which is about a furlong distant. But there is much more talked of this place than I shall trouble you with at present, because I take some relations of it for fabulous -- its noise is distinctly known from that of the sea, which also on these coasts often roars very loud.'

The opening of the blow-hole is round, and about of the size through which a man could with difficulty squeeze himself. The author has never heard the mere actually 'play' but has stood by when it gave an occasional deep, hollow groan; the Crush of wind through the hole was tremendous, and one seemed to hear it coming from a long way off before it actually rushed out, then for an interval all would be still then the groan again and then the wind

Buckspool

Now a farmhouse, half a mile south of the parish church. Fenton writes (1810) 'I pass Buck's Pool so called from a small piece of water close to the house ... formerly a residence of a branch of the respectable family of Adams ... It has now no remains of ancient grandeur or of any thing above the condition of a Castle Martin farm-house; all its importance if, as is probable, it possessed any, having left it with its ancient possessors when they migrated to a more desirable situation [Paterchurch] on the banks of Milford Haven.' The family of Adams had been in south Pembrokeshire since the 13th century and had lived at Buckspool until Henry VI (1422-3) when John Adams married Elen, daughter and heiress of David de Pater-church, and then moved to his wife's home near Pembroke Dock, where his descendants remained until early in the 18th century when they moved to Holyland near Pembroke.

Buckspool remained part of the estate and became a farmstead. By 1786 it had been sold to John Campbell, and became part of the Stackpole estate. Henry Dawkins was the tenant in 1786. Henry Hitchings in 1834, and George Hitchings in 1894.

STONE-AXE FOUND NEAR PEMBROKE.—This beautiful, finely ground and polished, stone-axe was found by Mr. William Jones, on the 4th October, 1929, in the earth at the entrance to a rabbits hole, in the east hedge 500 yards along the lane leading to Trevalen farm, from the junction of that lane and the road leading to St. Govan's, in the parish of Bosheston, 5 miles south of Pembroke.

The axe is 6 ins. in length and 3 ins. in width above the cutting edge. The maximum thickness is 1 1/2 ins. The cutting edge is crescent-shaped and in perfect condition. The butt-end, however, is not worked so perfectly. The stone is felsite, of a dull yellowish colour.

The axe is at present at Bosherston, in the possession of the finder.

Freyneslake Tumulus

This is a ruined sepulchral mound on Bosherston Burrows immediately south of North Hill In 1880 it was carefully trenched, and found to be constructed of stones and sand, and to cover a Kist containing two skeletons. One of the skulls, now in the Tenby Museum, was described by the late Professor Rolleston as " the beautifully typical brachycaphalic skull of a young female." With it were; pig. sheep or goat bones, white water-worn pebbles, and fragments of well-baked black ware (Laws, Little England, 29). The mound has a present height of 5 feet, and a base circumference of 140 feet.—RCAM Visited, 14th June, 1922.

Buckspool Down Fort

A well-preserved promontory fortress south of Buckspool Down. The defences consist of a rampart and a shallow ditch about 200 feet in length thrown across a neck of land which falls on either side by inaccessible cliffs to the sea. The rampart rises some 6 feet from the level and drops 8 feet to the ditch; though somewhat weathered it is in good preservation. The entrance is from the north-east.—Visited, 14th June, 1922.

Fishpond Camp

Fenton (tour, 419), referring to this camp states that " , in one of the ditches of which, by a labourer raising a hedge was dug up half a skeleton, the upper part with a sort of brazen ring on his breast, perhaps a rude broach."

This is doubtless the large earthwork, 400 feet long by 250 feet broad, known as the Fishpond. The defence to the east is by steep slopes, the fall to the west has been artificially sharpened, while the exposed front to the north has two ramparts, the inner much denuded, the outer about 80 yards beyond, with the remains of a ditch. The entrance was in the north angle. The enclosed area is level. and strewn with loose boulders. Lieut.-Colonel W.. Morgan, R.E., F. S.A., an ex-Commissioner, points out that ' ; from beings situate on the sea this earthwork is generally described as a cliff castle, but the amount of protection it derives from it is but small. For this reason it is a very unlikely situation for the natives to select as a refuge, and a most suitable one for invaders."—Visited, 14th June, 1922.

Bosherston Camp; Fishpond Camp

Bosherston Camp is a sub-rectangular inland promontory enclosure, crowning a ridge set between flooded inlets. The 'fish pond'; the enclosed area, about 108m by 98m, is defined by a triple bank system facing west towards the approach along the promontory ridge, the circuit resting on possibly enhanced natural scarp lines elsewhere; a shell-midden deposit within an angle of ditch produced what is thought to be an early Iron Age pin, whilst a small Romano-British ceramic assemblage is reported from the interior. Bosherston Windmill, Bosherston

To the south of Bosherston village, on the crest of a low summit at 41m above sea level, are the badly-ruined remains of what appears to be a windmill tower. The stone rubble-built tower is circular in plan, roughly 4m in diameter, with parallel sides, and stands about 5m high. The facing stonework has been removed from the lower 2m and about a third of the stone wall has been removed from the north side, leaving the structure in a parlous state. The tower is not shown on any Ordnance Survey mapping despite its size and prominent location.

Style; Styll; Styles, Bosherston

Early 18th century, altered, early East wing, 2 storey, rubble, recessed sashes, 6 panel entrance door, hewn beams, purlins, trusses.
RCAHMW, 1993.

Style is situated towards the northern end of Bosherston, on the north side of the minor road through the village, and immediately west of the churchyard. Style was the farmhouse of a tenancy of about 89.1 hectares under the Earl of Cawdor, tenanted by R Hitchings in 1782, and J Benyon in 1839. It is a house of two periods, facing south. The older part is the east unit, with originally opposed doorways and a very large chimney (possibly still older) standing out from the gable wall, the upper part of the stack being about 0.3 m away from the main gable. It is built of rubble masonry. It has two ovens, one at the rear, and one at the side of the hearth, with slate coverings to the ovens and chimney offsets. It has been called a 'Flemish' chimney and there were once a number of examples of these huge square chimneys in Pembrokeshire. There is also an ordinary end-chimney centrally at the apex of the same gable. The east side has altered windows as in the later house and a cobbled front yard. To this original house, after demolition of its west part, a double-fronted, three window range house, of the late 18th century, was added. It has a central panelled door with a canopy on brackets, and six-pane sash windows of small size, and recessed. The whole of the front is hung with small slates. Elsewhere the building has painted rubble masonry. It has a slate roof and an end chimney at the west end. There are some floor beams with plain stops to the chamfers. The central unit of the later house is occupied by stairs and a small rear cellar. At the rear, for the full length of the later house, a two-storey extension under a lean-to roof is present. The old part of the house probably took the place of a back-kitchen in relation to the new house. It has a low wall to the front garden in rubble masonry, with a mounting block at the left of the gate.

Trevallen;Trevalen;Trefalen, Bosherton

16th -17th century end chimney house, much modernised. Fine square Pembrokeshire chimney. RCAHMW, 1993.

Trevallen is situated just to the south of the minor road from Bosherton to Broadhaven carpark, about 1km south-east of the village. The farmhouse was one of the tenancies on the Stackpole Estate. It is believed to have been in the Lloyd family tenancy from mid-18th century until c.1870. The Thomas family were tenants until 1937, and Mr Davies until 1995. It has an 18th/19th century frontage, possibly to enhance an earlier structure. It is a two storey, three-window range house facing west, which is symmetrically doubled-fronted with a central (modern) door and restored six-pane sash windows. There is a small end-chimney at the north, with a single storey lean-to dairy with a barred and shuttered window. The house also has a large two-storey rear (east) wing under a roof at a lower level, containing the back kitchen and a large end-chimney. There are other lean-to rooms at the east of the main range and north of the rear wing, probably all of same period. At the south end of the main range is an exceptionally large kitchen, with several offsets, rising to a square stack. This chimney projects out about 2m and is about 4m wide. A side flue from a former boiler enters at one side. Around it an outhouse has been added in rubble masonry, which was evidently a brewhouse or wash-house, and the upper floor may have been sleeping accommodation for the farm servants, with a sheeted roof. It was listed as a well-designed farmhouse with two exceptionally large chimneys.

Thornston, Bosherton

Thornston is situated at the southern edge of Bosherton, on the east side of the minor road to St. Govan's Head. In the 1970s, when it was visited, it still took the form of an 18th century, 2 storey building, built of rubble with a south wing. It had recessed casements, glazing bars, a plain central entrance and has a modern porch on the north-west side. The main feature of the house was an extremely large, square chimney, of which there were once a number of examples in Pembrokeshire. Central to this was a very large oven extension, with a slate conical roof. Thornston appears to have been extensively modernised, as the 2000 OS Landline 1:2500 map indicates that the site plan is now a regular rectangle, as opposed to the irregular shape indicated by drawings of the building and the previous OS 25" to the mile maps of 1908 and previously.

Church Cottage, Bosherton

Church Cottage was on the eastern edge of Bosherton, on the west side of Windsor Road. It was a rubble stone built cottage of a T-shaped plan. It was single storey, with a pitched slate roof. There was a large chimney with an oven with a conical, slate roof on the northern end of the building, and another large chimney on the south-eastern end, with a hipped-slate roof. Internal dividing walls were timber framed with a rubble stone infill. The cottage was demolished in November 1984.

Dover, Bosherton

Dover cottage is situated at the southern end of Bosherton on the east side of the minor road towards Star Rock, just south of the T-junction minor roads. In the early 1970s, when it was visited, the main feature of the house was an extremely large, square lateral chimney, of which there were once a number of examples in Pembrokeshire. To the side of this was a very large rounded oven extension, with a slate roof. The building is of rubble stone, rendered and whitewashed. It is 1.5 storeys with a pitched slate roof and dormer windows in the roof space on the north-west elevation, plus a small lean-to extension. To the south-east elevation there is doorway with a small porch and three windows. There is also a secondary chimney, central to the building, of regular dimensions.

Ian Archer, RCAHMW, 24th March 2005

Crickmail, Bosherton

Crickmail was situated on Crickmail Down, on the Royal Artillery Corps Castlemartin Range, 1.3km west of Bosherton. It was an large open complex of farm buildings, with the main farmhouse possibly separated and slightly to the south. This was a 3 storey Georgian building. The farm complex dates from at least the first half of the nineteenth century, as it appears on the 1865 OS 1st edition 25' to the mile map. All of the buildings appear to have been destroyed after the Range was built in 1939. The 1948 6' to the mile map shows no trace of the buildings, and the 2000 OS Landline 1:2500 map also shows an empty field at this location.

Castlemartin

St Michaels Church, Castlemartin is now sadly closed

Castlemartin Notes

An earthwork and cluster of houses not far from the great bay of Freshwater West. The roundabout in the middle of the village was the old cattle pound one of only two left in Britain the five roads meeting at the pound the one leading in the direction of Linney Head bay is still called Bull Street; then, as now, it led from the Castell to Bluck's Pwll, under Linney Head. The south portion of the parish is now part of the Castlemartin Tank range and is not normally accessible.

There is evidence of Middle Stone age flint "factory".

Members of the family of de Castro Martini took part in the Irish Invasion under Henry II. and Strongbow, and some remained and settled there, founding families; in later times the daughter of an Irishman, Sir Nicholas de Castlemartin, married Sir Richard Wellesley, an ancestor of the Dukes of Wellington.

The church, down a lane to the north, has a battlemented tower, and used to have an organ that is alleged to have once belonged Mendelssohn.

On the eastern side of the churchyard is a ruined building called "The Old Rectory".

The parish gave its name to a famous breed of cattle, the long-horned Castlemartin Blacks. In 1874 they had their own herd book but are now merged with the Welsh Blacks.

Castlemartin was an exceedingly rich and valuable corn-growing district.

RCAM Brownslade Barrows.

A tract of sand burrows and sand-blown shorelands leading westward to Frainslake Sands and the sea. Here from time to time traces of prehistoric man have been found. The collection which was at Brownslade House comprised flint arrowheads, some with barbs. In the Tenby Museum are two small unfinished celts and a well-formed spindle-whorl of felsite fragments of chert have also been found, neither of these stones being native. In the cabinet of fossils and shells known as the Bryant and Wright collection, brought together in Pembrokeshire and West Wales in the latter part of the 19th cent., and now in the Carmarthenshire Antiq. Society's Museums is a fine specimen of a flint chisel labelled Brownslade concerning which Mr. Reginald A. Smith, F.S.A., has reported

"A Danish Chisel of the last stage of the Neolithic period, say 2000BC and of a common type in Scandinavia, but this is the first I have heard of from Britain".

Danish flints have occasionally been found near the east coast." There would seem to belittle doubt that the chisel was found at Brownslade, and is unquestionably authentic".

Linney Head.

This promontory camp is called by Fenton (Tour, 410) the Head of Man but that name is not recognized to-day. It is of the usual character: a strong earthed bank, having a fine outward sweep of about 500 feet in length, is cut across a wild and storm-swept peninsula. The entrance is in the centre of the bank, the ends being strengthened by a good stone facing, which has the original construction. The exterior ditch is much silted up. A zig zag path to the sea at the extreme end of the camp is in good preservation. On the further side of the tiny inlet west of the promontory are slight traces of a bank, probably intended to protect a landing party when the cliff path was not practicable.

Bulliber or Warman's Hill Camp.

This earthwork is placed about 300 yards south-west of Bulliber farm-house.

Continuous cultivation has largely obliterated what was clear in 1880, when the earthwork was reported upon as follows:-

Protected somewhat by a gully to the south, and gently sloping to the west, but the ground rises slightly to the east and north. The main rampart is mostly about 3 feet above the interior with a 7 feet fall. To the north-west is a terrace, 35 feet wide. Beyond this there are two further banks with a ditch between them. To the east, the most exposed-side, the defense is complicated; 62 feet in front of the first is a second rampart, the crest of which is 2 feet higher than the first, with a small intermediate bank, 150 feet long, between them, 4 feet lower than the first. And at the same distance in front is a third rampart 3 feet higher than the first, with a 9 foot terrace between it and the counter-scarp of the second ditch. Forty-two feet in front again is a fourth rampart 2 feet higher than the first, with a ditch in front. All the ditches are about the uniform level of 3 feet below the ground outside, except the main ditch, which is 5 feet. The southern side, owing to the protection of the gully, is only defended by the rampart and ditch of the inner enclosure. Round the western side up to the entrance there is the inner rampart, with two others in front, with a ditch between the two last, but no outer ditch. The entrance to the enclosure has been disturbed; its present width is about 20 feet. The dry weeks in May and June, 1922, revealed traces of an approach from the north.

Martine Castel

In the village of Castlemartin, in a field north of the meeting of five roads, is the earthwork noted by Leland as the "vestigia of Martine Castel." Though much disturbed and somewhat difficult to determine, there can be traced a circular bank, some 230 feet in diameter. It is best seen on the north, where it has a 12-feet fall to a ditch, now considerably effaced or occupied by buildings. The counterscarp of the ditch rises 4 feet to the level. The ditch is unusually wide, from 80 to 90 feet between the crest of the rampart and that of the counterscarp to the north, decreasing to 60 feet on the west. There can be little doubt that these are the remains of a mound castle where the mound has been completely removed, and the bailey has almost vanished.

King's Mill Earthwork

This has been a moated homestead of somewhat irregular shape, enclosing about an acre of ground, having the moat on three sides in fair condition and still fed from an adjacent stream. The sides measure 180 and 150 feet respectively the north arm of the moat has been filled in. The surrounding rampart has an average rise of 2 feet from the interior level and falls 8 to 10 feet to a ditch. The interior area bears no trace of buildings. Adjoining the site is the farmhouse and mill known as the

At the court farm is a stone 18 inches by 15 inches bearing the profile of a crowned head in high relief. It probably adorned the original King's Mill.

The Old Vicarage.

On rising ground in the churchyard are the fragmentary ruins of a small domestic building known as "the old vicarage," which was inhabited up to a few years ago. When seen by Professor Freeman in 1852 it consisted of "an imperfect system of four arches; disposed on trio arcades, on one side against the wall, on the other standing free. The arches are depressed and quite plain and at once call to mind those in the churches of St. Florence and Lawhaden. The arrangement allows of only one pier, which is a column with a shaft of almost classical character, having a decided diminution; but the abacus a square one, is of enormous thickness, with small heads attached at the four corners. From the pier a screen seems to have run across to the wall (Arch. Camb, II iii, 200). The heads on the capital can still be distinguished, and are similar to that on a corbel in the walls of the church chancel.

The Parish Church Ded. St Michael. 1922 RCAM

This interesting building consists of chancel (34 feet by 19 feet), nave (51 1/2 feet by 17 feet), north aisle (51 1/2 feet by 14 3/4 feet), south tower (14 feet by 11 feet) and south porch (13 feet by 11 feet)- It has undergone various changes at different dates. A chapel to the north of the chancel, a second chapel to the south, and a north transept have disappeared; while the Summit of the tower, which was originally gabled, has been altered to the flat roof with corbel table and battlements usual in the county (Arch. CambS, 1886, V, iii, 82, ill-)- A west porch opening to the nave was removed in the restoration about half a century ago. The north aisle has a squint to the chancel and an arcade of c1200 with four plain single stepped arches carried on octagonal piers with shafts to the north and south. Two similar blank arches appear in the chancel, which has a blocked south lancet, and it seems that a north chapel and transept have been removed. There was evidently once a south chapel reached by an arch, now blocked, in the east wall of the 13c transeptal south tower. The tower top is of Tudor date and was once gabled. The vaulted porch is surmounted by a saddle-back roofed belfry. The font is Norman.

Castlemartin Church Acc to Freeman 1851 Arch Camb.

The plan comprises a nave with north aisle, chancel, a tower on the south side of the nave (forming a transept in its lower stage, and a large south porch. There has also been an aisle of chapel on the north of the chancel and a north transept. The tower is tall and tapered but very strongly built, without string course but with battlements and corbel table. The west parapet is slightly gabled. The belfry windows on the north, east, and west are mere slits; that on the south a double lancet with central shaft. The west end presents two almost equal gables. There are lancet windows on the south side of the nave, and altogether much that bespeaks the First Pointed period.

The interior is striking and might, with careful restoration be made to have a very solemn effect. The arcade of the nave is curious, has four pointed arches with square piers chamfered, each having attached in front a shaft with rude capital. The nave and aisle are each wide and nearly equal in breadth. The tower ranges with the eastern bay of the arcade, opens to the nave by a rude arch of pointed form, and the lower part has the usual coarse vault, it has a lancet window, now filled with obituary glass. The roof of the nave is open, but very plain. There are some stone corbels in the wall over the tower arch. The arrangement of pews is awkward, though the arcade is left free. The Chancel arch is low and obuse; the chancel long, and from the unevenness of the ground has a considerable ascent towards the east. On its south side are seen two pointed arches in the wall, with a corbel at the point whence these spring, and an octagonal pillar with rude, overhanging capital, marking the former existence of an aisle. The east window, which has been restored, has three trefoil headed lancets contained under a flat arch, recently filled with stained glass representing SS. Peter, James and John. On the north-east and south-east are lancets, one closed; and on the south are three sedilia, each springing from rude corbels or capitals but without shafts. Eastward is a plain piscina, nearly triangular. The font has a circular, cup-shaped bowl, much like a cushion-capital with a kind of scolloping at the upper part; the stem is cylindrical, on a square plinth. Most of the windows have, unfortunately, been transformed into sashes; but some laudable improvements have been effected, and more, perhaps will follow. The porch is extremely large, more resembling a chapel, but is disused, and a modern door opened in the centre of the west front, whereby the arrangement is much disturbed and a wrong effect produced. The ground in the churchyard is most uneven, and on the north rises almost to the roof of the church. There are traces of a pointed roof seen on the east wall of the tower.

In the churchyard is the base of a cross. The sacrarium is large, and laid with polished tiles.

Near the east end of the churchyard is the old Vicarage, now a parish school; a curious ancient building, in which appears two arches springing from a central cylindrical column.

Lychgate - cast iron gates 1890 with texts worked in-by Stephens family, who had an engineering works in East Back Pembroke, but whose roots were in Castlemartin.

The hands of their little boy were used as a mold for the brass handles. The woodwork of the gate was renewed in 1979 as a memorial to the Thomas family of West Farm.

The Church of St. Michael, Castlemartin, was on 29 June, 1299, granted to John, called "Oysel," the Prior, and to the Monks of St. Nicholas, Pembroke, by Joan de Valence, countess of Pembroke, and mother of Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke. - Pat. Rolls.

To the same priory William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke, granted the tithes of his mill of Pembroke, Tenby, and Castlemartin.

Cross-Incised Stone.

During the inspection of the church a stone built into the churchyard wall bearing a cross on both front and back was noticed, apparently for the first time are very rude both in workmanship and in art. The stone was taken out of the wall and removed into the Church,

Ermigate Cross.

In the east of the parish, by the side of the road leading to Flimston Chapel and north- west of Ermigate farm-house, is the three-tier base of a cross; the field on which it stands is known as Cross Park (Tithe Schedule, No. 308). An adjacent cottage is known as Addlegutter; referring to which name and that of Ermigate the writer of Flimston Chapel (1914, p. 16) says: "The assumption is that these names may be corruptions of St. Emingitha and of St. Aethelgifa, either of whom may have made pilgrimages to Pembrokeshire."

Frainslake.

Acc/to Edward Laws.

Col Lampton in 1880 opened a tump in the sand at Freynslake. It was built of sand and stones. In it he found two skeletons in a kistvaen. From one he took the skull leaving the other as it was. This skull was given to Tenby Museum and was described by Prof. Rolleston as "the beautiful typical brachycephalic skull of a young female". With it were ox, pig, sheep or goat bones white water worn pebbles and fragments of well baked black ware.

Longstone.

A field next west to Linney farm-house is so called. (Tithe Schedule, No. 437) Nothing is now remembered of any standing stone here. It was probably used when the adjoining coastguard station was erected.

Churchways Chapel.

This little edifice stood immediately north of the Brownslade tumulus on one of two fields called Upper and Lower Church Hill (Tithe Schedule, No 376-7). The remains of foundations are now practically buried beneath the sand. When opened up in 1880 the chapel was found to be "very tiny, being only 16 feet by 12 feet and pitched with water-worn stones".

Apostles Park.

A name still locally in use for the field next south of Pricaston farm-house. Of its origin nothing appears to be known (Tithe Schedule, No. 288).

Kings Land; East Kings Land.

Two fields south of Brownslade Farm, the names being still in local use.

Sten Bridge.

This bridge over Castlemartin Corse, doubtless meaning Stone Bridge but called. Stem Bridge on the Ordnance sheets, is situated at the point where this parish meets those of Hundleton and Warren. This was the western limit of the Lordship of Pembroke by the grant by Henry 1 (Fenton Tour 405)

Quern.

Said (Pem. Arch. Survey) to be built into the wall covering the over-flow of the Brownslade tank but seems to have disappeared.

Leaden tablet.

With dragonesque ornament found at Castlemartin - believed to be of Scandinavian origin (in National Museum of Wales).

Hammer Stones.

The Castlemartin floors in South Pembrokeshire have produced the two stones, One, partly bored slantwise, is, apparently, an unfinished hammer, thrown on one side because the boring had "gone wrong." The stone is of a green granite, similar to that found at Porth-gain in the north of the county. It measures 4 3/4 ins. by 3 1/2 ins., and is 2 ins. in thickness. It is in the possession of the Rev. A. S. Jeremiah, Vicar of Castlemartin.

The other, a finished hammer-stone, of a blackish felsite, has been worked with much care and skill. It measures 4 1/4 ins. by 3 1/2 ins., and is 1 in. in thickness. The centre hole is of the hour-glass pattern. It is at present in the possession of the Writer, A G. O. MATHIAS. Freshwater West but will eventually be deposited in the National Museum of Wales, Cardiff.

Frainslake Sands,

In the south, lies within the Army firing range and is out of bounds. Close to the road you can see a restored seaweed collector hut - once used for drying the special seaweed destined to become laver bread.

Historic Houses.

Pricaston.

Inaccessible -- (on Castlemartin Tank range) -- Fine group of buildings -- core a great hall with a stone built three door passage partition at one end The earliest record on the house is in 1475 although there is records of a John and Matilda Prikker holding land in Castlemartin in 1325.

Bowood.

Name and site lost. A pedigree shows descendants of John Warren of Trewern (1485 living at Bristol and at Bowood in Castlemartin, and were still at both places in 1638. Mathew Warren at the former and John Warren at the latter (could this be the farm known as Boughwood in 1660 in the parish of Monkton Castlemartin Hundred, and held then by Captain Francis Meyricke who had difficulty in paying the rent.).

Brownslade.

"About half a mile south of Castlemartin village, and westwards from the mansion we follow Frains lake (the latter being an old Pembrokeshire word meaning stream) to reach the sea coast at Frainslake Sands. The mansion was set in attractive grounds, and adjoining the grounds is Brownslade Farm, and it would seem that the farmstead was the original dwelling house" for we are informed by Malkin (1809) that "we find the newly-formed residence of Mr. Mirehouse. The ground now occupied by the house and lawn was a field twenty years ago [c.1784]. Mr. Mirehouse began in the same year with Mr. Johnes; and the present state of the Premises evinces the judgment with which his operations have been conducted" and Malkin later states that the new mansion was built about 1800. Plans and illustrations of the proposed house were made in 1783 by William Thomas architect and surveyor.

The property formed part of the estate of Lort of Stackpole Court, which passed to Alexander Campbell by marriage to the Lort heiress. The old house was a commodious building and in 1670 contained eight hearths, the occupier being John Leach. Leach died in 1675, and in 1709 Lady Campbell granted a lease of Brownslade for 21 years, to his son Abraham Leach, yeoman. The family remained until the death of John Leach soon after 1774, and his widow Elizabeth (Prout) surrendered the existing lease to John Campbell of Stackpole Court in 1789 for £3,500. It is clear that another family lived at Brownslade at the same time as that of Leach, which suggests that there may have been more houses there. This was the family of Holcombe. The will of William Holcombe of Brownslade, dated 1653, was proved in 1662: he was followed by three generations all being described as of Brownslade, and who intermarried with Meares of Eastington, Meyrick of Bush, and Corbett of Nash. The last of the family to live there was Admiral Essex Holcombe, R.N., who died in 1769-70.

John Mirehouse, born in 1753 had been at Cambridge University with John Campbell (later created Baron Cawdor), and became his land-agent in Pembrokeshire. In 1786 John Mirehouse, Esq., was tenant of Brownslade, and it was he who built the mansion house, and later bought the freehold. He was High Sheriff in 1810. A progressive farmer and planter of trees, he converted a morass of 2674 neighbouring acres into productive land, for which he received the gold medal of the Society for Encouragement of Arts, Manufacture, and Commerce in 1800.

His estate, including Brownslade, eventually passed to R. B. Levett who had married a Mirehouse daughter, and his son R. W. B. Mirehouse, C.M.G., T.P., D.L. of The Hall of Angle took that surname in 1864. His descendents are still at the Hall.

After the Second World war Brownslade became a guest house. Later the area became part of an artillery training range and the house and farm became ruinous. The old house has been demolished.

Bulliber.

A large farm about half a mile south of Brownslade, formerly part of the Stackpole Court estate, is now within an artillery range. When John Leach of Slade, yeoman, died in 1675, his eldest son Richard Leach had a lease of Bulliber where he died in 1732 and as he had no sons, he left the lease to his wife Elizabeth. On her death the lease passed to her late husband's nephew, Abraham Leach who remained there until 1776. Abraham was followed by his son Nicholas Leach who died in 1811 without issue. In 1834 John Bowling held a lease of Bulliber. Thereafter it was tenanted by farmers. About 300 yards to the south-west of Bulliber are the remains of an ancient promontory fort.

Flimston

According to Dr. B. G. Charles the name is found in ancient documents of the period 1324-1331 as variants of Flemisston, i.e. home of a Fleming many of whom settled in the south of the county. From 1600 onwards the form Flimston is usually found, and is thus spelt on Colbys map (1831).

Flimston Chapel

dedicated to St Martin - on the Castlemartin Range - Vaulted Chapel - became a barn - restored in 1903 and again after WW2 - services held 2 or 3 times a year in summer.

Lambton family memorials in the Churchyard, made of ice-borne boulders collected in the neighbourhood. (Churches of Pembrokeshire - Slater).

The chapel at Flimston was described as being devoted to farm purposes in 1800.

Archeologia Cambrensis 1880 described it: Two floors for storing corn have been inserted. In the cart shed beneath the piscina and sedilia are still to be seen in the south wall. The roof is sharply vaulted like many churches in the neighbourhood. A small turret remains on the western gable. The stair to the first floor now occupies what may have been a sacristy.

Flimston Chapel was restored in 1902 by Col. and Mrs. Lambton, in memory of their three sons who fell in the Boer War.

The building comprises a single chambered nave and chancel (46 1/2 feet by 24 1/4 feet) with a small lean-to chamber on the north side, now used as a vestry. The roof is a pointed vault having a span of 18 feet springing from the walls some 15 feet from the ground and rising to a total height of 30 feet. To the left of the north doorway is a square recess, in which has been fixed the stoup found near the ruined chapel in Churchways. The rood corbels are still in situ. At the east end of the south wall are sedilia with pointed arches, and a plain credence; a small square cupboard is now filled in, as also is a doorway opposite to the present main entrance. The font is modern.

As part of the complete restoration seven stained glass windows were installed, six in the 1903 restoration and one of the Virgin and Child by Kenneth Bunton 1964 installed in the vestry.

Of the history of this storm-beaten chapel on Flimston Down little would seem to be recorded. A rent charge on Portfield Gate in the parish of Lambston, near Haverfordwest due to the vicar of Castlemartin, and known to have been charged for the support of the services in Flimston Chapel, is still paid. No record exists of when the services ceased prior to their resumption in recent years. In the small burial-ground attached to the chapel have been placed several large boulder-stones from the neighbourhood, removed to save them from threatened destruction for road metalling; that at the head of Lady Victoria Lambton.'s grave was taken from just opposite Flimston Cottage to the south-east of the church, others were brought from Pwllsllaughters, Bulliber Farm, Lyssery (Llysevery) Farm and Merriion Pond.

Flimston Farmhouse

A farmstead near the coast, due north of Eligug Stacks.

- earliest part - was a long, commodious dwelling, an early vaulted house, with a hall above the under-croft, and a tall round chimney at the main gable end.

It was extended in the 1600's but is now a roofless ruin.

Flimston was a knightly residence under the Earls of Pembroke; William le. Fleming, from whom it probably derived its name, held it in 1246, Walter de Castro in 1324.

Many similar houses occur in south Pembrokeshire.

In 1786 Flemiston was owned by John Hook Campbell with Robert Jones as tenant.

Flimston Bay Camp.

This earthwork is situated on the verge of the cliffs at the at the boundary between Castlemartin and Warren parishes.

A natural peninsula is cut of by two stony parallel banks, each of about 300 feet in length. The entrances are placed roughly midway, and are directly in line with each other. At the extreme point are traces of a pathway down the cliff.

Linney.

Another early house that has now totally vanished except for some low walling.

Near the coast at the south-western end of the Castlemartin promontary, just south of Linney Burrows, and overlooking the inlet called Black Cove. Marked as a knights fee on Rees map; as Linney house, on George Owen map, 1603 as residence of "Row Esq" on the maps of Bowen (1760) and Kitchin (1763). Fenton wrote in 1811, "Nearer the sea is Linney, an old mansion, formerly the property and residence of the Rows, a family of middling fortune." It became property of the Lorts, and in 1631 the owner was George Lort of Linney, gent. In 1670 John Leach was assessed at five Hearth taxes for Linney, and his will was proved in 1675. The next was Richard Row, gent, who married Elizabeth Wearer. He was High Sheriff of the county in 1729, and died before 1735. His wife died in 1750. They had two children, Francis Row, living at Linney in 1741, who died without issue and Alice who married in 1721 James Bowen of Llwyngwair and had issue.

The property was afterwards leased to George Phelps gent., who was there in 1787 (the owner was John Campbell) and he was followed by his only son John Phelps who inherited 10 leaseholds and was living at Linney in 1804. Thomas Jones gent., lived there in 1834.

George Roch farmer was there in 1851. James Roch in 1904.

Moor.

A farmstead south-east of the church and marked on Colbys map. Land Tax 1786, gives Moor and Moor Hays farms, owned by John Campbell, Esq. with Thomas Edwardes, tenant. Fenton writes in 1811 says "Turn to the left from Castlemartin church, to see Moor one of the chief mansions of this district about two hundred years ago, of a very irregular form, with many ruinous and extensive outbuildings, once entered by a gateway now stopped up, leading to a porters lodge. With very few exceptions, this may serve as a model of the style of building their houses among the greatest of that era in this country, which invariably appears to have been surrounded by a high court wall having a large arched gateway, and essentially differing from the form of the principal houses of the date, in the upper part of the country; where, notwithstanding the Norman encroachment, presumptuously called a conquest, as the strongest proof of their never having been subdued, the natives retained their language and the British fashions in everything continued evidently predominant". Nearly a century later, Timmins wrote in 1895, "Moor Farm, where once stood a goodly mansion, of which scarce a stone has been spared." In the 18th century it was the home of John Prout (will proved 1780) whose daughter married John Leach of Brownslade and had issue.

1794 Pembrokeshire Company of Gentlemen and Yeoman Cavalry

Following a meeting of the county gentry in London on 19 April 1794, the Pembrokeshire Company of Gentlemen and Yeoman Cavalry was formed. It comprised two troops, each of fifty men. The Dungleddy Troop, led by Lord Milford, recruited the Haverfordwest and Picton area, while men belonging to the Castlemartin Troop, led by the future Lord Cawdor, Captain John Campbell, came from the environs of Stackpole.

Shortly after Captain Campbells elevation to the peerage in 1796, the Castlemartin Troop was called upon to quell disturbances in market towns in Pembrokeshire area caused by bread shortage.

Jos [EPH] ADAMS TO JOHN CAMPBELL ESQ.

I thank you for your kind letter which I received yesterday and perfectly agree with you in opinion relative to the exportation of corn, the supplying the markets and also that no language should be held to irritate a mob, but unhappily great cause was given for alarm by Roch of Paskesiton and Hervey of Angle buying up wheat to export. The report from the magistrates to the Duke of Portland's letter was that wheat is the shortest crop and that there is certainly not enough in the country for its consumption. If then the middling class are sufferers, will they not complain, and their complaints go a great way to irritate the lower orders of people who have most intercourse with them?

The farmers had withheld from supplying the market for a fortnight to enhance the price (then too great), and notwithstanding every argument of policy and interest to them they would not be prevailed on until the people became tumultuous. Now they are justly alarmed, as are the corn factors. The farmers have promised a constant supply to the markets and the factors will not export. So far good is come from evil. you seem to think that party jealousies were the cause, but I do assure you I never saw all ranks, parties and classes of people so irritated (farmers and factors excepted) and all coming in the same language. The heat is now, thank God, allayed, and I trust no cause will be given to revive it, for then no one can pronounce what consequences will ensue.

Your name has been glanced at as acting in contradiction to the spirit of resolutions you brought forward at the quarter sessions by letting Banjeston to Hervey. I told Mr. Mirehouse of it, and afterwards when it was reported he was concerned with Hervey I desired Mr. Hand to tell him of it that he might justify himself: enclosed is his letter to me and my answer. Since Heney has declared Mirehouse is not concerned, but you'll see by M's letter to me there was a plan which he says you were unacquainted with. I mention this as I am zealous for your honour and think I should not act right by you in not acquainting you with it

The Fencibles with Captain Ackland and the Yeomanry paraded on Saturday last and will again next market day, so that I hope all will be quiet. But I repeat it depends on supplying the markets and no exportation. I hope Lady Caroline and the boys were well when you heard. Miss Adams joins me in every good wish for you all.

Endorsed: Pray present my best respects to Mr. Greville when you see him.

1796 March 10 Pembroke

On my return yesterday from Earwaere I was favoured with your very kind letter and beg to assure you that I shall always be ambitious to merit your confidence and to be assisting in whatever you may have to propose. I should have written you an account of the Field Day had our meeting been such as I expected it would when I last wrote to you, but the day turned out exceeding cold and windy and, only 16 attending, we made a very short business of it and appointed another meeting that day fortnight, which will be next Tuesday, when I trust we shall do better. I shall wait your orders for our meetings, weekly or once a fortnight whichever you please. My brother's account of the conduct of the troop and his own company is highly flattering to both, and I have no doubt that they would have supported the magistrates and their officers properly. However, I sincerely hope neither the one nor the other will ever be brought to the disagreeable necessity of firing upon poor creatures who have certainly great reason to complain, for I am convinced, and so are all your friends here, that the scarcity at Pembroke is artificial and not real and that two thirds of the corn remains unthreshed, and that it is owing to the avarice of the farmers that our markets are so high. I have the mortification to find on my return to Pembroke that mutton is at 5d. a pound (the same as I paid in London and Bath all the winter for the best) and here I have had some at nine months old. This is so glaring an imposition that we have come to a resolution of not buying it till the price falls.

Annexed you have a copy of the resolution which is signed by all the principal people here and we mean to send it to Haverfordwest for the same purpose. In this business the farmers are alone to blame, for the price of the sheep is so high. to the butcher that he cannot get above a shilling or eighteen pence for his trouble.

In short, every order of people here are dissatisfied with the attempt to impose upon them and do not allow that the farmers here have a right to charge as much as in England, where the price of labour is double and the rent of farms much higher, and, what is remarkable, there never was known any winter to be more grass in the country than the last. Mr. Painter has just told me that the price of sheep at Pembroke is £33 a score. I hope I have not tired you by writing so much on this subject which, as it is a serious one, I could not help giving my sentiments on it. you are so well known as the friend of the poor here that your coming to the county will be impatiently looked for. Mrs. Ackland unites in best compliments to Lady Caroline Campbell and yourself.

French Invasion 1797

In the following year 1797 the troop formed part of the force of 750 local men under Lord Cawdor which opposed the French landing near Fishguard. 1,400 French troops, largely untrained and reliable, under General William Tate, an Irish-American, had landed at Carreg Wastad Point on 22 February 1797, but, fearful of an imagined British seniority, they surrendered on Goodwick Sands on the morning of 24th February.

Feb 17th 1797 a force sailed from Brest consisting of a lugger and a corvette escorted by two frigates containing several hundred released jailbirds and galley slaves under the command of an American adventurer named Colonel Tate ordered by the Directory to land and "burn Bristol the second city in England for riches and commerce" and thereafter to land in Wales, march across the mountains and do the same to Chester and Liverpool. The raiders sailed into the Bristol Channel and turned tail when they say what they thought was a warship it was the Dublin packet boat then went to Fishguard anchored on Feb 22nd force landed in a rocky cove below Carregwastad Point. The Vessels had been sighted, and the alarm raised.. Lord Cawder mustered the Castlemartin Yeomanry, Cardigan Militia and Fishguard Volunteers(Local militia units) and they marched seaward from the village of Llanwnda followed it is said by the women of the area wearing their red cloaks..although the French outnumbered the militia 3 to 1 on seeing the advancing militia Colonel Tate ordered his men to stand firm then went forward and surrendered himself and his army to Lord Cawder unconditionally "upon principles of humanity". the main problem of the volunteers was preventing the enraged Welsh villagers from cutting the throats of the French prisoners as they were marched off to jail

Acc/to Journal 1885 Vol XLI of the Congress of British Archeological Society

25 of the french captured after the invasion at Fishguard became friendly some girls in Pembroke and enlisted their aid in escaping they stole Lord Cawder's Yacht and sailed to France

Acc to Roger Worsley

Two local girls Eleanor Martin and Ann Beach fell for some of the french and helped them escape. The French dug a tunnel and the girls took away the spoil in yoked tubs pretending it to be sewage. The tunnel was over 60yds long . They all then got away by stealing the yacht belonging to Lord Cawder

Fifty Six years later Queen Victoria awarded the battle honour "Fishguard" to the Yeomanry, and it remains the only one given to a British Army unit for opposition to an enemy force within the British Isles. The Pembroke Yeomanry also has battle honours for:"South Africa, 1901" "Egypt, 1661916/17", "Gaza", "Jerusalem, "Jericho", Tel Asur", "Palestine, 1917-18", Somme, 1918", Bapaume 1918", "Hindenburg Line", "Epehy", "Pursuit to Mons" and "France and Flanders, 1918".

The average wage for an outdoor labourer was 5d a day in winter and 7 ½ d a day in summer. During the early part of the century labourers received a cottage and potato plot at a low rent and their fuel completely free, but by the end of the century these benefits had almost disappeared.

A Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis.

The rocks on this part of the coast consist of an irregular series of broken stratifications apparently thrown together by some violent convulsion and presenting an uncommon grandeur of appearance From March to Augusts these rocks are the resort of that migratory bird called the eligug, which during that period deposits its solitary egg on the shelving projections of the cliffs, and, supporting it with its foot, which possesses a degree of warmth sufficient for the purpose of incubation, after having hatched its young and enabled it to shift for itself, leaves the vacant place to be occupied by another of the swarm that covers the surface of the water, waiting for an opportunity to perform the same process This bird cannot take wing from land: as soon, therefore as the young is able to fly, the parent bird throws it into the water, from which it rises with remarkable strength of wing over that element.

This parish is totally enclosed, and the land is mostly fertile and in a good state of cultivation: the Cors, a tract of land comprising about three hundred acres, was brought into cultivation by the late Mr. Mirehouse, of Brownslade, to whom, in 1810, the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce adjudged their gold medal for clearing waste moors The same gentleman also surrounded his house at Brownslade with luxuriant plantations, which, from their exposure to the violence of the south-west winds, it was generally apprehended would wither in the shoot; but. under the judicious management of that eminent agriculturist, the trees have flourished in opposition to every impediment, and, though much neglected of late by the unavoidable absence of the present proprietor, who is one of the special pleaders to the city of London, during the greater part of the year, are highly ornamental to the neighbourhood.

Besides Brownslade, the seat of John Mirehouse, Esq., Corston, the respectable residence of Abraham Leach, Esq., is in this parish.

The whole of the district abounds with numerous military works and fortifications, thrown up during the frequent contests which took place between the Danish pirates who infested this part of the coast, which, from its exposed and defenceless situation, was much subject to their attack and the native Welsh, who resolutely repelled their aggression: one of these may be seen on a farm in this parish, called Bully Bar.

The parish abounds with limestone of excellent quality, in the centre of which is found clay much used in the manufacture of fire bricks. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St. Davids, rated in the king's books at £7 17s 6d. endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Earl Cawdor, who is also impropiator of the tithes. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient structure, and has undergone thorough repair within the last ten years. There was anciently a chapel at Flimston, which has long since gone to decay. A plot of ground, on which some cottages inhabited by the poor of the parish was given by an unknown benefactor but there are no particulars of the donation on record. The castle of the family of Martill, descendants of Martin de Tours, and from which the parish and the hundred are supposed to derive their name, was in a state of ruin prior to the time of Leland, who says, "Towarde this extrem part of Pembrokshire be the vestige of Martin Castle".

-PARISH OF CASTLEMARTIN.

I visited this Parish on the 18th of December. The children generally attend the Earl of Cawdors school in the parish of Warren, which is not far off. There is however a small dame-school held in part of an old building (occupied by a labourer and his wife) in the churchyard. The school has been furnished with cards and Prints by the Vicar and Mrs. Mirehouse of Brownslade. I found the room clean and comfortable, and the mistress a respectable person of her class. There were only two little children present owing to the extreme severity of the weather and the deep snow.

1536 Number of Households 65

1670 Number of Hearth Tax Payers 70

1801 Number of families 61 - This suggests that there had been a depopulation in the area.

Thomas, This office had been held by his father, another de Castro Martini John 1244 joined with the other notables in the letter to John of Monmouth as to the attack on Cardigan, and who, as Sheriff of Pembroke, was a witness Marshall Earl Walter charter to Monkton Priory. Castlemartin John 1405 was appointed, with Perrot Stephen of Haroldston, to receive the black mail for Owen Glyndwr.

Fenton" says that Castlemartin Castle (where Leland found the "vestigia of Martine Castel") was the baronial residence of the lords of Castlemartin. But the manor of Castlemartin was always part of the demesne of the Earl, and the most valuable part thereof. On the death of Aymer de Valence the value of the whole lordship was £175 16s. 4d and of this sum Castlemartin manor was worth £102 0s. 2d No doubt Castlemartin Castle was held by the Earls themselves. It is probable that this was the reason why Castlemartin gave its name to the hundred. But of the Martin who gave his name to the Castle there is no trace, and for the statement that he was descended from Martin, the conqueror of Kemes, there is no evidence.

Loveling William 1613 was the first of four members of the same family who served this church as vicars over a period of one hundred and forty seven years. Is there any other church that can say the same.

William only was vicar for 16 years and was succeeded by his son

Loveling Mathias (Mathew) 1629 who also held the living of Castlemartin as did many of the succeeding vicars Mathias although had problems because he was turned out of the benefice for insufficiency by the Commissioners for Propagation in 1650 and the profit's what they were sequestered a successor was not appointed He seems to have regained the living in 1662 when many puritain ministers left their livings rather than give assent to the rites and rituals of the Church under the Act of Uniformity

The Land Tax records give us a picture of the size of the parish at that time of thirty households ten were classed as paupers and only six had more than one hearth the biggest house in the area has occupied by Thomas, Gough and had five hearths, not very big when compared to some of the houses in other parishes. Mathias Loveling 1671 died in 1671 and was succeeded by his son

Loveling William 1718 during his time Erasmus Saunders described the living of Warren as one of the poorest in the area and says of the churches generally in the area that there were many which "" we are but rarely if at all to meet with Preaching Catechising or Administering of the Holy Communion In others the Services of the prayers is but partly read, and that perhaps but once a month or perhaps once in a quarter of a year Curates were submitted to serve three or four churches very often ten or twelve Miles from one another for an annual stipend of 10pounds.

William was in 1718 followed by his son

Lovering Thomas 1760 Thomas, died in 1760 but his wife lived to be 104 according to Fenton she was mother to Loveling of Trinity College Oxford who published a book of poems, "elegant specimens of classical latinity, but more honourable to his muse than his morals" [unfortunately I have not been able to obtain a copy so I cannot comment.]

Cosheston -- St Michael & all Angels -

According to Sir Stephen Richard Glynne "1842"

This Church is in a striking and elevated situation commanding a view over Milford Haven. It consists of a west tower, nave with north aisle, south transept, and chancel. The steeple is curious, - a small square embattled tower set over the west end, upon a kind of bracket, and surmounted by a small octagonal spire of stone. There is a kind of billet cornice below the battlement; the belfry windows quite open, and of rude work; two on the east side and one on each of the others. On the north side of the tower is a door by which there is an ascent to the steeple by rude stone steps outside the roof, there being rude stepping stones against (projecting from) the wall. The whole of the external walls seem to have been rebuilt in poor style. There are two oddly shaped, wide arches much flattened between the nave and aisle. The pier seems to have been originally large square, and solid but is altered in an octagonal form. The windows were probably originally quite small. There is an arch to the transept, resembling those on the north side. The exterior is neat, but devoid of interest. The Chancel has open seats and a modern Gothic reredos.

NB This church has been put into good repair in the year 1885. The Rector, the Rev T G Cree, had well restored the chancel some years previously.

According the Royal Commission of Ancient Monuments

This church consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, south transept known as the Paskeston chapel, south porch and small turret at the west end. Under a faculty obtained in August 1885, "for rebuilding portions of the church," much of the former structure disappeared, the present building being practically a new one on the old foundations. Remains of the rood stairs, and of a tomb recess in the Paskeston chapel, have been retained. All the windows are modern as is the vestry. The pier between the north aisle and the nave was removed and an arcade substituted. It was refloored and tiled. In the north-west angle of the chancel a squint-passage to the north aisle was retained and is now used for the organ; as was also the turret with its small octagonal stone spire, the vane on which is dated C.H. 1781.

The spire was removed in 1980 and the vane replaced. The rood screen to the Paskeston Chapel, the rood beam, the wooden crucifix and the Bishop's Chair were carved by Mr John Mathias.

The entrance to the tower is by a flight of external stone steps. Under the nave wall between the Paskeston chapel and the south doorway is a well, now covered, which is said to have been used formerly as an adult baptistery. The font is modern; the basin of an earlier font was for some times at the rectory but is now in the Church.

Churchyard Cross Only the base stone (26 in by 24 in) with square socket remains, apparently in its original position on the south side of the church.

Rectory house. This has been rebuilt; parts of an earlier house having plain vaulted basement chambers are incorporated in the modern house

NB – The Church is entered in the Taxacio of 1291 as “ecclesia Costyn” and there is no doubt the earlier form of the name of the parish was Costyn of Costonston. It appears as Costeyniston in the Inq. post mortem on William Robelyn in 26 Edw III (1358)

This benefice is a rectory, the patronage of which has continued in lay hands from the earliest known date.

1594 the patron was Henry Wyrriott of Oriulton, the last male of his name, whose daughter and heiress married Hugh Owen of Bodeon Anglesey the founder of the family of Owen of Oriulton.

The patronage continued in the Owen family till 1789, yet curiously enough it was not appendant to any manor. Owens Pem.

Under the name of Ecclesia de Villa Costyn, this church was assessed in 1291 at £14 13s. 4d., the tenths thereon payable to the King being £1 9s. 4d.

Non Conformist Chapels

Nebo

There was originally a non-conformist Chapel called Nebo situated near Mount Pleasant Cosheston. This appears to have begun through the efforts of home mission and a place of worship was erected in 1832. It was linked with the Tabernacle Pembroke. In 1851 the average congregation was 20 in the morning and 55 in the evening

Independent Chapel

Under the jurisdiction of the Independent Chapel at Pembroke

In 1851 it is recorded that John Lewis was the Deacon and that meetings were held for prayer exclusively every Sunday evening The average congregation was 45

. Two perfect upper quern stones, said to have been found some years ago in the parish, where preserved in the rectory garden but are now in the church.

Public Houses

The Brewery

Village Pub- Victorian Front, concealing much earlier building. When I was younger it was not noted for keeping to licensing hours. They used to say that the police gave up trying to catch them "as a police car would have to come in from the main road at Slade Cross the down a steep hill and up the other side before it could turn right by Ivor Kennefords farm then on the road a bit to the Pub. The coppers pint would be flat by that time". By that time as well everyone would have had plenty of warning.

Carpenters Arms

There used to be another Pub the Carpenter's Arms of which Mrs Martin was the landlady. Every lunchtime and evening there was a crowd of the older residents in there seated round the fire. Some like old Pop Phillips (Father of Councillor Billy Phillips) had their own seat which no one else could sit on. My father used to use the excuse every dinnertime that he had to go to the Carpenter's arms for his pipe tobacco. The only time Pop Phillips was ever known to give up his seat was when a very pregnant lady went in the pub. He very quickly stood up and she sat down. After she left there was inquiry as to why he had offered his seat. His reply "I've delivered cows, horses and sheep but never a baby and I "din't" intend to start now".

Cosheston Hall.

Acc to Mjr Francis Jones

On 26 August 1556 Gelly Barret, gentlemen, of Gellyswick and his wife Mary sold 'a tenement called the "Hall of Cosheston" to John Rossant of Nash, husbandman, and Isabel his wife, and it remained in the owner-ship of the Rossant family for several generations. In 1659 the will of John Rossant of Cosheston, yeoman, mentions the 'house called the Hall of Cosheston'. His son, Francis, was assessed at two hearths in 1670. In 1786 the Hall was owned and occupied by Abraham Leach. Just north of Cosheston village there was a farm called Snailton owned and occupied by Reverend William Holcombe. For a time the Allen family were in occupation including Seymour Phillips Allen (High Sheriff 1850) and his wife Lady Catherine, daughter of the 4th Earl of Portsmouth. Later, the name was changed to Woodfield and in 1894 it was occupied by George Stepney Gulston, and shortly afterwards bought by Major Ivor, afterwards Major-General Sir Ivor Phillips, K.C.B., D.S.O., who enlarged the house and gave it the name Cosheston Hall. The General died in 1940, and afterwards it was the seat of his daughter, Mrs. Basil Ramsden, and her son, Major Ivor Ramsden, M.B.E. High Sheriff 1967 now one of H.M. Gentlemen at Arms, and Deputy Lieutenant was the next owner-occupier. The Hall was entirely rebuilt in the mid 19th century.

Paskeston Hall

Paskeston Hall, the earliest part of which is a three-storey traditional style house dating from c1730. The hall itself was added some 120 years later. The family name associated with the building of the original house is that of Nicholas Roche, a High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire.

The house is about a mile north-west of Milton village, and built in the Georgian style, with a modern extension to one gable end. The first-known folk at Paskeston were yeomen, probably tenants, namely David Scurlock, yeoman (1559), George Ellys, gent. (1617) and William Jermin, gent. (1626) son of Rees Jermin, yeoman, after which came John Rossant, (1659) son and heir of James Rossant of Cosheston, yeoman. The Rossants belonged to the minor gentry and lived at Paskeston during the period 1659-1780, acquiring a small estate, the last of whom we find at Paskeston, being John Lewes Rossant, gent., and Mary his wife and John Rossant and John Lewes Rossant, gent., all of whom were living there in 1780.

It is likely that there was a farm as well as the mansion there, as early as 1724; Nicholas Rock of Paskeston, was High Sheriff in 1729, and in his will, proved in 1759, he mentions his sons, Nicholas, Mark, and George, and 'my kinsman' Thomas Roch of Butterhill. He was succeeded by his son Nicholas Roch of Cosheston, who succeeded his uncle (who was still there in 1815).

Nicholas Roch of Paskeston died there in 1866, and was followed by his son, also named Nicholas Roch who is included in the Landowners' Return of 1873 as owning 944 acres.

The next gentry family there was that of Allen (kinsman of the Cresselly stock), who were mentioned at Paskeston in 1894. Newton Seymour Allen DSO of Paskeston was High Sheriff in 1919 and died in 1934.

1534 The Rector's annual income at Cosheston was calculated as being £10

1648 On 16th July 1648 Oliver Cromwell invited the Rev. Peregrine Phillips of Cosheston to preach before him and his officers he was also vicar of Monkton St. Mary's (Pembroke), as well as Cosheston, Phillips must have been well known to most of them, for notwithstanding the inconveniences of the siege he preferred to reside in his parish of Monkton rather than in the comparatively peaceful Cosheston.

Peregrine Phillips was the son of that Vicar of Amroth who declined to read the Book of Sports, and suffered accordingly; probably in consequence of the father's firmness the son found friends. Sir Hugh Owen had given him the preferment of Monkton; Roger Lort that of St. Mary's, Pembroke; and he obtained Cosheston through the interest of Sir John Meyrick. He had been chosen one of the committee to inquire into the conduct of ministers; but all this availed him nothing during the siege, for the hungry Parliamentary troopers searched his house so diligently that he was obliged to secrete his scanty stock of flour in the bolster of his bed. Yet Phillips stood to his post and with him remained a certain plucky servant-maid who was in the habit of milking the parsons cow, "caring nought for the storm of shot and shell which "hurtled" overhead

A gable end in the village of Monkton in Laws time marked the site of Phillips' old vicarage.

Acc/to J T Rees " History of Protestant Nonconformity in Wales" (1861) the Oxford-educated Phillips, the son of a vicar of Amroth, was appointed to the Llangwm living after briefly serving as his uncles curate at Kidwelly. Pluralism was very common, and with the backing of such gentlemen as Sir Hugh Owen, Sir Roger Lort and Sir John Meyrick, he was soon preferred first to Monkton and then to Pembroke St Mary's. When he preached before Oliver Cromwell and his troops during the siege of Pembroke (1648) he so impressed the future Protector that he was invited aboard the men-of-war about to undertake the Irish campaign. During the Protectorate, Phillips became widely known as a committed advocate of the governments religious policy. A very accomplished orator, hailed by many as the best in the county , he preached in almost every church English and Welsh, and before the Justices of the Assizes at Cardigan, Haverfordwest and Carmarthen. He must have relinquished his Pembroke incumbency when the parishes of Llanwn, Freystrop and Rosemarket were united (July 1656). On one occasion, the intrepid rector had an experience which convinced many of his admirers that Providence had a special affection for him. When riding homeward late at night, both he and his horse plunged into a deep coal-pit at Freystrop and were firmly wedged in the narrow mouth a few feet from the surface. He was rescued by the proprietor Captain Longmans, who had been appraised of his perilous predicament by an un-named deaf woman and her alert grandson.. Peregrine Phillips continued to be very active as an open-air preacher and public evangelist until soon after the restoration he fell foul of the Act of Uniformity (1662) which banned all acts of worship not conducted in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer. Ejected from the Established Church, this amiable but unrepentant non-conformist withdrew to Dredgeman Hill Farm which he held from Sir Herbert Perrot, of Haroldston, and which he converted into an Independent house church (1665). Thereafter he became the accredited pastor of the Green Meeting, a non-conformist group of 50/60 which assembled in a little room on St Thomas's Green and which was to develop into Albany Congregation (now United Reformed) Church Haverfordwest. Upon his death at 68 years of age in September 1692, this unforgettable former rector was buried near the pulpit at Haroldston church.

1650 Steven Love a Londoner was appointed to the living of Cosheston as a result of the work of the Propagation Committee. He became a member of the Green Meeting in Haverfordwest. He later became minister St Thomas and St Mary's (1652) in Haverfordwest.

1690 Thomas Bowen of Cosheston refused to take the oath of allegiance.

D., in 1698 bequeathed certain property for apprenticing poor children, and the relief of the aged and infirm, of the four parishes of Lawrenny, Cosheston, St. David's, and Lampeter-Velvrey, with a discretionary power to his brother, the Rev. Mr. Jones, as executor, to add other parishes: of the produce of this charity, Cosheston receives a sum amounting to about £30 per annum, which is appropriated agreeably to the directions of the testator. Education

1811 Acc /to the visitation records there was a schoolmaster in Cosheston

1847 Report on the State of Education in Wales

PARISH OF COSHESTON,—on the 18th of December I visited the above parish. The only School at that time in it was a dame-school in Cosheston village. This school has been closed for the week previous on account of the severe weather. It was held in a room, part of a dwelling house. The furniture consisted of two square tables, which (the mistress told me) were exchanged when the scholars were in attendance, for benches, and four chairs. There was a bed in the room, which took up a great part of it. There had been another school in the parish at a place called Lawrenny Ferry, but it had been discontinued for a week; previous to the time of my visit. The master of this latter school was not considered to be in his right mind. Indeed, from what I saw of him, and the conversation I had with him, I should say that he was certainly very strange. He told me that his scholars had all deserted him lately and that he was looking out for a situation—what he would like to have was a situation as private tutor in a gentleman's family. He would be satisfied with 6s. per week and his board and lodgings. He said he could teach grammar right! well;" and when I asked him what he taught beside, the answer was "Oh, I teaches Latin, plane and spherical trigonometry, navigation and the Lunars."

There was one Dissenting chapel, but no Sunday-school held in it.

The average of wages for labourers in this parish was 9s. per week on their own finding

Such children as went to any school went to Pater

DAVID LEWIS,

I was favoured with the following letter by M. A. Roche, Esq, which contains many remarks of great practical value:—

Paskiston, Pembroke, January 5, 1847

Sir

I am sorry not to have seen your Assistant when he visited this parish, I should like to have had with him some conversation. I must, therefore, take the liberty of troubling you with this letter.

Ten years ago, when my father came to reside in this Parish, where he possesses an estate and is the only resident landowner, I was anxious to get establish, at least, a Sunday-school; which was effected by the cooperation of others and of the family of the Rev. Mr. Holcombe the late rector.

The population of this parish is under 600 souls; we average between 40 and 50 children between the ages of 5 and 16 years, principally between the ages of 7 and 14 years, at the school; the whole number of children between 5 and 16 years of age, in the parish being I should guess, about 70 or 80. The teachers at present are the Rev. Mr. Bowling the rector, Mrs. Bowling, another lady, and myself, besides a paid schoolmaster.

The fortune of the school has continued almost the same, though with a little variation. At first it was a novelty, then it was treated with indifference, but now I fancy in some instances I perceive the indifference wearing off. But still the parents seem to consider education—or, I should rather say, the mere prelude to education, such as reading and writing are—rather as an accomplishment, as a rich person would regard German or Italian, than as a necessary thing so that very little excuse is sufficient for their negligence in not sending their children and a very little affront sufficient for their withdrawing them. On one or two occasions, one has had to exert all one's influence and management to keep the affair together. The parent however are always very particular in sending their children neat and clean and want of shoes and clothes is the most fertile cause of occasional absence

I need scarcely say, that during a couple of hours once a-week it is impossible to impart more than the merest pittance of knowledge. I have myself been most anxious to get my Pupils to understand what they read and learn, and for that Purpose I have discarded all explanatory books, and use only the Bible and the Church Catechism, for I have never yet seen an explanatory book that, for such as Sunday-school children, did not require more explanation than what it professed to explain; and the consequence is, that the children learn by rote the explanation as well as the thing to be explained. Indeed, I have sometimes found that a viva voca explanation has been remembered by rote; and though the difficulty of making them understand is certainly not insuperable, yet it is much greater than any one would suppose that had not had some years' experience in it. In fact, I am sure that this great difficulty forms a very great characteristic difference between the schools of the poor and of the rich. I have found much advantage in giving questions in writings to be answered in writings taking care that they shall be different for each child. I also have lately made some of them learn Watts's Hymns, which they do with great pleasure we do not teach writing

Besides our school, there is another Sunday Schools attached to a Dissenting chapel; it is not, I understand, largely attended, and was, I believe, set up for the convenience of a few residents, about it, which is at the end of the parish. For I am most happy to say we are free from almost all, if not altogether all, religious animosity; we are not yet sufficiently enlightened for that.

Some few parents have managed to get their children taught to writes and there has been generally some day-school in the parish. At present there happen to be two, but the worst that I ever recollect. These schools are undertaken by persons for their livelihoods or to assist it by such scanty earnings. And this is a point which cannot be too much insisted on—the incapacity of the schoolmasters or schoolmistresses in this neighbourhood. Nothing will ever be effected until a a complete change is made in these, but that will require far greater funds. A teacher never thinks of explaining anything; and though children are. sometime taught to read; yet they learn with so much carelessness that it is often on Sundays my chief employment to get my pupils out of the slovenly habits of pronunciation, omitting in reading all the little words, &c., acquired during the week.

I scarcely know whether our school is worth the trouble that I have imposed on you is reading this long letter; but so far as such a trifling institution can extend it has not been without benefit, were it only that by the attention of one of the lady-teachers some children have, by going there only, been taught to read very well, and I was anxious to attempt to afford you some notion of a little Welsh Sunday-school in an agricultural district, and the disposition entertained by the inhabitants towards being instructed, I have, &c.

M. A. ROCHE.

In 1863 a school was built in the village near the Church originally as a Church school. Today it is still used as a Primary School.

David Morgan a builder from Jeffeston who had build Laws St Pembroke Dock and his son-in-law, Thomas Howell who had been a shipwright at Neyland were partners at Whalcwm Cosheston in a thriving shipbuilding business in which they used oak trees growing on the banks Of the Haven. - They built ships to order in their yard for Liverpool captains: and it was the custom for the captain who was to buy the ship to stay at Cosheston for some time before his ship was launched so that he could supervise final details. This business prospered until the coming of ironclad ships, when ships built of oak were gradually superseded.

Ships built	1860's	4 total 88 tons
	880's	1 total 27 tons

The partners had another line of business at Cosheston a Chemical Works, primarily with the object of wasting none of the spare products from the Shipbuilding Yard. In time their most important product was naphtha, and this with other compounds and charcoal, they sold, chiefly to Messrs. Curtis and Sarvey, of Neath, manufacturers of explosives. Some bye products as well as oak bark went to the Tannery in Pembroke

Thomas's daughters Daisy, Lillian and Florence were writers as was their niece Avis Howells

Parish Church.

Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments

The church consists of chancel (30 1/2 feet by 16 1/2 feet), nave (31 feet by 14 feet tower (13 feet square), and north porch. Its earliest parts are the nave and tower

The chancel was rebuilt in the first half of the 14th century, possibly under the direct influence of bishop Henry Gower 1328-1347), as has been suggested by Dr. E. A. Freeman. It has a triple sedilia and double piscina of decorated work; these are flanked on either side by stone benches. The windows are modern restorations. In the south-west angle are the rood stairs, whilst two corbels which supported the rood beam are in situ on the west side of the plain pointed chancel arch.

The nave is plainly vaulted; at the east end of the vault are the remains of a vanished bell-cote. In the north wall is a blocked pointed doorway; to the right of the south doorway is a stoup recess..

The tower of four storeys, the two lowest being vaulted; the ground chamber is entered only from the church. Instead of a battlement a plain corbelled parapet. On the north side of the tower is the turret stair, rising clear of the parapet. The ground storey is lighted by a modern window which has been inserted above the still remaining original loop. The second and third stories are lighted by slits; the bell-chamber has to the east a double window with circular heads, and to the west a double light with square hood.

The font bowl (27 inches square externally, and 20 inches internally, with a depth of 61 inches) is of cushion type; the east and west faces each bear a cross of quasi-early form. The bowl stands upon a circular shaft and square chamfered base; marks of a cover are visible.

In 1831 the entire building was in " a state of extreme dilapidation, the windows being blocked and partially destroyed, and the roof in a condition of complete decay. "

According to Glynne 1851

This church has a nave and a large chancel with western tower, but no porch. There is a curious contrast between the fine Middle pointed chancel and the rude Pembrokeshire nave and tower. The chancel is almost of equal length with the nave, and has unluckily been much mutilated; but it presents a very good specimen of Middle pointed; unusual in this part of the country. The windows (two on each side) are unhappily now closed, but are each of two lights. The east window is a wretched modern one. There is a string, internally, beneath the windows, and along the south side of the chancel runs a stone bench. There is also a curious cornice of flowers, in stone , just beneath the chancel roof; which is now a very poor one of wood, but probably a stone one was intended. The grand feature of the chancel are the beautiful sedilia. Three in number, with ogee canopies, crocketed and finialed with intermediate pinnacles and a cornice of ball-flower. The canopies have trefoil feathering, and the shafts between them are octagonal. These are set rather farther westward than usual, and one of the windows is placed between them and the piscine. The piscine has a double ogee-head much like the sedilia, and very rich finials. Against the east wall is a bracket of stone. The chancel arch is a rude pointed one. Westward of it is part of a stone fence.

According to the 1851 census of religious buildings the area of the Parish was equal to 709 acres and the population was 78 36 males and 41 females

The space in the church was recorded as 8 free places and 40 allocated and Henry Hughes the minister records the attendance at the afternoon service as being 80 which is far more than the capacity of the Church and more than the total population of the parish.

The parish registers which are available in the Pembrokeshire county records Office date back to 1766 although there is a Bishop's transcript available in the National Library of Wales for 1686-87.

There was much rebuilding in 1851. and the church was restored 1880's

Church Plate of Pembrokeshire JT Evans 1905 Hodgeston

Here is the oldest Elizabethan Chalice and Paten cover in Pembrokeshire Both pieces bear the date letter for 1568 with maker's mark 1 P in a shaped shield. This maker's mark is found at Westerham, Kent, 1566 ; in Leicestershire at Catthorpe 1568 ; Twyford 1569 ; at Corpus Christi Coll., Cambridge, 1570; Llanllawei 1573; and is very common in Somersetshire. Around the bowl of the Hodgeston Chalice are two bands of plain strap-work enclosing the usual foliation and intersecting four times, one leaf only appearing above and below each point of intersection. Between these bands i.e. round the centre of the bowl is inscribed "+ POCVLVM » ECLESIE « DE ». HAOSTON ". That are no vertical reed mouldings. The stem is divided by a knop baviog a small fillet above and below and decorated with intermittent lines. To the Paten cover has been attached a modern paten, hall-marked 1880 with maker's mark HEW in a tri-lobed shield. This is the most hopeless, stupid piece of 'restoration' in the County.

Around the handle or foot on which is inscribed the date "1569" is a band of plain strap-work enclosing the usual foliage.

— A pewter Plate, 1 1 in. in diameter, and roughly scratched "Hotson 1786". It carries the marks: "London"; a rose crowned, twice; B & C; hands clasped; stag couchant; lion rampant. It was probably made in London for a Bristol or other country maker as there is no trace of him in the London Lists.

— A pewter Chalice and Paten have disappeared.

This benefice was originally a free chapel, and in 1380 the patronage belonged to the heir of John Fleming, Baron de la Roche. In 1487 the right of presentation was vested in Henry Malenfant and Thomas Sturmyn, the lords of the manor of Ogeston [Hodgeston], being patrons for that turn. In 1594 one moiety of the patronage was owned by the Earl of Essex, who bought it from Wogan, and the other moiety belonged to John ap Res and the de Longueville family, the right of presentation being appendant to the manor of Hodgeston.—Owen Pem.

Moat RCAM

This is a square enclosure (60ft by 60ft) a few yards west of the parish church. The moat which surrounds it still contains water on three sides, the fourth is much overgrown. A small building stood within the moat until about the year 1870 when it was removed. Visited 18th May 1922

NB a small probably mesne, manor of Hodgeston certainly existed in the medieval period, but its history is practically a blank. There is no appearance of a baronial mound in the parish, but this feature may be represented by the moated mansion noticed above

Hogeston Hill Tumulus

About 20 yds south west of Carew Beacon and on the south side of the Ridgeway is the site of a vanished tumulus, respecting which the following remarks appeared in Arch Camb 1851

One tumulus has been opened about thirty years ago (1826) and a skeleton found; stones also are said to have been removed.

Hodgeston Hall

House of c.1800. In 1787 the ownership of the estate was held in three shares, the largest being that of the Rev. Arthur Owen. In 1840 the same share was owned by Griffith Owen, and the occupant of Hodgeston Hall was John Owen. The house may possibly have served as a rectory: Thomas Owen MA was Rector of Hodgeston from 1829. It is now a farmhouse.

Rev George Holcombe to Charles Moss Bishop of St Davids

Mr Seall the vicar of St Mary's etc Pembroke is now with me and has desired me to present his duty to your lordship and to lay before you the following' particulars. That, as he lives in Shropshire and has expectations, particularly from Lord Clive, whose Principal seat is in the parish where he lives he humbly and earnestly entreat that your lordship will be pleased to dispense for some time at least with his personal residence at Pembroke, and that he will take care that his parishes shall be served by an able curate who will perform the duty as fully and as conscientiously as he himself could do were he personally resident. That the principal inhabitants of his parishes have recommended to him Mr. Williams, the vicar of Hodgston in the deanery of Pembroke, whom I know personally and who performs parochial duties both as a reader and preacher extremely well and who lives in the town of Pembroke and is a man besides of sobriety and of a good character. The present curate's name is Hughes, vicar of Landphey. The parishes do not much approve of him to continue the curate as his manner of reading and preaching is not so edifying, and indeed to my own knowledge I am certain that as an officiating minister he is greatly inferior to Mr. Williams. Mr. Seall seems to be a modest, well-meaning man and has desired me to address your lordship upon this affair previously to his writing to you which he soon himself intends to do. Your lordship's tenant of Castle Morrice has at length paid me the rent you expect of him.

extract from a Letter from Cha[rle]s Pigott Pritchett, rural dean of Pembroke, to William Stuart Bishzp of St David's

..... The state of the churches in my district is now become so decent and in tolerable order that it is unnecessary for me to trouble your lordship with particulars. I wish I had as good an account to give of many of the vicarage houses. That of Nangle stands in most deplorable condition, next to it Mannerbier, St Twinnels and the vicarage at Stackpole want thorough repairs----

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales - Hodgston

HODGESTON, a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Pembroke, on the road to Tenby; containing 75 inhabitants. This parish is by some writers supposed to have been the site of an ancient religious establishment, of the existence of which, however, there are not the slightest traces, nor has it even a traditionary history. The supposition rests chiefly, if not entirely, upon the evidence of an ancient deed still extant, in which John Stackpool styles himself "capellanus," and dates from "Oggeston;" but there is every probability that the writer was chaplain of the episcopal palace at Lamphey, about half a mile distant, and held the rectory of this parish at the same time. Hodgston is situated in the southern part of the county, and is bounded by the parishes of Manorbier, Lamphey, and Carew, and the sea, contiguous to what is called Freshwater bay. It contains by admeasurement 709 acres, mostly arable and pasture, with a small quantity of waste, and little or no woodland: the tillage is of a fair average quality, after the practice of the country, but not according to the improved system. The surface is in general level, but partly undulated, and towards the north rises to a considerable elevation, as it likewise does on the south towards the sea. There runs a vein of limestone from east to west, which is wrought and occasionally burnt for the use of the farms. The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 4.; patrons, Sir John Owen, Bart., and Pryse Pryse, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rentcharge of £73; and there is a glebe of twenty acres, valued at £26 per annum. The church is a neat edifice, with a lofty square embattled tower, and was probably erected about the time of Henry I., as most of the churches appear to have such towers where the Flemings were located by that monarch: there is a handsome chancel, considerably larger than would seem to have been required for the inhabitants, who apparently never exceeded the present number. Dr. Thomas Young, Bishop of St. David's and afterwards Archbishop of York, was a native of this parish

Education

1847 acc/to the State of Education in Wales report

"On the 21st December I visited the parish which is a very small one containing only 6 farms and four resident labourers. Their children go to school in Lamphey which is an adjoining parish. The rector was non resident ; lives in Pembroke. The rate of wages here was much the same as at Lamphey viz. 8s per week on an average . There was no school of any description in the parish either day or Sunday."

Lamphey

Very old village with a free standing "Flemish" Chimney

Seems to have belonged to the Diocese of St David's by 1096 for that year the Bishop was there during the siege of Pembroke Castle.

Bishops palace once residence of Bishops of St David's earliest surviving document dated from the Palace at Lamphey was issued in 1259, during the episcopate of Richard de Carew but Welsh Bishops of St David's had ready chosen Lamphey as a rural retreat before the Normans came.

After the reformation and Bishop Barlow who neglected all the See's Pembrokeshire Property as he wished to remove the See to Carmarthen, the manor was given up to the Crown, who in 1546 passed into the Devereux family and Robert Earl of Essex, favourite of Queen Elizabeth spent his boyhood here.

Nearby, the imposing Lamphey Court outwardly well preserved house in the Classical Revival style of the 1820's

The church in the village has a Norman tower, but was largely rebuilt in the nineteenth century.

In Norman times a Demesene consisted of several strips widely scattered in several fields of varying size the manor of Lamphey had 6 fields some of which were more than 100 acres in area

Bishop's Palace RCAM

It is probable that a residence of the bishops of St. Davids existed at Lamphey from a very early period.

Lamphey Palace 1740's

The structure as it at present consists of two parts, an eastern and a Western wing, connected by a gateway that stands about midway between them. The western wing is the earlier, and may date from the time of Richard de Carew, during whose episcopate the earliest surviving document that emanated from the palace of Lamphey was issued in the year 1259. A considerable length of outer walling is unbroken by a window fronting the exterior, whilst the top of the wall is battlemented and loopholed. Against this wall, and looking across the courtyard, was the hall measuring about 80 feet by 20 feet; above the seems to have been a series of dormitories The other living rooms were doubtless arranged round the courtyard, but all traces of them have vanished above ground Whatever kind of eastern wing may then have existed, it was completely removed about 1330, and a building was erected on this portion of the site probably by Bishop Henry Gower soon after his appointment to the see. The frontage of the mansion was thus considerably extended, both wings being connected with an archway, the lower parts of which show it to have been constructed prior to Bishop Gower's time, and to have been merely altered and beautified by him. The outer wall of this wing is surmounted by a strikingly effective parapet of arched openings similar to what is known to be Gower's work in the ruined bishop's palace at St. Davids, and in the upper walls of the episcopal castle of Swansea. Professor Freeman considered the work at Lamphey to be "a mere bungling imitation of his Gower's work at St. David's from a later hand, but it is more likely to represent Gower's first attempt.

A number of chambers are named in the survey of Lamphey taken after the dissolution of the monasteries, but these with their under-crofts have so far disappeared as to leave no sufficient indications of their respective purposes. There must, of course, always have been a Chapel within the precincts of the palace; at any rate the ruins of one stands within the quadrangle parallel with Gower's wing; it may be of his erection, and was probably structurally connected with the residence. The exterior walls of this chapel still remain; the eastern gable holds a beautifully-proportioned Perpendicular window. The chapel was dedicated to St. Mary — Visited 14th April 1915
RCAM

The palace of the Bishops of St David's from the C 13 and probably much earlier and until the mid C16. It has important surviving works which have been associated with Bishops Richard Carew, Henry de Gower and Edward Vaughan.

The palace was surrendered to the Crown by Bishop William Barlow in 1546, whence it was granted to Richard Devereux (and the line of the Earls of Essex).

In 1683, probably after damage in the Civil War, the palace was sold to the Owens of Oriulton, and in 1821 to Charles Mathias. In the time of Owen tenure the buildings were neglected or converted to farm use, but preservation commenced under the Mathias family followed by H. M. Office of Works and Cadw.

Early C13: Fragments remain of the Old Hall and its undercroft. It is not clear with which bishop this first surviving work is associated. In the hall, two lancets at north, one blocked. Hearth at South with a round chimney above. In the undercroft: slit windows with wide embrasures. Local limestone rubble. Alterations in C16.

Late C13 (associated with Bishop Carew): the Western Hall (replacing the old hall which became a kitchen) and its undercroft. The hall has a fireplace at the centre of the North wall. An attached latrine block at the SE corner. Undercroft: windows with stepped high sills above what appear to be seats. In the walls are the sockets of the floor joists carrying the original timber floor laid above a longitudinal bridging joist. Local limestone with dressings in a coarse freestone.

In later centuries the Western Hall continued as the main hall of the Palace. The undercroft was vaulted over. Windows converted to Tudor form. An attic storey and a new latrine block at S were added.

Early C14 (associated with Bishop Gower): A long narrow hall (or suite of rooms?) and undercroft added at the E of the Palace. The main stairs are against the N wall, above the undercroft porch. There are corbels for a pentice roof sheltering the stairs. The hall was roofed with six trusses, for the wall-posts of which there are corbels about 1.5 m above floor level. Pairs of trefoil-headed lancet windows with window seats. The E end of the hall is served by a fireplace with a conical chimney. A latrine wing is attached at SW. At the top of the walls is an arcaded parapet, of less developed type than that of Bishop Gower at St David's. Local limestone rubble with sandstone dressings. This building has a fine undercroft which now appears as a single vault, slightly pointed at the apex. The springings of several of the eleven cross-ribs survive, but the ribs have almost completely disappeared and the straight construction joints in the stonework above rib positions are visible. A building at the E of the inner ward containing additional accommodation (the 'red chamber') may be contemporary.

Early C16 (associated with Bishop Vaughan) Fragments of a chapel with a modern gateway at the E. Sacristy at N. Fragments of Tudor windows. A fine Perpendicular E window survives.

Wards: The inner ward gatehouse, now standing in isolation two storeys, with gatekeeper's room above. Altered stairs at N. incorporating a mounting block. Pitched floor in the gateway. Shallow vaulted floor above. In the NE corner of the upper room there is a fireplace. Parapet arcading after the Gower style.

There remain fragments of an extensive outer ward, to the N and W of the main buildings. Here the most important structure was Bishop Vaughan's great corn barn, the lower part of the N wall of which survives. Also fragments of the outer gatehouse. A later outer precinct wall to the S facing the stream and fish-ponds.

A detailed inventory of the goods of Bishop Rawlings lists the following rooms of the late Bishop 'at his manor place of Lantefey, with their contents, providing an idea of the extent of the building at the Dissolution. as follows-

Lamphey St Tyfei – Parish of Lamphey RCAM

Even before 1851 this church had been " fearfully modernized (Arch Camb., II, ii, 821), and it was further restored " in 1870. It has now little of antiquarian interest except its west tower and its font.

On plan the building is cruciform -the chancel being 19 feet by 22 feet, nave 86 feet by 22 feet, north transept 17 feet by 16 feet, south transept 9 feet by 8 feet. The modern reconstruction followed the original lines.

The windows have been renewed, but two lancets on either side of the chancel preserve portions of the work described by Freeman as "two remarkable trefoil lancets . . . with deep Early English jamb mouldings" (Arch. Camb., 1852, II, iii. lli4).

In the south wall of the chancel is a piscina with a pointed arch. A squint-passage connects the chancel with the north transept. When Sir Stephen Glynne visited the church in 1845 the south transept was "a small chapel, made into a pew, opening by a very rude and low obtuse arch." The font basin is square, 26 inches outside, 20 inches inside measurement; it is of the regular Norman type; its sides are ornamented with a band of six-pointed stars. It stands on a circular shaft, with cable mouldings around the top of the pillar, and is one of the best preserved fonts in the county.

The tower is of three storeys, the lowest having a plain vault; it is unbuttressed, slightly-tapered, and finished with a corbel table and battlements. The stair turret is at the north-east angle. The belfry lights are double; the rest single slits. It opens to the nave by a plain pointed arch. The exterior doorway in the west wall and the window above are modern insertions.—(Arch. Camb., 1886, V, iii, 5fi)--Visited, 18th May, 1922. RCAM

The parish of Lamphey was also a manor of the Bishopric of St David's.

The church has repositioned fragments of C13 architectural detail in the chancel - a piscina and two lancet windows, and there is early masonry surviving at the bases of walls, particularly the N transept. At the W end is a C14 / C15 tower. In the C19 the church underwent extensive restoration to the point of rebuilding, to counteract the effects of earlier extensive improvements. Its plan, however, is unchanged.

In 1811 the use of the little south chapel or transept as the private pew of Portclew House, with its own fireplace, is mentioned, and it was still a pew in 1845. Also mentioned in 1845 was the fact that all the nave windows had been converted to sashes, a modern ceiling inserted, and the North door blocked. These latter improvements may date from 1826, when the church was thoroughly repaired and re-pewed to achieve 200 additional sittings. In 1845 four Early English trefoil-headed lancet windows still survived in the chancel, but in 1852 only two were noted. The church was thoroughly restored in 1869-71 by Ewan Christian, architect of London.

The churchyard cross was removed in c. 1830 to a neighbouring farm.

Exterior: Nave and chancel under one uninterrupted roof, with porch and small transept at South and a larger transept at North. Local masonry in irregular courses. Roofs of large slates with crested tile ridges and stone gable-parapets. Cross finial at East. All rainwater heads carry the date 1870.

Signs of a blocked doorway are visible at low level in the North wall of the nave.

There is a tall tower of three storeys at W. slightly battered with crenellated parapet on corbels. At its NE corner is a stairs turret, projecting on the N side only. The tower masonry is randomly coursed with large stones at the quoins. Double belfry lights to East and West. single belfry lights to North and South.

Interior The chancel is 5.5 m long by 6.5 m wide, with two lancets (re-set in the C19 masonry). The nave is 11 m by the same width, with transepts overlapping the chancel: the North transept opens to the nave by an unusual arch which is an incomplete segment, and also connects with the chancel by a small squint. The South transept or chapel is now the vestry. The tower, at the West end, is vaulted. Memorials include a Gothic one to Charles Mathias (d. 1831)

. The churchyard wall is built up to the corners of adjacent buildings (school and bakery). Rubble stonework with a coping of spaced upright stones in mortar. At the NW corner there is a modern lychgate in memory of Anthony Mathias: two stone piers with a simple moulding and an oak roof, on which are slates taken from Lamphey Court.

Notes on the Older Churches – Lamphey Church 1845 Glynne

This church consists of a wide nave without aisles, north transept, and a chancel, with a west tower. The tower is of a kind very common in the south-western part of Pembrokeshire, but not elsewhere. The character is more that of military or castellated architecture. This particular instance is lofty, and tapering towards the top, without buttresses or stringcourses dividing the different stories. There is an embattled parapet, and below it is a corbel table. The belfry windows on the east and west are double, with obtuse heads; the others single. At the northeast angle is a square turret with stairs; the west doorway plain and pointed; over it a window modernised. The lower part of the tower has a very curious plain stone vault within, forming a rudely shaped arch. The style of this and similar towers is apparently Early English, though this may not be a matter of certainty. The north door is closed, and the south porch made into a vestry. The windows of the nave are all modernised, with sashes; the ceiling also modern. There is a small chapel on the south (now made into a pew) opening by a very rude and low obtuse arch. In the south wall is some trace of the rood door. The north transept opens to the nave by a singular, imperfect arch (about three parts of a segmental arch) abutting against the east wall; and from the transept into the chancel is a pointed and clumsily shaped hagioscope. The chancel arch is plain and obtuse without mouldings. There are some good Early English lancet windows in the chancel; on the north three, with good mouldings; on the south, one; all have external as well as internal mouldings. On the south of the altar is a piscina with mouldings and a drip stone. The font has a circular bowl with curious ornamental panelling round the top, and scalloped below; the stem circular, with a cable moulding round it, and square base. The pulpit is within the chancel arch obstructing the altar. At the west end is a finger organ in a gallery.

Pembrokeshire Parsons

Very little is known of the early history of this church. It was apparently appendant to the Manor of Lamphey, which was owned by the bishop of St. Davids, as in the grant of the manor of Lamphey made by Bishop William Barlow to King Henry VIII. the patronage of the church of Lamphey is expressly reserved to the bishop and his successors.—Fenton's Pem.

Cross.

Built into the wall of a garden immediately opposite the churchyard gate is a slab of limestone on which is carved a cross- with rounded projections midway on either side of the cross arms 20 m North of the Iychgate of Lamphey Church. A mediaeval grave slab set upright into the garden wall of the Old School House. Possibly the slab was taken up when extensive improvements were carried out to the church in 1826 and removed here when the schoolmaster's house and its garden were formed shortly afterwards. It was in its present position when reported in the Inventory in 1925. The slab consists of a single slab of limestone at least 1.8 m long (high), by 15 cm thick, and tapering from about 45 to 40 cm in width. On its front (now facing the road) is an incised cross in very shallow double lines, extending to all edges of the stone. Midway in each arm is a rounded shape. The sides and rear of the stone, so far as visible, are rough-hewn. No inscription has been seen.

Churchyard Cross.

According to the Pembroke. Arch Survey the shaft of the churchyard cross (destroyed about 1830), which formerly stood on the north side of the church, on a site in the school-house garden marked by an oak tree, was removed to North Hill Farm, Lamphey, and made part of a cattle-rubbing stone.

Baker's Cottage

A house probably of the C 18, believed to have been a small staging inn called 'The Venison'. At some time since acquisition by Charles Mathias in 1821 as part of Lamphey Estate, it became a bakery. In 1838 it was in the ownership of Abraham Leach and the tenant was George Macken. The cottage is also believed to have been occupied at one time (c.1875) by a governess. In c.1890 Joseph Bond installed a Tonks baking oven, the front panel of which is now preserved affixed to a wall at the rear of the house. This was worked in addition to a traditional brick bread oven. The front of a later Princie oven is also displayed. In c.1925 R E G White converted a little stable adjacent to the house at the South to serve as a new bakery

Court House

At the N of Lamphey village, at the turning to the lane which leads to Lamphey Court. Reputed to date from c.1695. The name derives from the use of the house as a court, the left (parlour) unit having been the courtroom. Subsequently the house has been a farmhouse.

Lamphey Court

A residence just north of the Palace. The area belonged to the Devereux family, but on the attainder of the Earl of Essex late in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the lands were purchased by Sir Hugh Owen of Orielton and remained in possession of his descendants until about 1821 when they were sold to Charles Mathias of Llangwarran, who, in 1823 commenced to build the residence known as Lamphey Court.

There had been an older house on the site, and according to the Pembrokeshire Arch Survey, had an outside staircase leading to the upper floor, which was pulled down in 1826. The new Lamphey Court was a large handsome mansion with a fine portico of four Ionic columns. Four of the Mathiases were High Sheriffs - Lewis in 1856, Charles in 1890, Charles Ronald in 1937 and Lewis in 1965. Lewis Mathias was the last of the family at the mansion which he sold in 1978, and now lives in a house in the grounds. The mansion is now a hotel.

Mathias of Lamphey Court

The Mathias family had resided in Llangwarren, Jordanston, Pembrokeshire, since the 16th century, when

Mathias Thomas c 1570-1617 of Glastir, Nevern, Pembrokeshire, married Lloyd Jane, co-heiress of Llangwarren The estate descended in the male line, passing to

Mathias Charles Delamotte 1777-1851, who married Bethell, Mary of Somerset Charles ---Mathias Charles of Llangwarren 1817 High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire Charles Mathias purchased Lamphey Court, Lamphey, Pembrokeshire, in 1810-1811, and built a new mansion there in 1823 Their children were

Mathias Lewis 1813-1882 of Lamphey Court JP High Sheriff 1856 Guardian of the Poor - son of Charles Mathias - of Rochamstead who married

Lawes Emily Catherine d 1877 daughter of J B Lawes of Harpenden, Hertfordshire and they had children

Lamphey Park

A residence just north of Lamphey Court.

In 1786 James Thornas was owner-occupier of Lamphey Park, and was still there in 1817 when he was described as gentleman. In 1834 Charles Poyer Callen was the tenant, paying a yearly rent of £50, and Lewis in 1840 states that Lamphey Park, 'the property of Mrs. Thomas occupies a pleasant situation it is now derelict.

North Down

In 1840 this was described as a 'genteel residence' occupied by the Rev. B. Byers. Notes are sketchy, but gives a rough pedigree of the Rowe family Henry Rowe of Lamphey, who died in 1705 had a son Lewis described as 'of Northdown. Lewis 's eldest son John inherited His second son (b.1699) was the Rev. Henry Rowe Vicar of St. Petrox. John's son Richard inherited North Down and was Mayor of Pembroke in 1766,1775,1781 and 1786.

Trewent Hall

Trewent Point. Home of the Hall family in the 16th and 17th centuries.. In 1551 John Hall, alias Howell of Trewent, gent., was summoned to answer Sir John Wogan. An heiress brought it to the Owen family and Sir Hugh Owen was owner in 1786. The Cradock family had connexions here (Vide George Owen's list of Pembrokeshire gentry)

Old Chimney

In garden of No. 25 a modern house at the North side of The Ridgeway, at the NE of Lamphey village. The old round chimney stands detached in the garden E of the house. It is a Cylindrical chimney on a tapering base with an oven and fireplace. Local rubble limestone. The cylindrical shaft is approx. 2.5 m high and 1 m diameter. Capping approx. 30 cm below the top and drip courses at the foot of the cylindrical shaft. Nothing remains above ground of the building it served. (It was possibly the lateral chimney on the W side of a cottage of C 16/C 17 appearance, with its gable to the street, of which an old illustration survives.)

A silver coin of Decius (A.D. 251) was found ;' in making the railway between Pembroke and Lamphey. "Mr Jones, station-master at Lamphey, had it " Laws, Little England 45

On 30 July 1486 at Lamphey a letter, the tenour of which follows, was exhibited to H. bishop of St. Davids. To the venerable father in Christ etc. the bishop St David's or his vicar general in spiritualities

Julian by the mercy of the Lord bishop of Ostia sendeth greeting and sincere charity in the Lord. A petition offered unto us on behalf of Walter ap John of Stacorse layman of your diocese contained that by the instigation of the devil he lately killed one Roger Walter, priest of the said place, his Spiritual father who had baptized one of his sons, on which account he falls under the sentence of excommunication pronounced in general terms against such as do these things, upon which things he has caused supplication to be humbly made, setting forth the same, for a due remedy to be mercifully provided for him by the apostolic see. We therefore by authority of the Lord Pope the care of whose penitentiary we bear and by his special mandate upon this made to us by the oracle of the living voice commit to your prudence that if this is so when he shall have gone by all the larger churches of that place where so great a crime was perpetrated, naked and unshod with only his breeches on, bearing a rod in his hand, and a yoke about his neck if he can with safety and caused himself to be beaten before the doors of the churches aforesaid and with the priests of the same singing a penitential psalm, when the multitude of the people in these is greatest, publicly confessing his sin, and when he shall have adequately satisfied, if he have not already done so, the church which the murdered priest served, and when he and his heirs have been deprived for ever of any fee or right of patronage he hold of the church (and lest the memory of the punishment be too short let his children on this account be deemed incapable of holding an ecclesiastical benefice unless with them there be a merciful dispensation upon this by the apostolic see), you shall absolve this layman from the said sentence and such guilt and excess of priesticide in the accustomed form of the church and enjoin on him therefore by the authority aforesaid, such penance as may be to him for salvation and to others for terror.

To all sons of Holy Mother Church inspecting these letters Hugh etc. sendeth greeting etc. It is meet that those things which are determined by an agreement, by judgment, or by arbitrament, in order that scruples of the contention reawakening may not recur, shall be strengthened by the support of the bishops of the places; for the cutting off of the matter for strife and the fostering of the beauty of peace.

1490 21 October

On 21 October he collated to Sir John Makeram chaplain , the vicarage of Overam and instituted him in the same then vacant by the resignation of Sir John Coke last vicar there and in his collation.

1535 the vicar at Lamphey is recorded as having an annual income of £5 8s quite low by the standards of the day

1546 in an exchange of property forced upon Bishop Barlow, he alienated Lamphey, the richest of his episcopal manors, and one of his most delightful houses. Technically, it was handed over to the Crown, but it was soon transferred to the powerful magnate, Richard Devereau. In part, greed and local pressure made it expedient for Barlow to surrender such a valuable estate; in part, it was a reflection that, already, Tudor bishops were much impoverished in comparison with their medieval predecessors and could not live on the same lavish scale. The surrender of Lamphey was also a hint of the policy pursued rigorously in the later sixteenth century, the policy of scaling down the wealth of the episcopate. Barlow's recompense was sadly inadequate: he received the advowson of the rectory and vicarage of Carew.

1576 Richard Devereux Earl of Essex and holder of Lamphey Palace from the King died in Ireland His son Robert age nine succeeded and his widow Countess Lettice, then married the Earl of Leicester and his daughter Dorothy (some say Penelope) married Sir Thomas Perrott son of Sir John Perrott

George Devereux brother of Richard then lived at Lamphey and the nephew Robert Earl of Essex lived there with him until he was twenty two

Robert Earl of Essex became a favourite of Elizabeth I and she bestowed Carew Castle on him but later fell in disgrace and was beheaded in 1601 on Tower Hill.

With Robert Earl of Essex lived and fought and died Sir Gilly Meyrick of Gellyswick, Milford Haven son of Dr Rowland Meyrick, Bishop of Bangor, and Katherine daughter of Owen Barrett of Gellywick.

Late 1500's Rice Philip Scarfe of Lamphey is recorded as being one of the corn merchants who was buying up the corn for export in a time of shortage 1595 reputed to be still deer in the Deer Park which was 144 acres in extent . It lay on the east side of the palace and was surrounded by a high limestone wall which the tenants of the manor had to keep in repair.

1601 Robert Devereaux , 2nd Earl of Essex, and 3rd Viscount Hereford, held estates at Llamphey, great grandson of Walter Devereux, Lord Ferrers. was executed by Elizabeth I with him was executed Sir Gelly Meyrick

February Rice Philip Scarfe of Lamphey who was originally from Carmarthenshire and who held a 21 year lease of the manor of lamphey from Lettice Countess of Leicester was accused of various crimes by a group which included members of the Meyricks, Cluny, Adams and Wogan families; this matter ended up in the Star Chamber and also involved the various families organising a raid on Lamphey palace in which they seized goods and over 400 sheep.

1642- at the outbreak of the Civil war the lease of the manor of Lamphey was held by Major John Gunter who was serving with the Parliamentary Army. It was raided by Captain Crowe of the Royalist side who took a large number of cattle.

Rev George Holcombe to Charles Moss Bishop of St Davids

Mr Seall the vicar of St Marys etc Pembroke is now with me and has desired me to present his duty to your lordship and to lay before you the following' particulars

That, as he lives in Shropshire and has expectations, particularly from Lord Clive, whose Principal seat is in the parish where he lives he humbly and earnestly entreat that your lordship will be pleased to dispense for some time at least with his personal residence at Pembroke, and that he will take care that his parishes shall be served by an able curate who will perform the duty as fully and as conscientiously as he himself could do were he personally resident. That the principal inhabitants of his parishes have recommended to him Mr. Williams, the vicar of Hodgeston in the deanery of Pembroke, whom I know personally and who performs parochial duties both as a reader and preacher extremely well and who lives in the town of Pembroke and' is a man besides of sobriety and of a good character. The present curate's name is Hughes, vicar of Landphey. The parishes do not much approve of him to continue the curate as his manner of reading and preaching is not so edifying, and indeed to my own knowledge I am certain that as an officiating minister he is greatly inferior to Mr. Williams. Mr. Seall seems to be a modest, well-meaning man and has desired me to address your lordship upon this affair previously to his writing to you which he soon himself intends to do.

Your lordship's tenant of Castle Morrice has at length paid me the rent you expect of him.

David Thomas To Adam Ottley Esq. At Pitchford Near Salop.

Your Former Goodness In Befriending My Collation To The Vicarage Of Carew And Lamphey upon Mr. N. Morgan's recommendation, for which I return most hearty thanks, induces me to assume this liberty of informing you of the hardship I labour under, my benefice by the two parishes not exceeding £30 per annum a very short and small allowance for discharging of two separate areas, that of Lamphey being a vicarage endowed only with the small tithes of the parish. I presume you are partly sensible that the small tithes of Lamphey Court have been hitherto illegally detained from me (which I compute to amount to two-thirds of my due there, the Bounty money excepted). Given to understand that there is a concurrent lease granted of the episcopal tithes of Lamphey, I humbly beg leave here to insert that the Right Reverend Father in God, my ever esteemed patron lately deceased, of whose religious care and pious zeal for the Church I've had sufficient reason always to conceive a firm and undoubted good opinion, was graciously pleased to promise he would endeavour to recover the said small tithes to the vicarage of Lamphey if that lease should happen to be renewed in his lifetime, to the present lessee or any other.

Which encourageth me humbly to request you'd please to be so kind as to satisfy me in this particular whether the vicarial tithes are reserved to the poor incumbent in the concurrent lease. And with all submission to desire your favourable assistance on this occasion in my behalf in order to regain the same in kind, or some reasonable allowance in lieu thereof

W. Tucker To [POSSIBLY Adam Ottley].

The favour of your last I received which gives me the pleasure of learning that you are well. I am desired by Sir Arthur Owen to give you the trouble of this, which I should not do, but that as he is my wife's relation I could not well refuse, for which reason I hope you'll be pleased to excuse my freedom herein. It is with respect to Lamphey lease: as he is the old tenant therein he is willing if you please to favour him to continue in the tenancy thereof, and will give as much as any for it. He begs you'll please to admit him to treat with you about it. I humbly ask pardon for the trouble herein and take the favour of your answer soon, which I shall esteem an additional obligation laid on me

[REV.] Geo[Rge] Holcombe To Robert Lowth, Bishop Of St. Davids .

Since I wrote to Mr. Barsen about Lamphey rectory I have been informed that its real value may be set down from £25 to £30 per annum. The reason why its value is not more considerable is owing to the alienation of the best tenements in it from the see in Queen Elizabeth's reign.

Postscript: Sir William Owen gathers the tithe corn of the parish with his own, which make it difficult to ascertain the real value, but I think it cannot exceed £30 per annum.

LAMPHEY (called by the Welsh LLANFFYDD), a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (E.) from Pembroke, on the road to Tenby; containing 407 inhabitants. This place, commonly called Lampha, and so spelled on a communion salver bearing date 1743, seems to owe its name to the title of the church; the compound Welsh word Llanffydd, "the church of the faith," having been perhaps corrupted by the Flemings to Lanfoi, and gradually to the modern orthography Lamphey. It was probably among the earliest of the settlements of the Normans in South Wales: according to Buck, as quoted by Grose, it was the head of a lordship marcher; and it anciently contained one of the princely residences of the bishops of St. David's, of which there are considerable remains. At what period it first became the property of the archiepiscopal, and subsequently episcopal, church of St. David's is not precisely known; but a deed dated at Lamphey, in the middle of the thirteenth century, by Bishop Carew, is still extant; and, according to Giraldus Cambrensis, it appears to have been the residence of a bishop in the time of Arnulph de Montgomery, who possessed himself of this part of the principality in the reign of Henry I. At least a great part of the episcopal palace (even the whole of it, according to some writers) was built by Bishop Gower, in 1335. The various styles of architecture which characterize its ruins show plainly that it was the work of successive periods, and that it did not attain the splendour for which it was remarkable, but by the accumulated additions and improvements of its successive proprietors, of whom Gower probably built the great hall and the square tower, distinguished for their beautiful open parapets.

This portion of the possessions of the see of St. David's was alienated to the crown in the time of Bishop Barlow, by Henry VIII., who granted Lamphey to Devereux, Viscount Hereford, father of the unfortunate Earl of Essex, whose youth was passed in this place. After the attainder of the earl, in the reign of Elizabeth, the estate was purchased by Sir Hugh Owen, of Orielton, by whose descendant Sir John Owen, Bart., it was sold to Charles Matthias, Esq., who in 1823 erected a handsome mansion, called Lamphey Court, with a fine portico of four Ionic columns, near the ruins of the ancient episcopal palace. Besides this seat, the parish contains several genteel residences belonging to other families. Portclew, a mansion rebuilt some years ago, is beautifully situated on an eminence overlooking Freshwater bay, where the fine smooth and firm sands are alike inviting for walking or riding. Lamphey Park occupies a pleasant situation on the north side of the valley, in grounds which contain some pleasing scenery and are tastefully disposed; and North Down is also a genteel residence. The house of Lamphey Park is situated in the midst of what was formerly the deer-park, of which the boundary wall remains: the view hence westward is singularly fine, embracing within half a mile both the venerable ruins of the palace and the adjacent modern mansion of Lamphey Court, and further on, the town of Pembroke, its magnificent castle towering over it, and the river, as an expansive lake, stretching beyond it in the distance.

The parish, which in form is nearly a parallelogram, is washed by the sea on the south side, where is the picturesque little bay called Freshwater bay, with a good bathing place. It comprises about 2000 acres of meadow and arable land in nearly equal quantities. The village, with its lofty-steepled church built by the Flemings, stands in a fine valley, screened on the south from the Atlantic storms by gradually rising ground, whence a noble view is obtained of the Bristol Channel, and in tolerably clear weather, of the opposite coast of Somerset and Devon, together with Lundy Island: steamers and coasting-vessels pass close by the rocky promontory forming the west side of the bay.

Limestone of excellent quality is quarried to a considerable extent for building purposes, and also burnt into lime.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £5. 8. 11½., and endowed with £600 royal bounty; present income, £115; patron, the Bishop of St. David's. No tithes are payable from the land in that part of the parish which was alienated from the see in the reign of Henry VIII., and which constitutes a large portion of it, including the park, which alone contains many hundred acres of fine land. The titheable portion, under the Commutation Act, is subject to a rent-charge of £60 payable to the bishop, and one of £73 to the vicar, who has also a glebe of four acres, valued at £12 per annum. The church was thoroughly repaired in 1826, partly by subscription, and partly by an additional church rate, aided by a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society for promoting the erection and enlargement of churches and chapels. Two hundred additional sittings were obtained, of which, in consideration of the gift from the society, 135 are for ever free and unappropriated. A National day and Sunday school has been established, for which a commodious room, with a neat cottage for the master, was erected in 1828, by means of a grant from the National Society of £70, and £50 given by Mr. Matthias, the deficiency being made up by the vicar.

The remains of the ancient palace, nearly adjoining the village, amply display its former splendour. They consist of the great hall, seventy-six feet in length and twenty in width, the walls of which are surmounted by an elegant open parapet of delicate tracery; another apartment, sixty feet long and twenty-six wide; the chancel of the chapel, of which the east window, still entire, is a beautiful composition, enriched with elegant tracery; the grand entrance on the west; and the square tower above noticed, now inclosed within the gardens of the new mansion, in which it forms an interesting object. The greatest attention is paid to the preservation of these fine ruins, and every precaution has been taken by the proprietor of Lamphey Court to arrest the decay into which this venerable pile was rapidly falling from previous neglect.

1844 9 August the Cricket match between Lamphey and Pembroke brought together a large concourse of the gentry of the neighbourhood.

1943 American Troops of the 110 US Infantry Regiment mainly from Pennsylvania were stationed at Lamphey

In the Korean War Lt John Davey of Lamphey won the MC

Education

In c.1828 a National School was established which was described by Lewis in 1834 as 'a commodious schoolroom' (for about 100 children) and 'a neat cottage for the residence of the master and mistress.' The National Society contributed £70 and Charles Mathias £50, a deficiency then being made up by the Vicar, Rev. J B Byers. The land was provided by Mathias on a 60 years lease in exchange for another piece of land belonging to the parish. Both day and Sunday schools appear to have been held, the latter perhaps predating the building.

According to the report on the State of education in Wales 1847

.—on the 21st of December I visited the above school. It is held in the National school-room at Lamphey.

It was built by means of a grant from the National Society of £70., and £50. given by Charles Matthias, Esq., of Lamphey Court, the deficiency being made up by the Vicar. It was built on a piece of ground granted by the former gentleman in exchange for another plot belonging to the parish, and was secured by lease in trust for the term of sixty years, seventeen of which only have expired.

The school-room was commodious and well supplied with apparatus. The master seemed a very intelligent man. The books were well kept. There was also a visitors,' book, in which I noticed testimonials of high approbation from several gentlemen, and amongst others from the Rev. John Allen, Her Majesty's Inspector. The number present at the time of my visit was comparatively small on account of the badness of the weather. I heard the first class read the fifth chapter of the book of the Prophet Daniel. The reading upon the whole was remarkably good, and the answers given to my questions were quick and ready. They were able to give me a correct account of the history of Daniel, Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego. Knew by what names they were called by king Belshazzar. I had also a very good account of the history of Moses and the captivity of the children of Israel, as well as the history of Joshua. Two of the boys, about the age of fourteen, were at the time of my visit engaged in making maps of the Holy Land. These maps were (for boys of their age) remarkably well done. I examined the copy-books of the pupils and found those of the senior classes very well written and those of the juniors proportionally so.

The questions in mental arithmetic were very well answered and some few in geography. This and the Sunday-school which is held in the same place are the only schools in the parish of Lamphey.

Wages are about 8s. per week on the average.

The second class read the sixth chapter of the book of Daniel; most of them read very well, and could answer a few questions upon what they had been reading. The third was reading the miracles of our Saviour, and the fourth was in monosyllables and letters.

Freshwater East

A large bay located about 2 miles south of Lamphey.

There is a fine sandy beach backed by sand dunes, that used to be used by Pembroke Dockyard workers as a holiday place during the school holidays. Older workers used to tell stories of them going out at weekends to visit their wives and children who spent the whole holiday camping there mostly using ex-army WW1 bell tents furnished with tables, chairs beds and even sofa's, hurricane lamps and paraffin stoves for light and cooking. Some of the older men in the Dockyard with whom I worked told stories of the living in Bell tents out there during the period of bombing raids of Pembroke Dock. They stayed out there (without schooling) while their fathers stayed and worked in Pembroke Dock.

Did this encampment have any connection with the stories from the Grotto (the local pub at Freshwater East) of lights being seen down near the beach which could have been signalling enemy raiders? The more likely explanation I heard was that it was smugglers.

Today there is a holiday home development and a Caravan park. The County Council wishes to concentrate various types of holiday accommodation here. Reasonable access to the beach, but a shortage of summer parking.

Originally part of the Bishop of St David's manor of Llamphey.
(Churches of Pembrokeshire -- Slater).

There is a small ruined chapel-of-ease under Llamphey parish, probably 13c.

Promontory Fort

Freshwater East Camp This camp is placed at the end of a broad promontory overlooking Freshwater Bay. The landward approach from the north is defended by two lines of slightly curved ramparts. The inner bank has a length of 70 feet, rising from the interior level to a height of 10 feet and falling 20 feet to a ditch having a width of 10 feet, and for the greater part trenched out of rocky ground. The other bank, which has been much disturbed, is about 20 yards beyond the inner defence. It has a length of 45 feet, is lower than the main bank, and its ditch is practically obliterated the entrance faced east; that through the main rampart is 10 feet wide.

Portclew Llamphey

Porth Clew Chapel

The ruins of Porth Clew Chapel stands on the cliffs above Freshwater East Bay, on a field known as Chapel Field (Tithe Schedulers No. 121). Of its history nothing is known. The plan shows a rectangular chamber, 28 feet by 14 feet, with a north doorway 4 feet wide, that still retains the flag-stone in which the pin of the door revolved. The east wall is entire to the gable that to the south has a height of 10 feet; of those to the north and east only their foundations are left. One splayed light opens to the east, one to the north, and probably two to the south. The masonry base of the altar is in situ, and to its right is a stone bracket, 5 feet from the present level. In the south-east angle is an aumbry 4 feet above the floor. Adjoining the chapel is a weak spring of water which was probable venerated and may have given occasion for the erection of the building.

Portclews

An imposing house in the southern end of the parish on high ground overlooking the cove of Freshwater East and the waters of the Bristol Channel beyond.

Lewis in 1840 speaks of 'Portclew, a modern mansion, the residence of Thomas Parry Esq., is beautifully situated on an eminence commanding a fine view of the sea.'

In 1326 Thomas Wettar of Portclew was described as a landowner in the fee of Lamphey, part of the temporalities of the See of St. Davids.

In 1560 Edmund Poyer and John Philips are described as “of Portclew” .
 By 1595 it was held by Lewis Bishop whose descendants remained there until the death of Lewis Bishop after 1771. The Bishop family had come to Pembrokeshire in about 1600
 The well-known family of West Wales landowners, the Parrys, succeeded the Bishops when John Parry married Margaret Bishop, daughter and heiress of Lewis Bishop and came to live at his wife's home. John became High Sheriff in 1772. Their son William Parry married Ann Kemm, second daughter of Henry Kemm of Northdown, their marriage settlement having been made on October 22 1801 Their daughter, Mary Ann Parry, married at Lamphey on Jan 26 1830 the Rev Francis George Leach son of Abraham and Catherine Leach of Corston. Francis died in 1876 aged 80 and his wife died in 1894 aged 86. By the mid-19th century the Parrys had left Portclew and Portclew House became the home of Col. William. Morrison whose descendants were still there in 1904. The district around Portclew had a number of properties which bore the name. In 1786 John Parry was owner-occupier; Sir Hugh Owen owned East Portclew; Sarah Bastin owned Little Portclew and Abraham Leach owned another farm of the same name.
 In 1894 there were four properties in the area: Portclew; Portclew Burrows; Upper Portclew and Little Portclew.
 By 1950 most of these properties remained including Portclew House, occupied by the Uphill family.

Manorbier

Mining Manorbier

Manorbier Iron Mine Iron workings in and around Jameston village and alongside road to Lydstep Point south of Lydstep village. First opened up 1864-5; reworked 1908-9. Shafts all now filled, nothing visible at surface.

My thanks to Mr J Meyrick Owen for advice and help with illustrations, also to Mr Spencer Davies and his wife, he and I used to talk at work and he would pass on information and she was always such a great help when I took Services at St Florence Church.

Manorbier

The parish extends from the sea on the south to the ridgeway on the north and from Lydstep on the east to Hodgeston on the west and includes Jameston.

Has been inhabited since the Stone age, with evidence of middle stone age flint factory and Kings Quoit a Neolithic cromlech perched on the cliff of the east side of the Bay. It is capped with a massive block of stone.

1802 Acc to Barber

On a tempestuous day, a day fraught with trouble and alarm, we left Tenby, and took the Pembroke Road traced on a ridge of hills, which command extensive views over almost the whole of Pembrokeshire, and a great part of the Bristol Channel; but a heavy atmosphere frowned on the scenery and threatened a violent storm. Leaving the high road, we descended towards the sea coast in search of the gloomy remains of Manorbier castle and found the ruin wildly situated as described by Leland "between two little hillettes" whose rocky bases repelled the fury of an angry sea. This fortress appears to have been of Norman erection; it fell to the Crown in the reign of Henry I; a grant from James I presented it to the Bowens of Trelogne; from them it descended by marriage into the family of Picton castle, and in 1740 was the property of Sir Erasmus Philips, Bart. The ponderous towers and massive fragments of this castle denote its original strength and importance to have been considerable; yet now deprived of "the pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war" it exhibits a scene so wild and desolate, as might disclaim all intercourse with man: rank grass clothes every projection; "the thistle shakes its lonely head" from the windows, the sea bird screams through the hall and adders creep where many a warrior stalked.

1839 Manorbier (Maenor-Bŷr) Lewis

MANORBEER (MAENOR-BŷR), a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Tenby; containing 691 inhabitants. The name of this place is of very doubtful etymology: Giraldus Cambrensis, who was born here, calls it, in his Itinerary, Maenor Pyrr, which he interprets "the mansion of Pyrrus," who, he says, also possessed the neighbouring island of Caldey. According to Sir Richard Colt Hoare, the name literally signifies "the manor of the lords," and appears to be derived from its occupation by the lords of Dyved, who were also proprietors of Caldey island. By whom the castle was originally built has not been ascertained with any degree of accuracy; it probably owed its foundation to William de Barri, one of the Norman lords that accompanied Arnulph de Montgomery into Britain, and who married the granddaughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, Prince of South Wales. The castle and manor remained in the possession of that family till the 1st of Henry IV., when they were bestowed upon John de Windsor, but afterwards reverting to the crown, they were, in consideration of a large sum of money, granted by letters patent to Thomas ab Owain of Trellyn, from whose family they passed by marriage into the family of Philipps, the present owners.

Giraldus, in his notices of this place, quaintly says, "Demetia is the most beautiful, as well as the most powerful, district in Wales; Pembroke, that is the present hundred of Castlemartin, the finest province in Demetia, and the place I have described (Maenorbeer) the most delightful part of Pembroke." The parish is situated on the small bay to which it gives name in the Bristol Channel, and within two miles to the south of the turnpike-road leading from Tenby to Pembroke; the sea bounds it on the south, and in other directions it is surrounded by the parishes of Penally, St. Florence, and Hodgeston. It contains by admeasurement 3464 acres, of which 2855 are meadow and pasture, 450 arable, and the remainder common and waste. A great portion of the parish lies on the side of the hill along which the main road from Tenby to Pembroke winds, and being so immediately on the coast it is almost entirely destitute of timber; but the situation of the village is singularly picturesque, and in consequence of its contiguity to the sea and the ruins of the castle, it is much frequented by visitors. There are excellent limestone-quarries in Lydstep bay, where a very considerable number of hands are employed, the stone being shipped during the summer months in great quantities by vessels belonging to other parts of Wales, and to North Devon: vessels of 130 tons' burthen can ride in security at Lydstep. Some indications of coal have been observed, but the attempts to work it have not been attended with success. The sands on this part of the coast are fine, especially at Lydstep haven, where they are well adapted for sea-bathing; and the beauty of its situation, and its convenient distance from Tenby, render this a favourite excursion from that wateringplace. There are two small villages in the parish, called Jamestown and Manorbeer-Newton.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £600 royal bounty and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge, who are proprietors of the great tithes. The church, dedicated to St. James, is an ancient structure in the Norman and early English styles of architecture, consisting of a nave and two aisles, with a lofty embattled tower. Some years ago, the accommodation was increased by the erection of a gallery, containing ninety sittings, the cost of which was in part defrayed by the Incorporated Society; the chancel, also, underwent considerable repair, at the expense of the patrons. In 1847, this gallery, which filled up the west end of the nave, was removed, and open seats of oak were substituted, at the expense of Mr. E. Wilson, of Lydstep House; who also provided means for the removal of a square sash-window at the west end, and the erection, instead, of a three-light early English window. On the south side of the church is a large edifice, which was in all probability connected with it, but its history is unknown; it may have been a chantry or grange, or even some distinct religious house. It has been converted into a convenient schoolroom, capable of containing from eighty to ninety children, having been presented for that purpose by the patrons; and the school is rapidly improving, chiefly through the exertions of the vicar, the Rev. Henry Hughes: it is both a day and Sunday school. There are places of worship for dissenters.

Manorbeer Castle, distinguished as the birthplace, and for some time the residence, of the celebrated Silvester Giraldus de Barri, better known as Giraldus Cambrensis, is still an object of great attraction. The remains occupy an elevated site above the small bay of Manorbeer, of which the castle had full command. They consist principally of portions of the state apartments, whose windows faced a spacious court, the whole being inclosed with lofty embattled walls, the platforms of which are in some places still entire; the grand entrance, through a gateway flanked with two bastions, of which that on the north side has fallen down; two portcullises; and the moat, which may be distinctly traced. This castle is perhaps the most perfect model of a Norman baron's residence now remaining in the principality, having never experienced the ravages of enemies, or suffered from modern innovations. On Oldcastle Point, to the east of Manorbeer bay, are the remains of an ancient encampment of small dimensions, probably of Danish origin.

Giraldus Cambrensis was born about the year 1146, and was educated under his uncle, then Bishop of St. David's, who sent him to France for the completion of his studies. On his return to England he embraced holy orders, and rose rapidly to distinction in the Church; he held successively the office of legate in Wales to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the office of Archdeacon of St. David's. He was afterwards chosen Bishop of St. David's; but the king, fearing to raise to that dignity a man of such talent and influence in the principality, and one so nearly allied to the native princes, his mother having been granddaughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, Prince of South Wales, refused to confirm his election. He attended Baldwin, Archbishop of Canterbury, on his mission to preach the crusades throughout Wales; and, during the absence of Richard I. in the Holy Land, was one of the members of the regency. Being again denied the bishopric of St. David's, to which he had been a second time elected, and in the hope of which he had successively refused various other sees, and the archbishopric of Cashel in Ireland, he retired from public office into Wales, where he spent the last seventeen years of his life, devoted entirely to literary pursuits. He died at St. David's, at the age of seventy-four, and was interred in the cathedral church of that place, where his monument still remains. His writings were numerous, and many of them are still extant; his Itinerary, by which he is best known, was reprinted in quarto by the late Sir, Richard Colt Hoare, with an elegant English version, accompanied by notes and a catalogue of his writings, with a reference to the several works in which they are preserved.

1848 Maenor Pyrr acc/to Rev Gilbert N Smith Gunfriedstone Rectory May 20

Descending from the Ridgeway towards the sea beyond the fourth mile-stone from Tenby, Manorbeer Castle presents a beautiful and imposing outline. Its history is the more interesting and certain, because it was the birthplace, undoubtedly the residence, of the great historian of Wales - Giraldus himself.

Giraldus Cambrensis is of the princely family of Rhys, his grandmother being no other than the celebrated Nest, wife of Giraldus be Winesor who was governor of the first castle of Pembroke, built by Roger de Montgomery, in Henry I time. Giraldus, the historian or rather journalist – for his work is an Itinerary – was born in 1106, only forty years after the Conquest, so that the possible period in which the building of it took place (admitting it to be of Norman structure) is reduced to a very definite date. Arnulph de Montgomery, son of the above Roger, caused it to be erected. It is difficult to decide upon the meaning of the name of the place of Giraldus' nativity, when he calls it the mansion of Pyrr, or according to his Latinity "Pyrrus". Maenor, we know, is manor, but Pyrr a word of more doubtful meaning..

Fenton mentions a British stock in Pembrokeshire, who trace themselves back to Pyr Y dwyrain or Pyr of the East. Sir R Colt Hoare derives this word, which also enters into the British name of Caldy Island, Ynys Pyrr from the plural of Por, a lord. It was not impossible, to be sure, that Giraldus was on his Pegasus when he gave this well sounding derivation to the name of his abode. Indeed he seems conscious of it, for he asks favour for his partiality, and adds, that "Demetia is the most powerful district in Wales; Penbroch, the fiesst province in Demetia; and the place he has just described "Manorbeer" the most delightful part of Penbroch". But that he had grounds for what he asserts we cannot fairly doubt.

It is certainly a very beautiful bay, and must have been more so when the "deep pond" which he describes "on the north and south sides of the castle" was bounded by "the vineyard", on the sloping side of the hill; and, on the right hand "a large lake" besides "between the castle and the church" with "the wood of very tall hazel trees". The site of the pond is evident enough, forming that alluvial flat which extends as far as the pleasant farm-house called Tar, and to the entrance of a very pretty gorge or valley, well worth an extended stroll.

As to the site of the lake between the castle and church, "the lively stream" that fed it still trickles, and more than trickles along in rainy weather, though land is too valuable in our day not to be drained in such situations.

The buildings of Manorbeer Castle, as they at present exist, seem to have consisted of a large oblong court with a gatehouse at the upper end, or entrance, and the the residence of the family at the lower end, next to the sea. They do not seem to have comprehended a keep, probably called ; and the appearance of the whole building though manifestly capable of defence is not as strong as that of Carew, or Pembroke. The character of the architecture is remarkably plain throughout; we find none of the enrichments so much admired at Carew or Caerphilly. It seems to have been constructed by the family to whom it belonged, more with a view to convenience and safety, than with any vain object of an enormous display of feudal power. Notwithstanding this, the general effect, from the variety of outline, the irregularity of plan, and the numerous contrivances for adapting the building to the formation of the ground; are exceeding picturesque and striking. On the western side of the approach and in advance of the ditch and gateway, are to be observed some buildings which were probably the stables, and which are pierced with numerous series of triangular holes, each formed of three stones , most probably intended to afford air. Over the foss, which may have had water in it at some time, or another was a drawbridge; and frowning above this , stood and still stands, the great gate-house,. Within the gatehouse as indeed in many other parts of the castle, will be observed the plain pointed vaults,without ribs, which characterize nearly all the medieaval buildings of South wales.

Along the eastern side of the court runs minor buildings; and along the northern and western were continued the series of battlemented walls, supported on one face by a remarkable row of square projections, pierced for a passage.

In the lodging part of the castle may be observed the great Hall, in excellent preservation, with its simple vaulted roof – apartments of various kind all vaulted in the same way, connected with it ; and below, on the ground floor, the vast kitchen, a gloomy place but capable of roasting oxen whole, upon occasion, and always of doing justice to the hospitable inclinations of the lord of the domain. The circular chimney shafts, so remarkable in the cottages of the Castlemartin Hundred occur in this part of the edifice; and, if they are of the same date as the rest of it, give direct evidence as to the ancient existence of many of the cottages themselves.

The Castle of Manorbier has its characteristics. The walls of Manorbier leave a lasting impression of pleasure from their chaste simplicity; This will particularly strike the eye with respect to that side which faces the church. There, the embattled wall is about 200 feet long, and is terminated at either extremity by a tower, one of which is a round Norman structure, about twenty four feet in diameter; the other follows the pattern of all church towers of this district, which are square and surmounted by an embattled parapet. The peculiarity of this tower, however consists in the parapet, each face of which as usual, rests upon a corbel table, being five or six times as deep as the embrasures, which gives it a very symmetrical effect, whereas the parapets of most of the church towers are not more in general than double their depth. This tower also enlarges, or batters out at the base. The masonry of it seems as good as if built yesterday.

A sally port led out on the southern face towards the sea, and might have been of frequent use, if the water came nearer the castle than is now the case.

There were, no doubt, external defences to this castle upon a large scale , but they have been so demolished that it is difficult to ascertain their precise extent and designation. Several round low flanking towers still exist in and around the walls. One round building on the opposite side of what was once the “pond” answered the purpose of a pigeon house, being pieced with pigeon holes throughout internally.

Manorbere Acc to J R Cobb Arch Camb 1880

The nave of the Church is Norman, as is evidenced by the yet existing remains of a light above the most eastern nave arch on the south side, having a red stencil pattern on the jambs; and by the remains of a narrow chancel arch with stone seat facing the altar on the south side of it, existing up to 1866. The first short north transept, probably Early English, appears to have been built at the same time as the tower. It was afterwards extended as a chantry chapel for the DeBarri, whose mailed effigy lay under the low arch at the north end until about 1780. All that remains of the first is the gable. Shortly after was the north aisle; having its own altar, rood-loft, door and bell-cote; probably, as the church of the people, the monks taking the rest. The south transept and the chancel had Perpendicular lights previous to 1866. The chancel is built on older foundations, probably Norman, of a very different orientation. Afterwards the nave and north aisle were lengthened, and the porch and south aisle built, and the oriel added to the monastery.

The date of the effigy ought to be pretty well defined. The knight wears mail with goaded spurs and a sleeveless surcoat, but has small plates on the front of his crossed legs. 1325 has been named on high authority; but it is thought he should rank not very much after the Carew and Cheriton examples, - fruits of the Crusade preached by Giraldus. And the date of the buckle or mask terminating the hood on the door in the north aisle, leading to the rood-loft by steps in the thickness of the wall, cannot be much later than 1300. Now this aisle must have been built after the chantry, as an external light of the chantry now looks into it; and the chantry was clearly built after the tower, as part of the latter is broken down to receive the former.

The tower is a good example of the corbelled Pembrokeshire vaulted tower of the class without spiral stairs. Access could only be gained by the wondrous rood-loft arrangement, or by ladder, which was probably kept on the stone crook, and drawn in on emergency. These towers are commonly put down to the time of William de Valence (1250 – 96), and the facts above stated would shew that this tower cannot be much later.

There can be no doubt but that the Norman church and every succeeding part was plastered throughout. The ribs in the chantry chapel are coarse rubble and the arches are simple holes in the external walls of the Norman nave. We are told by Sir George Duckett that the advowson was given by John de Barri in 1301, to the Priory at Pembroke, and this may account for the conventual buildings on the south side of the church. The advowson now belongs to Christ College, Cambridge.

Now one can scarcely doubt that the square south-west tower of the castle, as originally built, was contemporaneous with, if not built by the same hands as, the church tower. It is altogether, before it was raised, similar in design, execution, and appearance, and it was built at a time when men were prodigal in building.

But it is manifestly built over the south curtain wall before the parapet was last raised, as the masonry of the tower can be seen inside the tower, and beyond; and the tower was subsequently raised, apparently in Edwardian times as will be again shewn.

The curtain wall was built over older foundations yet remaining, which range with, and appear to have formed part of, the existing hall; and over these foundations is built the lower chapel of crypt, then unvaulted (of probably about the same date as Giraldus' nomination to the bishopric), which again was altered and vaulted to carry the upper chapel, which shows enrichments scarcely later than 1300.

Again, the vaults under the hall, which look Edwardian, stop up, and were demonstrably built after, a plain round headed, Norman-looking, internal doorway leading to the hall basement; and they lower the head-way of a like external doorway having a bolt-hole 10ft deep, and no portcullis; while in the hall itself is one circular-headed doorway stopped by a fourteenth century arch built under it, and another still leading to the stairs of access; and in the adjoining upper chamber is a small light with enormous splay as Norman-looking as it is possible to be without moulding, and a corresponding garderobe. And in the vault leading to the Watergate, also apparently Edwardian, clearly took the place of a wooden floor supported by vast beams very close together, which, with the angular-headed side door have a very early look. And these buildings, as before said, range and seem contemporaneous with the old foundations which pass under the first chapel and under the curtain wall, which exists intact right through the square tower, which corresponds with the church tower and which was certainly built before the chantry chapel and the south aisle of the church, of defined Early English work.

Moreover, the building containing the hall has a square ponderous look, without buttresses, corresponding with Norman notions. It is approached, as usual by external stairs leading to a first floor; and there is nothing about it suggestive of a later period, - that is not an obvious insertion of addition,- while the evidence afforded by the doorways, blocked at a later but defined date, seems very clear. And it was in this building were found the twelfth century horsebone draughtman and the ecclesiastical gold ring, which had apparently been lost, and covered by rubbish, before the fire, of which there are abundant proofs, had deposited a further layer of 8ft more.

The square tower adjoining the gate-tower on the north, of which one angle has perished is a very remarkable construction. Though 40 ft high, it had only two chambers – a basement without any lights, and a first floor 20ft high with only 2 narrow oeillets entered by the round – headed arch of long thin stones approached by external stairs, wooden floors with a wooden roof, and apparently a wooden rampart, on which men could stand to serve the crenelles. This tower and the square building at the lower end of the yard look Norman, and they are both apparently anterior to the first wall; and the first wall with circular headed gateway with portcullis (but no gate tower), with bastion tower at the north east angle, far lower than at present, and the present round tower at the south east angle clearly existed before the south west square tower before it was raised; and which has been before suggested as coeval with the church tower and almost certainly before the lower chapel of 1220 or thereabouts. The first gate tower afterwards built outside the gateway was only a vault with ramparts and slits which are now plainly visible outside and in. Afterwards were added the upper chambers; and it is these which have the corbel-table and chimney and internal fireplace, all looking Edwardian, but which are possibly Valencian.

The north-east curtain wall has been raised four times; the north-west three times. It is the last of these which carries the Edwardian battlements, and is demonstrably later than the adjacent corbel tabled buildings; and even the last have long merlons, while the covered rampart leading to the gate tower, the upper additions to the square tower and its approach, and the addition to the hall building and the chapel, all have heavy unrough battlements with no slits in the merlon, and it is these which give the building its present Edwardian look.

The double lancets of the round tower upper chambers appear to be alterations probably of the date of the upper chapel, as each mullion has a piece of free-stone built in. Originally they were probably only slits like those remaining. With this exception and a renewal and subsequent alteration of the parapet, this tower exists as it was built, it is believed early in the 12 century, and as sound as when built. If fairly treated it may last another 700 years, as it shews no elements of decay whatever.

Manorbier " The castle called Maenor Pyrr, that is, the Castle. mansion of Pyrrus, who also possessed the island of Chalvey, which the Welsh call Inys Pyrr, or the island of Pyrrus, is distant about three miles from Penbroch. It is excellently well defended by turrets and bulwarks, and is situated on the summit of a hill extending on the western side towards the seaport, having on the northern and southern sides a fine fishpond under its walls, as conspicuous for its grand appearance as for the depth of its waters, and a beautiful orchard on the same side, enclosed on one part by a vineyard, and on the other by a wood, remarkable for the projection of its rocks and the height of its hazel trees. On the right hand of the promontory, between the castle and the church, near the site of a very large lake and mill, a rivulet of never-failing water flows through a valley, rendered sandy by the violence of the winds. Towards the west, the Severn Sea, bending its course to Ireland, enters a hollow bay at some distance from the castle Demetia, therefore, with its seven cantreds, is the most beautiful, as well as the most powerful, district of Wales; Penbroch, the finest part of the province of Demetia; and the place I have just described, the most delightful part of Penbroch. It is evident, therefore, that Maenor Pirr is the pleasantest spot in Wales; and the author may be pardoned for having thus extolled his native soil, his genial territory, with a profusion of praise and admiration." So writes Gerald de Barri, known to his contemporaries as Giraldus Cambrensis. This priest, a personal friend of Henry II. and tutor to Prince John, was a critic of the Welsh church, an upholder of the Roman tradition, a crusading missionary, and leading writer of his day (1146 to 1223). His father, William de Barri, had married Angharad, daughter of Nest and Gerald de Windsor, who brought Manorbier as dower. Probably some of the turrets and bulwarks mentioned by Giraldus are standing now; the fishpond is in part a marshy swamp, beyond which is an ancient dovecot or columbarium, orchard and vineyard are no more, but hanging woods still crown the rocks on the opposite side of the valley, where high hazels grew in the 12th and 13th centuries. Lake and mill are gone, but the stream flows still with its never-failing supply; and when the stranger first sees the fine storm-weathered fortress, standing rock-planted, in the quiet valley facing the Severn Sea, he will pardon Gerald for his enthusiastic admiration of his native place. Manorbier Castle consists of an oblong court surrounded by buildings. A gatehouse guards the entrance; the dwelling rooms are opposite on the seaward side of the quadrangle; here is a ruined chapel with fireplace having Early Gothic capitals and shafts. A flight of outside steps leads to these rooms; in the hall a 12th century horse-bone draughtsman and an ecclesiastical gold ring were found. Many apartments are vaulted with plain groined roofs without ribs. In the court is a well, at the bottom of which some curious leaden bolts resembling clock-weights were discovered; and half-way down was an addit for concealment of smuggled goods. Hard by is a sunken fireplace to hold a cauldron; guide books tell us this was formerly used to boil up lead to provide a warm welcome for the enemy at the gate. There is no central keep, but the "Bull Tower," a circular building to the left of the entrance as one goes in, is similar in construction to Pembroke donjon, and was possibly intended for the same purpose. On the right of the entrance is a square tower with round-headed openings which some consider Norman. Curious triangular loopholes may be noticed, so shaped for the convenience of archers using the cross-bow similar loops occur in the ruins at Scotsborough, near Tenby. The gatehouse, with its portcullis, is bounded by a moat; there are many remains of outer defence.

Manorbier, the most charming of castles, has unfortunately very little personal interest beyond the fact that it was the birthplace of Giraldus Cambrensis. It remained the home of the Barris until Avicia, the widowed heiress, died without issue in 1358. This branch of the family was undistinguished in peace as in war; even the armoured knight, whose effigy is so marked a feature of the church, is chiefly remembered as litigant in an uninteresting law-suit. When Avicia died King Edward III., as feudal lord, granted the great estate to William de Windsor, who claimed as heir of Gerald de Windsor, but his real interest lay in the fact that he had married Alice Ferrers, King Edward's favourite. The lordship, including the castle, was vested in the de Windsor family until Henry V.'s time, when it was taken up as Crown land. Then for a period of nearly 200 years the estate was let on leases to various tenants until Queen Elizabeth sold manor and castle to Thomas Bowen, of Trefloyne. This property passed by marriage to the Philipps' family, and still forms part of the Picton estate. During the days of non-resident tenants the castle fell into ruin. Leland (1538 to 1544) states in his journal that "Mansio Pirrhi is now communely cawllled Manober. . . . The Ruines of Pirrhus Castel there; many walles yet standing hole do openly appere." It was garrisoned for the King in the Civil War without important result to either side.

The late Mr. J. R. Cobb rented the castle from Sir Charles Philipps, excavated and cleared the rubbish from the interior of the building, and fitted up that portion adjoining the entrance as a Summer dwelling; this is now occupied by Mr. Elliott Stock.

Acc/to Hamilton Thompsons Mil. Arch. to England, 207).

Manorbier Castle contains an interesting example of the enlargement of domestic buildings, with a solar block at either end of the hall. The castle stands on rising ground in a deep valley, about half a mile from the sea. The inner ward of castle proper is surrounded by a curtain, with a gatehouse in the east wall. The dwelling-house is upon the west side of the ward, at the end opposite the main entrance and consists of two distinct portions. The earlier consists of a first-floor and great chamber above cellars.

There was a floor above the great chamber, probably forming a bower for the ladies of the household, the hall corresponding in height to these two upper stages. The present entrance to the Hall is in the side wall at the end next the great chamber, and was probably made, with the outer stairs against the wall, in the 13th century. The hall with its adjacent buildings appears to be originally of the later part of the 12th century: the cellars below have semicircular barrel vaults. In the second half of the 13th century a new block of buildings was made at the opposite or south end of the hall. It was now probably that the new entrance was made. The position of the dais seems to have been reversed, and a window in the south end wall of the hall blocked by a fireplace. Behind this wall, and entered by a doorway in its west end, was the new great chamber, a long narrow building with its axis at right angles to that of the hall, and with a floor above. At each end of the south wall of this apartment is a passage. That at the west end passes along the line of the curtain to a tower which projects at the south-west angle of the castle: the passage is still roofed with flat slabs on continuous corbelling, and is well lighted by loops in the curtain. The other passage, at the south-east corner of the great chamber, forms a lobby to a large chapel which was built across the southwest angle of the ward, so that a small triangular yard was left between it and the curtain. There is a separate outer stair to the chapel, placed, like the stair to the hall at right angles to the wall. The whole group of buildings, with its two outer stairs, is unexcelled for picturesqueness in any castle".

It is somewhat strange that as important a medieval castle, as Manorbier unquestionably is, should possess hardly any military history. It is best known to archaeologists as the birthplace of the important chronicler Giraldus Cambrensis. He describes the castle of his youth as "- excellently well defended by turrets and bulwarks, situated on the summit of a hill extending on the western side towards the sea, having on the northern and southern sides a fine fish-pond under its walls and a beautiful orchard on the same side, enclosed on one part by a vineyard and on the other by a wood remarkable for the projection of its rocks and the height of its hazel trees. On the right hand of the promontory, between the castle and the church near the site of a very large lake and mill, a rivulet of never failing water flows through the valley rendered sandy by the violence of the winds". (Itinerary through Wales ed Ll Williams 1908 p 85)

Seeing that the above description was written about the year 1200, and that it pictures a state of things which existed perhaps half a century earlier, it is manifest that the present castle of Manorbier is not that within whose walls the future arch-deacon of Brecon was born, and whose beauties he has so enthusiastically voiced. The present structure is probably not earlier than the period 1275-1325, in which case the builder must have been John de Barri, who granted the advowson of the parish church to the priory of Monckton (Pembroke) and that of the church of Penally to the priory of Aconbury, and whose inquisition post-mortem is dated the 17th Edw. II.

Interior Manorbier Castle

The late Mr. J. R. Cobb, who resided within the castle for some years, and contributed an excellent article on it to Arch. Cambrensis for 1880 (IV, Id 286) has made it clear that the present castle is largely erected upon and has incorporated within its structure an earlier building. Mr. Cobb states: The curtain-wall was built over older foundations yet remaining, which range with, and appear s to have formed part of, the existing hall; and over these foundations is built the lower chapel or crypt, then unvaulted (of probably about the same date as Giraldus' nomination to the bishopric), which again was altered and vaulted to carry the upper chapel, which shows enrichments scarcely later than 1300.

Again, the vaults under the hall, which look Edwardian, stop up, and were demonstrably built after, a plain, round-headed, Norman-looking internal doorway leading to the hall basement; and they a lower the headway of a like external doorway having a bolt-hole 10 feet deep and no portcullis; while in the hall itself is one circular-headed door stopped by a 14th century arch built under it and another still leading to the stairs of access; and in the adjoining chamber is a small light with enormous spay as Norman looking as it is possible to be without moulding and a corresponding garderobe.

And the vault leading to the Watergate, also apparently Edwardian, clearly took the place of a wooded floor supported by vast beams very close together, which, with the angular-headed side-door, have a very early look. And these buildings, as before said, range and seem contemporaneous with the old foundations which pass under the first chapel and under the curtain-wall, which exist intact right through the square tower, which corresponds with the church tower, and which was certainly built before the chantry, chapel and the south aisle of the church, of defined Early English work.

Moreover, the building containing the hall has a square ponderous look, without buttresses corresponding with Norman notions. It is approached, as usual, by external stairs leading to the first floor; and there is nothing about it suggestive of a later period - that is, not an obvious insertion and addition - while the evidence afforded by the doorways, blocked at a later but defined date, seems very clear. And it was in this building were found the 12th-century horse bone draughtsman and the ecclesiastical gold ring, which had apparently been lost, and covered by rubbish, before the fire, of which there are abundant proofs, had deposited a further layer of 8 feet more.

The square tower adjoining the gate-tower on the north, of which one angle has perished, is a very remarkable construction. Though 40 feet high, it had only two chambers - a basement without light, and a first floor, 20 feet high, with only two narrow slits, entered by the round-headed arch of long, thin, stones, approached by external stairs, wooden floors, with a wooden roof, and apparently a wooden rampart, on which the men could stand to serve the crenelles. This tower and the square building at the lower end of the yard look Norman and have, as before shown Norman characteristics, and they are both apparently anterior to the first wall; and the first wall, with circular-headed gateway with portcullis (but no gate-tower), with bastion-tower at the north-west angle far lower than at present, and the present round tower at the south-east angle, clearly existed before the south-west square tower, before it was raised; and which has been before suggested as coeval with the church tower, and almost certainly before the lower chapel of 1220 or thereabouts. The first gate-tower afterwards built outside the gateway was only a vault with ramparts and slits, which are now plainly visible outside and in. Afterwards were added the upper chambers; and it is these which have the corbel-table and chimney and internal fireplace, all looking Edwardian, but which are possibly Valencian.

The north-east curtain-wall has been raised four times; the north-west, three times. It is the last of these which carries the Edwardian bêtise, and is demonstrably later than the adjacent corbel-tabled buildings; and even the last have long merlons, while the covered rampart leading to the gate-tower, while upper addition to the square tower and its approach, and the addition to the hall building and the chapel, all have heavy unwrought battlements with no slits in the merlon, and it is these which give the building its present Edwardian look.

With singular good fortune the external walls of Manorbier have been preserved in much of their pristine condition, but the interior buildings, especially the portions allotted to household operations, have been ruthlessly swept away to make room for similar but more convenient domestic arrangements.

The inner courtyard consists of a spacious piece of ground in shape rectangular the northern side of which is occupied by the entrance towers while the southern end is taken up by the large chapel and some of the residential apartments. The Chapel reached from the courtyard by an external stone staircase is an oblong vaulted chamber 35ft by 17 ft. Within the chapel and to the left of the entrance is a stoup recess. At the west end is a doorway opening on a fine apartment which was probably the hall or an anteroom to it and a few feet away on the same side, is a stairway to rooms above. Sometime in the 16th century the chapel became a living room; a fine fireplace was inserted about midway along the south wall, and the east window, which may have been a single lancet or, perhaps, a group of lancets, was removed, a well-proportioned Tudor window taking its place. The other lights consisted of single lancets. There are indications of colour ornament on the walls and splay of one of the windows, but no appearance of figures.

Though history is entirely silent on the part played by the castle during the middle ages and 17th century civil wars it is fairly certain that it was brought into condition to engage in the latter struggle; but it does not appear that it was subjected to artillery fire. Perhaps the owners or residents, whoever they were, took warning by the fate of Carew and thought discretion the better part of valour. Mr. Cobb well observes: "No other place shows what I conceive to be Parliamentary-works so plainly or on so well-defined a plan, yet there is no mention of the place being garrisoned in the papers of the time: it is to this period the lead bolts found in the well are considered to belong." It is also highly probable that the moat in front of the north entrance assumed its present appearance, following much the same method of defence as that adopted at Carew. - Visited, 3rd June, 1922.

Gerald the Welshman's birthplace and favourite place still has the feel of the Middle Ages about it. The castle is delightful, looking more like a crusader fortress than an Anglo-Norman stronghold. The bay, with its beach, sand dunes and red cliffs, is on an intimate scale, and parts of the church are even older than the castle. Well worth a visit.

Acc/to Francis Jones.

Normally this building, which is mainly a ruin, would not be within the scope of this work but as parts of it have been restored to make it once again a family home then it qualifies on these grounds for inclusion.

Fenton described Manorbier as 'the most perfect residence of an old Norman who is said to have founded Manor with all its appendages; church, mill, dove-house, ponds, park and grove, still to be traced'.

It looks today much as depicted by Samuel and Nathaniel Buck in 1740. Nothing much has been added to the building since about 1300 except making part of it habitable again. The birthplace the Giraldus de Barri (c. 1146 c. 1220), otherwise known as Giraldus Cambrensis or, more popularly, Gerald of Wales. Gerald was a grandson of Odo de Barri, a bier. His father, William de Barri, married Angharad, daughter of another Norman, Gerald de Windsor and grand-daughter of Rhys ap Tewdwr (d. 1093), Prince of South Wales.

Gerald wrote (inter alia) The journey through Wales and The Description of Wales. Both these, written in Latin, are very readable in the late Professor Lewis Thorpe's translation.

Gerald waxes lyrical when describing his birthplace with lavish praise.

The de Barri family and their descendants occupied Manorbier for about 200 years, their connexion ending in 1399 when the castle and lands were confiscated by Henry IV. Thereafter the castle changed hands several times but by the late 1530's it was already in ruins with no one living there. Cromwell's soldiers seized Manorbier in the Civil War but it was not slighted or besieged. The castle does not have a keep and is built around a large courtyard with a surviving round tower and a gatehouse.

Cromlech Acc/to Rev Gilbert N Smith

Climbing the rock on the left hand side away from the castle about high water mark, a narrow path conducts us to a cromlech situated near the verge of the cliff. This memorial of as distant era has three supports, from one of which it has slipped, and now inclines to the south. The supported stone is about nineteen feet long and sixteen broad.

1865 Acc to Arch Camb

On the south eastern side of the little cove at Manorbeer, opposite to the castle, and about half a mile southwest from the church, is to be seen the cromlech which has already been noticed in our

Journal, but is now more accurately delineated. It is curious from its position, because instead of lying on an elevated or bare piece of ground, it is just under a ridge of rocks, as if placed there for greater concealment. In this respect it resembles the cromlech near Llanwnda, on Pen Caer. The cause in each of these cases has, no doubt, been the convenience of using large slabs from the adjoining, or rather overhanging, cliffs by sliding and propelling them downwards instead of transporting them to a distance. The interment of the chieftan, in each instance was probably so far influenced by the nature of the locality; and it may be imagined that each of these cromlechs was raised for receiving the remains of someone who had fallen, in a foray of raid, very near to the spot itself. Perhaps some leader of predatory bands landing from vessels to sack and destroy; perhaps some native chief killed while resisting an incursion of this kind, may here have been laid to rest. Both at Manorbeer and Llanwnda the cap stone has evidently been removed only a short distance from its original site, particularly in the former instance; where its present position might be deemed accidental, were it not for the supporters being placed transversely, evidencing the intervention of manual force. Enveloping carneddau can hardly be said to have existed in either case; because, first of all, there is no trace of any carnedd properly so called; nor can we well conceive the stones, if there had been one, to have been removed for any building purposes, when all around the whole region constitutes a quarry of stony fragments of every size and shape. The sepulchral chamber was no doubt, made secure in some way of other; and each of these cromlechs deserves special attention to verify this point.

The singular beauty and romantic wildness of the little bay at Manorbeer is another distinguishing "accidental" of this cromlech; while not far above it, in the hill, opens one of those yawning chasms going right down through the vertical strata to the sea beneath, which are some of the most remarkable features of the district

This cromlech stands on the extreme verge of Manorbier Bay about half a mile southwest of the medieval castle. The Capstone has an overall length of 15 ft breadth of 9 ft and thickness varying from 1 1/2 ft to 2 ft; it originally rested upon three short supports but one has fallen beneath it.

Adjoining and above the capstone is a ledge of limestone similar to it; to which in all probability the capstone once belonged.

Norchard Beacon

This is a tumulus which is placed at b.m. 337 on the summit line of the high ground called the Ridgeway, which runs diagonally across the Tenby-Castlemartin peninsula. It was opened in 1851 (Arch. Camb., II, ii, 291, ill.), but nothing was discovered to mark the mound as sepulchral. Since that date it has been much altered. There is, however, no record of any further systematic examination of it having been attempted. It has a present height of about 5 feet.—Visited, 31st May, 1922.

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 41 S.W.; lat. 51° 39' 59", long. 4° 47' 28").

About 300 yards west of Norchard Beacon is a group of three tumuli now about 5 feet in height and 180 feet in diameter at the level. The middle mound was examined on the same occasion as Orchard Beacon. A stone grave 9 feet long was disclosed, and within it a skeleton at full length. The body had been laid east and west, the head being to the west. At a later period another of these mounds was opened, when a plain urn, 6 inches in height, now in the Tenby Museum, was discovered. Two other urns were also found, but their present location is unknown (Pem. Arch. Survey). There is also in the Tenby Museum a rubber or pounder stone from the Ridgeway but whether from any of these tumuli is not stated. — Visited, 14th April, 1915.

Old Castle.

This earthwork has suffered much and not least from the military activities of the recent war. It was visited in 1871 by Lieut. Col. W. Ll. Morgan, R.E., SF.S.A., a retired Royal Commissioner, whose description of it is as follows:-

"A natural hollow running from sea to sea cuts off a small promontory from the main line, which is been turned into a fortress by a series of fortifications on the southern slopes of the hollow. The eastern end of the promontory ridge is cut off from the remainder by a small natural ravine at right angles to the hollow, which has been utilised as a roadway. The eastern side of the ravine, flanking the roadway, has been scarped, this scarping - 12 feet high - turns at right angles along the side of the hill for 90 yards, after which it descends the slope as a bank and ditch for 60 yards and terminates in a small inlet at the eastern end of the hollow. Thirty feet in front is a second bank and ditch with a small counterscarp bank beyond. There are signs of scarping of the hillside in front of the scarping mentioned above, but they are very indistinct. The western side of the ravine is taken up by a rectangular-shaped enclosure, which is divided from the western portion of the Promontory ridge by a second and smaller ravine.

This work was necessary on account of the high ground on the edge of the cliff. The western portion of the ridge is taken up by a possible out-work, with two banks on the side of the hill, but it is doubtful if they can be considered as fortifications. The hut circles are numerous and perfect.

Skomer Camp.

A promontory camp, situated half a mile due south of the village of Lydstep, not shown on the Ord. sheets. The earthwork is defended on three sides by steep and perpendicular cliffs, and on the land side by a massive rampart and ditch which have partially disappeared. The bank has suffered from exposure this bleak spot; it is at its best on the west, where it rises 10 feet and falls 80 feet a 9 feet ditch; it has a present length of about 100 feet. The entrance the enclosure was at the north-eastern angle. The interior is rocky and barren.

East Moor.

East Moor was the home of the Lorts in the 17th century near it is another farmstead called West Moor. Sampson Lort, second son of Henry Lort of Stackpole Court, established himself at East Moor. Like his father he served on both sides during the Civil War. His first wife Olive was a daughter of Sir John Philipps of Picton. She died in 1637, and four years later Sampson married Lettice, daughter of Thomas ap Rhys of Rickeston (Brawdy) and Scotsborough. He was High Sheriff in 1650, and died in 1667. His only son, Thomas Lort succeeded to East Moor; he married Elizabeth White of Henllan, but died without issue. A few references have been found to East Moor. In 1670 Thomas Lort was assessed at seven hearths, indicating it to have been a commodious residence.

An inventory of the possessions of Thomas, compiled in 1687 mentions the following rooms in East Moor - hall, the little room within the hall, the little parlour, chamber over the outward kitchen, 'another little room', closet, little room over the entry, chamber over the kitchen, closet within the said chamber, buttery, kitchen, outer kitchen, larder, dairy, and outhouses.

Over a hundred years later, Fenton wrote in 1811 - 'Turn to the left to see Moor, one of the chief mansions of this district about two hundred years ago, of a very irregular form with many ruinous and extensive out-buildings, once entered by a gateway now stopped up, leading to a porter's lodge. With very few exceptions, this may serve as a model of the style of building their houses among the great of that era in this country which invariably appears to have been surrounded by a high court-wall having a large arched gateway, and essentially differing from the form of the principal houses of the same date, in the upper part of the country.

Commissioners of Ancient Monuments who visited the site in 1923 state that in the farmyard to the West of the modern house were the ruins of a small E-shaped two-storied dwelling house 'of no architectural importance'; in its original state it may have consisted of a hall, with North and South wings, and central porch, but most of the features had disappeared leaving only the hall which had been altered almost out of recognition. After the departure of the Lorts the house changed

The Land Tax of 1786 names four messuages, each called East Moor, as follows:

- (1) Sir Hugh Owen, owner, Peter Gwyther tenant, assessed at £3.18. 0.
- (2) Peter Gwyther, owner-occupier, assessed at 7s.5d.
- (3) Thomas Voyle, owner, Peter Gwyther tenant, assessed at 14s
- (4) George Leach, owner, Peter Gwyther, tenant, assessed at 14s 6d.

From this it seems that the dwelling of the Lorts was (1).

The Pembrokeshire Archaeological Survey (1896-1907) states that in the farmyard of East Moor is an ancient house now used for farm buildings, probably the dwelling of Sampson Lort.

Norchard. Manorbier.

Just south of The Ridgeway, and north of Lydstep. Formerly a commodious residence of an ancient landowning family, built over a continuous vault. It is now a farmhouse. The earliest residence of which we have any record was that of Looney, also spelled as Lymy and Lang. Thomas Looney left no sons and Norchard passed to his daughter and heiress Isabel who married Lawrence Marychurch who settled at his wife's home. Between 1400 and 1600, eleven generations of his descendants lived at Norchard. The origin of the family is unknown, and the name was often rendered as St.

Marychurch by Dwnn. Five of the name served as Mayors of Tenby in the period 1501-1526. When Dwnn recorded the pedigree and arms on 10 November 1591, John Marychurch signed, and gave five shillings to the herald for his travail.

The family remained at Norchard until the latter half of the 19th century. In 1670 William Marychurch was assessed at seven hearths for Norchard, and Maud Marychurch and Francis Marychurch were each assessed at one hearth apiece. The male line seems to have failed shortly afterwards, and when Mary Marychurch married on 1673, John Williams of Gumfreston, and Pant Howel (Carms), who then settled at Norchard which passed to Mary's descendants.

Mrs. Mary Williams had two daughters who married two brothers - Mary to John Meyrick (d. 1732), and Alice who married Francis Meyrick (d. 1741) In 1786 Norchard was owned by John Meyrick Esq. (of Bush), with Nicholas Roch as tenant. Thereafter Norchard was farmed by tenants.

NOTE: A family of Marychurch lived in Haverfordwest from the 17th century, where they were successful tradesmen, mercers and glovers. William Marychurch, a Royalist, was elected Mayor of the town in 1653, but was fined and ousted from the post at a suite in Haberdashers Hall, London. In 1694 William Marychurch was Sheriff of Haverfordwest, and Mayor in 1694; in 1829 Joseph Marychurch was town sheriff, and in 1865, Mayor of the town. The family also owned property at Llawhaden.

The Palace, or the Palace of Arms.

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 44 N.W. lat. 51° 39' 0" long. 4° 46' 8").

In the village of Lydstep, a little way from the north side of the Tenby to Manorbier high-road, stand the ruins (long used as a quarry) of a house known locally as the Palace, or the Palace of Arms.

Whilst many of its features existed and were identifiable, it was described and illustrated in Arch. Camb., 1867, III, xiii, 336 where it is stated to have been sometimes called a hunting-seat of bishop Gower of St David's, but no authority for the statement is given. As shown by the then existing foundations and walls, the building had a frontage of about 22 yards. The lower part contained several vaulted rooms, most of which were without windows or fireplaces and probably were cellars. (5 July 2013 being put up for sale by Pembrokeshire County Council – grade 1 listed building)

On the opposite side of the road was a second, and in some respects a similar house, or possibly two distinct houses, of which no traces now remain. - visited 19th May, 1922.

Arch. Camb., 1881, IV, xii, 159.

Laws said that he was told by his nurse, a native of Lydstep that according to traditional usage the house on the north side of the road was "The Palace" and that on the south side "The Place of Arms".

There is also the legend that Aircol Llawhir a 4c king had his palace at Lydstep.

The Parish Church Manorbier

The church consists of the following: chancel (28 feet by 17) north transept (22 feet by 11 feet), south transept (19 feet by 15 feet) Nave (68 feet by 15 feet), north aisle (58 feet by 15 feet), south aisle, a lean-to (52 feet by 7 feet), tower on north side (15 feet square), south porch (8 feet by 8ft). The edifice is placed near the top of a steep hill about 200 feet above the bottom level of the valley which separates it from the medieval castle on the opposite slope, a small strip of level ground having doubtless been widened to accommodate the edifice.

The oldest part of the church is the nave and a single small round headed light above the present south arcade, shows that this original church dates from Norman period, probably mid 12c., the window is the only remaining one of what was probably a row of small lights that were placed high up in the exterior walls to catch as much of the daylight as possible. The Norman church may have consisted of chancel, transepts and nave of which the nave alone remains. About a century later the chancel and transepts were rebuilt and within another generation or two the north transept was clumsily enlarged to accommodate the tomb of one of the lords of the castle, usually supposed to have been John de Barri, who died c. 1324. It is also probable that the north aisle was added about the same period. The Norman windows in the south wall must have kept that side of the nave very dark, so that shortly after the burial of de Barri in the lengthened transept, it was determined to build a lean-to aisle to the nave by cutting a series of low arches in what had hitherto been the exterior south wall of the building; thus, by putting larger windows into the low wall of the new aisle, the original Norman lights became as it were a clear story to the enlarged building. The transepts are really side or mortuary chapels, and the aisles open upon them in a clumsy fashion. There is a squint from the south transept to the chancel. The comparatively small base measurement of the tower (15+ feet square), proportionately to its height, points to an earlier and less imposing feature than usually marks the ordinary 13th- century church of the county, and it is possible that had space permitted the course followed in the enlargement of Lawhaden church a more massive tower would have been erected at Manorbier. But at the latter, with the tower on the side sloping to the valley the ground would not admit of such enlargement, and it is probable that the original tower has had to do duty, through all restorations of church, upon its original site, and within its original dimensions. It is placed at the angle made by chancel and north transept. There are two fonts, one probably coeval with the Norman church, the other a plain octagonal basin (on a modern pillar), which may have been originally intended for less honourable uses.

Originates from Norman times with the Nave being the oldest part now standing. About 1250 the chancel and transepts were rebuilt, the chancel on a much older foundation but was greatly altered when the church was restored in 1865. Tower 1270. Barry Chapel added in 14c.

Giraldus Cambrensis, Gerald de Barri born 1146 or 1147 in Manorbier Castle records in his autobiography that as a boy (in 1153) he asked to be taken to the Church for safety during a fierce attack by the Welsh Princes on Tenby.

"The parish Church is that to which Giraldus aged 7 asked to be taken when the Welsh raided Tenby".

Steps lead down into it through a vaulted porch (note the medieval painting) as into a crypt. The huge walls of the Norman nave have been carved out, or so it seems, to form arcades to the fourteenth century aisles. The uninhibited intersections of the transept vaults cut the main vault of the nave at different levels. The sculptural character of the church must have been even stronger before the 1865 restoration [F Wehnert] when a much larger arch was cut in the chancel wall. Then the old rood screen and the Royal Arms were removed and the perpendicular east window changed for the present three light window. The tower has an unusual position in the angle between the chancel [rebuilt in the 13c] and the north transept. It was originally reached only by a ladder.

The earliest recorded Rector of Manorbier was Master Richard, Prior of Monkton in 1251.

Remains of Buildings in Churchyard.

Manorbier church was granted to the priory Monkton at Pembroke by Sir John de Barri in 1301 and a grange was established here, of which a few cottages are doubtless the survivors.

According to the census of religious buildings 1851 the parish had acreage of 3,493 acres and a total population of 698 of which 317 were male and 381 female.

The average congregations were given as 240 which meant that every seat in the church was full.

The accommodation had recently been augmented by the erection of a gallery and there was one service a Sunday but the incumbent was not resident.

..... The state of the churches in my district is now become so decent and in tolerable order that it is unnecessary for me to trouble your lordship with particulars. I wish I had as good an account to give of many of the vicarage houses. That of Nangle stands in most deplorable condition, next to it Mannerbier, St Twinnels and the vicarage at Stackpole want thorough repairs.

Manorbier acc/to Mrs Mary Mirehouse.

Fenton tells us that Manorbier Castle remained in the family of the De Barris (one of whom, William, married Angharad, daughter of Gerald de Windsor and Nesta; two of William's sons took part in the Invasion of Ireland under Strongbow in 1169) till the time of Henry IV, who granted by letters patent to John de Windsor the Manors of Manorbier, Penally, and Begelly; but they did not long remain with him, and changed into many hands during the wars of the Roses. Queen Elizabeth granted Manorbier to Thomas ap Owen of Trellyn (Trefloyne); his descendant, Thomas Bowen, married a daughter of Sir Erasmus Philipps of Picton, and dying without issue, it went through her to the House of Picton. Many of the freeholders' leases in Manorbier were for a certain rent and seven red roses,' speaking thus to us of the old Lancastrian days; but the castle ceased to be inhabited before the bitter struggle of the Parliamentary wars, thus coming down to us in more perfect preservation as an old Norman baronial residence than have some others.

The name Manor of Bere, or Pyr, is supposed by Fenton to be derived from a member of one of the oldest Welsh clans (Gwynardd), Pyr of Dywrain, or Pyr of the East; the old Welsh name for Caldy Island, Inys Pyr, points to the same. He ridicules as false the legend of the deadly struggle between a man and a bear, to which some trace the name (Man or Bear?), and which certainly sounds improbable

MANORBEER (MAENORBER), a parish in the hundred of Castlemartin, county of Pembroke South Wales, 4 miles (WSW.) from Tenby, containing 582 inhabitants. The name of this place is of very doubtful etymology: Giraldus Cambrensis, who was born here, calls it, in his Itinerary, Maenor Pyrr which he interprets "the mansion of Pyrrus," who, he says, also possessed the island of Caldey. According to Sir Richard Colt Hoare, the name literally signifies the manor of the lords, and appears to be derived from its occupation by the lords of Dyved, who were also proprietors of the neighbouring island of Caldey. By whom the castle was originally built has not been ascertained with any degree of accuracy: it probably owed its foundation to William de Barri, one of the Norman lords that accompanied Arnulph de Montgomery into Britain, and who married the granddaughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, Prince of South Wales. The castle and manor remained in the possession of that family till the 1st of Henry IV., when they were granted to John de Windsor, but afterwards reverting to the crown, they were, in consideration of a large sum of money, granted by letters patent to Thomas ab Owain of Trellyn, from whose family they passed by marriage into that of Philipps, the present proprietor. Giraldus, in his notices of this place, quaintly says, "Demetia is the most beautiful, as well as the most powerful, district in Wales; Pembroke, that is the present hundred of Castlemartin, the finest province in Demetia, and the place I have described (Maenorbeer) the most delightful part of Pembroke." The parish is situated on the small bay to which it gives name, in the Bristol channel, and within two miles to the south of the turnpike road leading from Tenby to Pembroke: it contains a moderate portion of good arable and pasture land in good cultivation, and a small tract of hilly and barren waste; and, with the exception of such as are employed in the limestone quarries, which are worked only to a small extent, the population is wholly engaged in agriculture. The stone obtained from these quarries is shipped in small vessels, and sent into Cardiganshire: at Lydstep Haven vessels of one hundred and thirty tons burden can ride in security. Some indications of coal have been observed on the estate of John Adams, Esq.; but the attempts to work it have not been attended with success. The sands on this part of the coast are fine, especially at Lydstep Haven, where they are well adapted for sea-bathing; and the beauty of its situation, and its convenient distance from Tenby, render this a favourite excursion from that watering-place. Within the limits of the parish are two small villages, called Jamestown and Manorbeer Newton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St. David's, rated in the king's books at £8 endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge, who are proprietors of the great tithes, which are now let on lease to John Adams, Esq., of Lydstep House. The church, dedicated to St. James, is an ancient and spacious structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower, and is in a rather dilapidated condition. Close to it, on the south side, is a large ancient edifice, which was in all probability connected with it, but its history is unknown: it may probably have been a chantry or grange, or even some distinct religious house. There are places of worship for Calvinistic and Primitive Methodists. Manorbeer castle, distinguished as the birthplace and for some time the residence of the celebrated Giraldus de Barri, better known as Giraldus Cambrensis, is still an object of interest and attraction. The remains occupy an elevated site above the small bay of Manorbeer, of which the castle had full command: they consist principally of portions of the state apartments, the windows of which faced a spacious court, the whole being enclosed with lofty embattled walls, of which the platforms are in some places still entire; the grand entrance, through a gateway flanked with two bastions, of which that on the north side has fallen down; two portcullises, and the moat, which may be distinctly traced. On Old-castle Point, to the east of Manorbeer bay, are the remains of an ancient encampment of small dimensions, probably of Danish origin. Silvester Giraldus de Barri, commonly called Giraldus Cambrensis, was born about the year 1146, and was educated under his uncle, then bishop of St. David's, who sent him to France for the completion of his studies. On his return to England he embraced holy orders, and rose rapidly to distinction in the church: he held successively the offices of legate in Wales to the archbishop of Canterbury, and Archdeacon of St David's, of which see he was afterwards elected Bishop; but the king, fearing to raise to that dignity a man of such talent and influence in the principality, and one so nearly allied to the native princes, his mother having been granddaughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, Prince of South Wales, refused to confirm his election. He attended Baldwin, Archbishop of Canterbury, on his mission to preach the crusades throughout Wales, and, during the absence of Richard I. in the Holy Land, was one of the members of the regency. Being again denied the bishopric of St. David's, to which he had been a second time elected, and in the hope of which he had successively refused divers other sees, and the archbishopric of Cashel, in Ireland, he retired from public office to the principality, where he spent the last seventeen years of his life, which he devoted entirely to literary pursuits: he died at St. David's, at the age of seventy-four, and was interred in the cathedral church of that place, where his monument still remains. His writings are numerous, and many of them are still extant; his Itinerary, by which he is best known, has been lately reprinted in quarto by Sir Richard Colt Hoare, Bart., with an elegant English version, accompanied with notes and a catalogue of his writings, with a reference to the several works in which they are preserved. The average annual expenditure for the maintenance of the poor amounts to £271. 19.

PARISH OF MANORBEER.—Village School.

On the 22nd of December I visited the above school—it was held in a school-room near the church. The room was very substantially built. The money was raised in part at a bazaar, and in part from the Vicar and landowners in the parish. The room is lighted by three glazed windows. The furniture consisted of desks round the room on the national system—one desk for the master, and one large one in the middle of the room, with benches, all in very good repair. The building was lofty, ceiled, and well ventilated. There was a comfortable fire in the room. The master was an intelligent man. He had been a tailor, but from ill health had been obliged to change his occupation. I heard the children read the second chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel—five of the class (which was composed chiefly of girls) read very well, and four others not at all ill. They answered my questions in Scripture history readily, and the answers in mental arithmetic, by one boy in particular, were very good; three could repeat their Catechism pretty well, but did not seem to understand what they were repeating. One of them said that his neighbour" as his father and mother. Could not tell what two things were to be learnt from the Ten Commandments. There were six learning to read and spell from Vyse's and Mavor's spelling-books, and three more in letters and monosyllables, which, with the eleven who read to me in the Testament, constituted the number present at the time of my visit. Labourers' wages in this parish averaged 7s. per week on their own finding; they were in general a sober and industrious class of men. There were two Dissenting chapels in the parish, one a Primitive-Methodist at Jameston and an Independent at Manorbier-Newton, but no Sunday-school held in either. DAVID LEWIS, Jameston School—on the 22nd of December I visited the above school. It was held in a room, part of a dwelling-house and lighted by one small glazed window about 10 inches square The furniture consisted of three small tables eight chairs, and two low benches. There was a culm fire in the room, and the steam arising from it when I entered was almost intolerable I examined some copy-books, and the writing, for children so young and with so few advantages was very fair. Five children read the 2nd chapter of Deuteronomy. One (a little girl) read pretty well; but all the boys very ill. The children were excessively ignorant rude, and ill-behaved. I could scarcely get a question answered. Knew who made the world - Did not know who Jesus Christ was. Had never heard of the Virgin Mary. Did not know how many Apostles there were. Had never heard of our Saviour coming on earth. The master here remarked that "it is something like remarkable that you reads, and hears sermons, and don't recollect nothing that you sees or hears".

Son of William de Barri and the lovely Angharad daughter of Nest wife of Gerald de Windsor, Daughter of Rhys ap Tewdwr prince of South Wales

Manorbier was "alarmed" during his boyhood, probably when Tenby was taken by the Welsh in 1153. He is reputed to have taken refuge in the Church. He was the youngest of four Brothers; two of which took part in the Anglo Norman conquest of Ireland. He began his studies under guidance of his Uncle David fitzGerald Bishop of St Davids, then St Peters Abbey, Gloucester and finally Paris.

John Marychurch of Manorbier was cited in the Star Chamber along with his Uncle Sir William Wogan of Wiston and his brothers in law Nicholas and Thomas Adams as defendants in a case of forcible imprisonment of John Master gentleman at Tenby.

1620's John Gwyther of Manorbier was said to have harboured a Catholic Priest.

1631 William Richards was the cleric at Manorbier -- he died there in 1675. The income of the Vicar was £8 per annum and he was regarded as comfortably off compared with many.

1678 The parsonage at Manorbier was regarded as being out of repair.

1721 Thomas Athoe was mayor of Tenby and was later hanged for murdering his nephew. "Journeying home to Manorbier one night from a troublesome day at the market in Tenby he murdered his nephew".

There had been family rivalry for a while and the dark and narrow bridge over the Ritec was too good an opportunity for settling the quarrel. His trial and execution brought a certain notoriety to the town as he was found innocent by a court in Pembroke and it took the Court of the Kings Bench in Westminster and a New Act of Parliament ordaining "that all murders or robberies committed in, on or about the borders of Wales should be triable in any county in England" to finally bring him to justice.

1762 a yeoman from Manorbier parish appeared before the Great Sessions of Pembrokeshire for stealing from the sloop "Two Partners" wrecked in Lydstep bay, the property of Llewelin Evan, mariner, of Newport parish.

1804 April - 47 ankers of Brandy were seized at Manorbier by the Tide-surveyor of Tenby and his crew.

1811 July Rev Sir Thomas Gery Cullum Bart in his diary, records - "of late years the Castle (of Manorbier) has been appropriated to smuggling, on a most daring scale. The person concerned having hired the castle of the farmer, and having built a house contiguous, used to fill the subterranean apartments and towers with spirits. A number of casks were soon discovered floating in the reservoir. At last, after several seizures, this illicit trade was put a stop to by Lord Cawdor, who was nearly killed in the attempt."

Giraldus Cambrensis Gerald De Barri --

generally called Cambrensis, was descended from an illustrious lineage, being the fourth son of de Barri William, by Angharad daughter of Nest daughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, prince of South Wales. He was born in the year 1146, at the castle of Maenor Pyr, in Pembrokeshire, and at an early age he showed such indications of literary talent and religious feeling, that his father determined to educate him for the church, and his uncle, David FitzGerald, then bishop of St David's undertook the charge. He continued under his care until his twentieth year, when he went to Paris, and remained there for three years, giving lectures on rhetoric and the belles lettres, and being pointed out by the doctors of the university as a pattern to the young men of his age. On returning to England about 1172, he entered holy orders, and soon obtained preferment, being appointed a Canon of Hereford, and rector of Chesterton, in Oxfordshire but his love for his native country induced him to settle in Wales, where he distinguished himself by his zeal for the church, and detected several abuses which prevailed in the diocese of St David's. Having stated his complaints to the archbishop of Canterbury, he was by him appointed his legate in Wales for the purpose of rectifying abuses. The archdeacon of Brecon having been deprived for his immorality, Giraldus was appointed to that archdeaconry, and on the death of his uncle, the Canons of St David's elected Giraldus to succeed him, which the King objected to with this high encomium, "that it was neither expedient nor necessary to elect too upright or active a man to the vacant see of St David's, as such a choice might prove detrimental to the cathedral church of Canterbury, or even to the crown of England." Giraldus then returned to Paris, where he distinguished himself by his eloquent declamation in the schools, and was offered the professorship of Canon Law in that university. After a residence of some duration he returned to Wales, and found the diocese of St David's in great confusion, and the bishop, Peter de Leia, compelled to leave his episcopal residence, owing to disputes which had arisen between him and the Welsh, upon this he was appointed administrator of the diocese. In 1185, he was selected by King Henry to be the preceptor of his son John, whom he accompanied to Ireland as secretary, and he was offered the bishoprics of Ferns and Leighlin, which he refused, as he did the archbishopric of Cashel, at a subsequent period. During his residence in Ireland, he was diligent in collecting materials for his two works, the Topography and Conquest of Ireland, which he completed after his return to Wales. In 1187, he accompanied Baldwin, in the celebrated tour through Wales, for the preaching of the Crusade, the most interesting result of which is to be found in his Itinerary, describing the country he traversed, and containing much interesting information respecting the manners of the Welsh, in that age. In 1189, Giraldus attended Henry to France, and on his return to England after the death of that monarch, he was deputed to regulate matters in Wales, where some disturbances had occurred, and King Richard appointed him coadjutor to William de Longchamp, in the regency of the Kingdom, on his departure to the holy land. Giraldus was next offered the bishoprics of Bangor and Llandaff, both of which he declined. He next resided at Lincoln for six years, where he devoted himself to the study of theology, and here wrote several of his works. In 1198, on the death of Peter de Leia, he was again elected by the chapter of St David's but the jealousy of the archbishop of Canterbury prevented his obtaining the favourite aim of his whole life Not willing to yield without a struggle, he went to Rome, and for five years he withstood the encroachment of the archbishop, failing however of success, he passed the remainder of his life in revising his numerous works, and when the bishopric was offered to him on dishonourable terms in 1215, he refused it, and he ended his distinguished career in 1220, at the age of 74, and was buried in the cathedral In whatever point of view we examine the character of this extraordinary man, whether as a scholar, a patriot, or a divine, he may justly be considered as one of the brightest luminaries of the twelfth century A catalogue of his works has been preserved, as drawn up by himself, but it is not complete, it contains nineteen different works 1, Chronographia et Cosmographia Metrica 2, Topo-graphia Hibernica 3, Expugnatio Hiberniae 4 De Legendis Sanctorum 5, Vita Sti Davidis 6, Vita Sti Caradoci 7, Vita Stiethelberti 8, Vita Sti Remigii 9, Vita Sti Hugonis 10, Liber de Omotionibus et Persecutionibus Gaufredi, Ebor Abpi 11 Symbo- lum Electorum 12, Liber Invectionum 10, Speculum Duorum Commonitorium et Consolatorium 14, Gemma Ecclesiastica 15, Itinerarium Cambriae 16, Cambriae Topographia 17, De Fidei Fructu, &c 18, De Principis Instructione 19, De Gestis Giraldi laboriosis In addition to these, it appears that he wrote also the Life of Henry II the Acts of King John, an English Chronicle, the Praises of Wales, and a metrical Epitome of his Cambrian Topography, besides several others of inferior interest His works relating to Ireland were published by Camden, at Frankfort, in 1602, and those having reference to Wales by Dr Powell, in 1585, and by Wharton, in his "Anglia Sacra," where may likewise be found his book "De Gestis Giraldi" The most valuable edition is that by Sir Richard Hoare, 4to London, 1806, who also published a translation with notes in two splendid 4to volumes in the same year This contains also a full memoir of his life, and an ample account of his works and the places where the different manuscripts are deposited Eminent Welshmen –R Williams 1852 Geraldus Summery

The Description of Wales

His first stay in France seems to have lasted till 1174, he then returned to Britain and was immediately given livings in England and Wales According to W L Williams he held the livings of Llanwnda, Tenby and Angle and afterwards the prebend of Mathry, the living of Chesterton in Oxfordshire, was also prebendary of Hereford, Canon of St David's and in 1175, when only 28 years old became Archdeacon of Brecon.

"We crossed the River Tywi in a boat and travelled to Carmarthen, leaving Llanstephan and Laugharne on the rocks by the seashore on our left These were the two castles which Rhys ap Gruffydd took by assault after the death of Henry II, the garrisons being forced to capitulate Rhys then ravaged the provinces of Pembroke and Rhos with fire and sword, completely devastating the whole neighbourhood and besieged Carmarthen, but failed to take it" Immediately after the death of Henry II in July 1189, Rhys ap Gruffydd attacked and captured the two castles of Laugharne and Llanstephan, ravaged Pembroke and Rhos and besieged Carmarthen, Gerald had been sent home from Normandy by Richard I to promote peace in Wales According to him he had some success Carmarthen is the site of a Hill fort of the Demetae known by the latinised Celtic name of Maridunum Under the Romans it was an important centre where many roads met In Gerald's day part of the Roman walls was still standing

"When we were travelling from Carmarthen to the Cistercian monastery called Whitland Whitland Abbey had been moved from Little Trefgarn near Haverfordwest C1151 the Archbishop was told by messengers of how a young Welsh, man, who was coming to meet him in all devotion , had been murdered on the way by his enemies He turned aside from the road, ordered the bloody corpse to be wrapped in his almoners cloak and with pious supplication commended the soul of the murdered youth to heaven The next day twelve archers from the nearby castle of St Clears, who had killed the young man, were signed with the Cross in Whitland as a punishment for their crime"

"The folk who live in the neighbourhood came from Flanders, for they had been sent there by Henry I to colonize the district" The Flemings seem to have come at various times, in 1105, 1107 and 1111 "They are a brave and robust people but very hostile to the Welsh, and in a perpetual state of conflict with them They are highly skilled in the wool trade, ready to work hard and face danger by land or sea in the pursuit of gain, and, as time and opportunity offer, prompt to turn their hand to the sword or the ploughshare"

p145

"A strange habit of these Flemings is that they boil the right shoulder blades of rams, but not roast them, strip off all the meat and, by examining them, foretell the future and reveal the secret of events long past"

p147

"The province of Pembroke comes next after Rhos, lying towards the south and by the sea, indeed, a branch of the sea divides the two Its main town, also called Pembroke, is the capital of Dyfed It is built high up on an oblong plateau of rock, and it extends along the north and the south of an inlet of the sea which runs down from Milford haven Hence it's name Pembroke, which means the head of the estuary"

"de Montgomery Arnulf was the first to build a fortification here, from wooden stakes and turf, in the days of Henry I, King of the English" Arnulf de Montgomery, younger son of Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, built his first fortress at Pembroke c1091, in the reign of William Rufus It was not very strong and it offered little resistance When he went back to England, Arnulf left the fortress and a small garrison in the charge of de Windsor Gerald, a stalwart cunning man, who was his constable and lieutenant Grandfather of Gerald of Wales

"without more ado the inhabitants of South Wales began to lay siege to the place" This was the uprising of 1096 The Welsh, leaders of the attack on Pembroke were ab Edwin Uchtryd and ap GronwHywel They had just lost their prince, Rhys ap Tewdwr, a warlike leader, who had been betrayed by his own troops in Brecknockshire, and they were left with his son Gruffydd, who was still a boy, ap Tewdwr Rhys was killed near Brecon in April 1093

Under cover of darkness 15 Knights deserted the fortress in desperation, clambered into a boat and tried to escape over the water The very next morning Gerald transferred their estates to 15 of their own men-at-arms, dubbing them there and then as Knights The siege lasted a long time, and those inside were greatly reduced and near the end of their tether When they had hardly any provisions left, Gerald, who, as I have said was a cunning man created the impression that they were still well supplied and expecting reinforcements at any moment For he took four hogs, which were all that they had, cut them into sections and hurled them over the palisade at the besiegers The following day he thought of an even more ingenious stratagem He signed a letter with his own seal and had it placed just outside the lodging of Wilfred, Bishop of St David's who chanced to be in the neighbourhood. This was at Llamphey, two miles away Wilfred seems to have been Bishop of St David's from c1083 onwards. There it would be picked up almost immediately, and the finder would imagine that it had been dropped accidentally by one of Gerald's messengers. The purport of the letter was that the constable would have no need of reinforcements from Arnulf for a good four months When this dispatch was read, to the Welsh, they immediately abandoned the siege and went off home"

The next thing Gerald did was to marry Nest the sister of Gruffydd, Prince of South Wales, with the object of giving himself and his troops a firmer foothold in the country he married her c1100, she was the maternal grandmother of Gerald of Wales In the process of time she bore him a large number of children, both boys and girls With the help of this family the sea coast of South Wales was held secure by the English and Ireland too, was stormed, as is narrated in my "Vaticinal History" The Conquest of Ireland"

"Only about 3 miles from Pembroke Castle is the fortified mansion known as Manorbier, that is the house of one Pyrrus The same man also owned Caldy Island, called by the Welsh, Ynys Byr, which means the Island of Pyrrus There the house stands, visible from afar because of its turrets and crenellations, on the top of a Hill which is quite near the sea and which on the western side reaches as far as the harbour To the north and north-west, just beneath the walls there is an excellent fish pond, well constructed and remarkable for its deep waters On the same side there is a most attractive orchard, shut in between the fish pond and a grove of trees, with a great crag of rock and hazel nut trees which grow to a great height At the east end of the fortified promontory, between the castle, if I may call it such, and the church, a stream of water which never fails winds its way along a valley, which is strewn with sand by the strong sea winds It runs from a large lake, and there is a water mill on its bank To the west it is washed by a winding inlet of the Severn Sea which forms a bay quite near the castle and yet looks out toward the Irish Sea If only the rocky headland to the south bent round northwards a little farther, it would make a harbour most convenient for shipping Boats on their way to Ireland from almost any part of Britain scud by before the east wind, and from this vantage point you can see them brave the ever changing violence of the winds and the blind fury of the waters This is a region rich in wheat, with fish from the sea and plenty of wine for sale What is more important than all the rest is that, from its nearness to Ireland, heaven's breath smells so wooingly there

Of all the different parts of Wales, Dyved, with its seven cantrefs, is at once the most beautiful and the most productive

Of all Dyved, the province of Pembroke is the most attractive, and in all Pembroke the spot which I have just described is most assuredly without its equal It follows that in all the broad lands of Wales Manorbier is the most pleasant place by far You will not be surprised to hear me lavish such praise upon it, when I tell you that this is where my own family came from, This is where I myself was born I can only ask you to forgive me "

Henry II arrived in Pembroke on 21st September 1171 on his way to Ireland. He was delayed by contrary winds for nearly a month

p167

The King Henry II had left the following garrisons behind him in Ireland, in Dublin, de Lacy Hugh assassinated in 1186 to whom he had given Meath in fee, with twenty Knights to support him, FitzStephen Robert. Robert FitzStephen was the son of the Princess Nest by Stephen, constable of Cardigan, and thus an uncle of Gerald and FitzGerald Maurice. Maurice FitzGerald was the son of the Princess Nest by her husband, Gerald of Windsor and thus both a half brother of Robert FitzStephen and an uncle of Gerald together with twenty more Knights

p189

"Two great noblemen were sent to the island Anglesey by the King Henry II They were my own uncles,

Henry, son of Henry I and Uncle of Henry II, the child of Nest, the noble born daughter of Rhys ap Tewdwr, Prince of Dyved in South Wales, and Henry behaved far too rashly and, with no support from his troops, fell in the first line of battle, pierced by a number of spears, to the great grief of his soldiers and FitzStephen Robert, Henry's brother, but by a different father Robert was a man who, in our own time, led where others followed, for it was he who soon afterwards invaded Ireland I have recorded his deeds in my "Vaticinal History" Robert was badly wounded and escaped with great difficulty to his ships, abandoning all hope of defence "

" Long before the fall of Britain, the Welsh, were instructed and confirmed in the Christian Faith by Faganus and Duvainus who at the request of King Lucius, were sent to the island by Pope Eleutherius

Later on, Germanus of Auxerre and Lupus of Troyes were sent over because of the corruption which had gradually resulted from the invasion of the pagan Saxons and more especially to put an end to the Pelagian heresy, but they found nothing heretical or contrary to the articles of true Faith" Gerald's references are Bede "Historia Ecclesiastica" I4, I17 and Geffrey of Monmouth, "The History of the Kings of England" IV19, VI13

Lort of East Moor

East Moor was the home of the Lorts in the 17th century near it is another farmstead called West Moor

Lort Samual 1648 July12 East Moor Brother of Roger -Signed letter ordering the destruction of Haverfordwest Castle Arch Camb 1876 page 56

Lort Sampson second son of Henry Lort of Stackpole Court, established himself at East Moor
Like his father he served on both sides during the Civil War His first wife Philipps Olive was a daughter of Sir John Philipps of Picton She died in 1637, and four years later Sampson married Lettice, daughter of Thomas, ap Rhys of Rickeston Brawdy and Scotsborough He was High Sheriff in 1650, and died in 1667 His only son,

Lort Thomas succeeded to East Moor he married White Elizabeth of Henllan, but died without issue A few references have been found to East Moor In 1670 Thomas, Lort was assessed at seven hearths, indicating it to have been a commodious residence
The Land Tax of 1786 East Moor, Sir Hugh Owen, owner, Peter Gwyther tenant, assessed at £3 18s

Lort Lettice 1641 East Moor Manorbier daughter of Thomas, ap Rhys of Rickeston Brawdy and Scotsborough married Sampson

Lort Sampson 5 October 1652 Erasmus Phillips, Sampson Lort and William Phillips, Pembroke Town to the Committee for regulation of Markets, the Inner Exchequer Chamber, Westminster

Having received their order of 15th June 1652 concerning the regulating of markets, enclosed in a letter from Mr Blackgrave, the writers caused it to be published at the public sessions holden for co Pembroke at the town Hall of Pembroke on 5 October They made known such fit places within the county where markets may be directed, viz , Mounton in the hundred of CastleMartyn on Tuesday, Fishguard in Kemes on Wednesday, Lawhadden in Dungleddy on Thursday, St Florence in CasteMartyn on Thursday, and Narberth in the hundred of Narberth on Wednesday The reason of their certificate herein is that there is no market in the county but in the corporate towns of Pembroke and Tenby and the county town of Haverfordwest Calender of the Records of the borough of Haverfordwest 1539 - 1660

Marychurch of Norchard Manorbier

Just south of The Ridgeway, and north of Lydstep Formerly a commodious residence of an ancient landowning family, built over a continuous vault It is now a farmhouse The earliest residence of which we have any record was that of Looney, also spelled as Lymy and Lang

Looney Thomas, left no sons and Norchard passed to his daughter and heiress

Looney Isabel who married

Marychurch Lawrence 1400 who settled at his wife's home Between 1400 and 1600, eleven generations of his descendants lived at Norchard. The origin of the family is unknown, and the name was often rendered as St Marychurch by Dwinn Five of the name served as Mayors of Tenby in the period 1501-1526 When Dwinn recorded the pedigree and arms on 10 November 1591,

Marychurch John 10 November 1591 signed, and gave five shillings to the herald for his travail

The family remained at Norchard until the latter half of the 19th century.

Marychurch William 1670 was assessed at seven hearths for Norchard, and Marychurch Maud 1670 one hearth

Marychurch Francis 1670 one hearth apiece The male line seems to have failed shortly afterwards, and when

Marychurch Mary 1673 ,married Williams John of Gumfreston, and Pant Howel Carms, who then settled at Norchard which passed to Mary's descendants Williams Mary nee Marychurch had two daughters who married two brothers – Williams Mary to Meyrick John d 1732, and Williams Alice who married Meyrick Francis d 1741

In 1786 Norchard was owned by Meyrick John Esq of Bush, with Nicholas Roch as tenant

2013 Lydstep Palace has been put up for sale by Pembrokeshire County Council

Unusual, in that the village was largely built by the first Viscount St. Davids, who also built a large house for himself in Lydstep Haven. Nowadays the land along the shore is a large and beautifully landscaped caravan site. In the village are the ruins of the mysterious medieval Palace of Arms, an early first floor house above two vaulted cellars of undercrofts badly neglected.

The headland is National Trust property with a car park and nature trail. Lydstep Caverns can be explored at low tide.

Speede's Map of Pembroke showing Monkton Priory and other buildings around it.

Today most think of Monkton as a large council estate with a Gypsy encampment but it has been a very important habited site for over 3000 years

Priory Farm Cave Monkton

Evidence for the first presence of man in Pembrokeshire comes from the caves in the carboniferous limestone outcrops in the south. The caves around Tenby have produced limited series of flint impliments with the cold loving fauna of the upper Palaeolithic period; but the best group is that from the Cat's Hole at Monkton near Pembroke which demonstrates that the earliest hunting communities of south west Wales shared the Cresswellian culture which was characteristic of the cave people of most of southern Britain at this time

The prehistoric bones in the limestone caves in the south-east of Pembrokeshire have been beautifully preserved by the action of carbonate of lime. Caves at Caldy Island, at Hoyle's Mouth and Little Hoyle near Tenby, have yielded a rich store of animal bones: the collection covers the mammoth, woolly rhinoceros, hippopotamus, brown and cave bears, wolf, fox, hyena, lion, Irish elk, red deer, reindeer, wild ox, bison, horse, as well as the first domestic animals goat, pig and dog. These caves were the lairs, larders dens and last resting places of the earliest Man. Flint is no longer found naturally in Pembrokeshire but nevertheless thousands of flints have been discovered in or near the caves on Caldey, which must therefore date from before the inundation; they are of both old and new (Neolithic) stone age and were doubtless carried down by the north ice; these and other Pembrokeshire limestone caves show traces of occupation by man right down to Romano British times.

Old Stone Age

Palaeolithic Period Sea level over 100 mts lower so little trace of inhabitants remain hunters lived in caves such as Priory Farm Cave at Monkton. The earliest definitely identifiable remains of human occupation are found in association with the bones of prehistoric animals. Finds have been made in the Coygan Cave near Laugharne, Priory Cave at Monkton and in the Paviland Cave in the Gower peninsular Hoyles Mouth, Little Hoyle near Tenby and Nanna's Cave on Caldy Ossiferous caves are situated in the south-eastern portion of the county, near Tenby. Hoyles Mouth was the first of them to which attention was drawn; then its "little" neighbour in Longbury Bank was partially examined; the quarrymen on Caldy Island opened others; and lastly, the operations at Black Rock have disclosed a new series. Isolated ones have been found under the town of Tenby, and doubtless many sea caves, which are scoured by the tide, were in Pleistocene times wild beast dens, for mammoth bones are not infrequently met with on the shore. Last, though not least, Comes the Coygan, near Laugharne; though as this cave is in Carmarthenshire, it scarcely falls within our limits The Woogan, under Pembroke Castle, has not been hunted for Pleistocene relics.

Priory Farm cave / Cats Hole Cave

Mr E W Dixon and Dr A Hurrell Style first excavated in this cave in 1908 when a number of finds were made. Professor W F Grimes in his Guide to the Collection Illustrating The PreHistory of Wales (1939,) describes them thus:-

"A small but fine series of flints comes from a cave in the limestone at Cat's Hole Quarry Monkton, Pembroke

CRESWELLIAN POINTS (6 : 4-7).

{note this is just some of them}

The cave penetrates over 120 feet into the rock, at a height of about 50ft above the present level of the river. It was excavated in 1908 and found to contain deposits at least 4 feet thick consisting of cave earth in two layers, with near the entrance an underlying band of gravel. Beneath the surface earth in the cave mouth were found a bronze saw, a chisel, and a fragmentary palstave, while there were kitchen middens and fragments of medieval pottery indicating even later occupation. At the same level as the bronzes was a human skull of the typical Neolithic type . The animal remains found in the cave were much mixed and there was no difference between the two levels. They included especially, however reindeer, hyena, horse and mammoth. The flints were found in the gravel. Apart from worked flakes they consist of some fine examples of the developed Gravette point, associated with man of the Neolithic period, other examples were found the Paviland caves. The Monkton implements however more closely resemble those of the Cresswell Crags caves in Derbyshire which at present are the type site for the industry, and provide really definite evidence for the existence in South Wales of the characteristic Cressweillian industry. The Monkton cave is at present the most westerly known to have been occupied by man." The find suggests colonies of men who were familiar with the flake implement technique. They would probably have been few in number and in the absence of flint suitable for their large tools seem to have developed more dependence on small flake tools.

The bronze age chisel found was of the simpler form with a tang which would have been driven into a wooden handle. The palistave was of an early bronze age type whilst the saw is of a type very rare. It was presumably designed to be used like a cross cut and was fitted with a bronze loop at one end and the other was bent over to take a cord.

The artifacts were deposited in the National Museum of Wales

long. 4° 58' 0")

.According to earlier records there were an even larger group than at present

A group of at least six circular mounds, known as the Orielson Barrows (Burrows on the 6 in. Ord. sheet), about half a mile north-west of Orielson mansion; five are in one field, and one in the next field north of the high road. The largest has a base circumference of some 350 feet and a height of 10 feet; the remainder are slightly smaller. Five are grass-grown, and the sixth has been ploughed over revealing a small quantity of white quartz stones.—Visited, 23rd May, 1929.

Fenton's account of this group is interesting He says:—" Dry Burrows, a furzy moor covered with tumuli, the largest group I ever recollect to have seen in this county, as the spot never seems to have undergone cultivation. Since those Sepulchral mounds were raised over the ashes of the heroes they cover. In a few of the fields near, which for ages have felt the influence of the plough, and are intersected by fences in different directions, several others, originally part of the same cluster before the land was enclosed and reclaimed, though now considerably lowered and softened down, are discoverable as if it had been the principal mausoleum of the early inhabitants of this country, it being very unusual in any other part of it to see so many together " (Tour, p. 392 1810).

A few months after the publication of Fenton's Tour containing the above extract the historians his son John Fenton wrote to his father an account of his excavation of the Orielson tumuli, of which the following is an extract:—

" 30th September, 1811. Opened one of the tumuli on Dry Barrows near Orielson discovered large and well-formed kist: cover stone 4 feet long. 3 feet wide and 6 inches thick depth 3 1/2 ft. human bones, partly burned - charcoal - bits of coal -- no weapon, urn, or any ornament found in this barrow. Field called Hangman field

1st October In another barrow no kist, but interment had been made in a most irregular manner Bones had been first burned on surface of natural soil, and afterwards collected in four different heaps -- immense quantities of charcoal , mixed with a much greater proportion of new and hard coal

5th October Opened the central tumulus --- urn reversed filled with bones and ashes deposited in a kist of clay not much larger than the urn

7th October Opened another tumulus ----- another reversed urn a little larger and more ornamental than former --- contained burned bones with some earth and charcoal -- Urn was 11 1/2 in. high 4in diameter at the base and 8 1/4 in at the top.

Acc/to Professor Grimes

These barrows form the largest single concentration of Bronze Age burial mounds in the county in addition to the main group of seven there are several outliers in the neighbourhood. Several of them , not specified , were excavated in 1811 by John Fenton . An interesting feature is the mention of coal which is the first reference to coal in Pembrokeshire although it has been mentioned elsewhere. . The barrows lie beside the Ridgeway where it turns northwards to avoid broken country.

A prominent tumulus standing on a field called Beacon Park about half a mile north-east of Corston House. It has a circumference of 90 feet, and a height of 6 feet. Its disturbance in the 1920's for road metal disclosed a construction of earth and stones. It is locally reported that when the disturbers came within sight of what appeared to be a cist operations were dropped.—in 1928 a fine Bronze Age burial cist was opened and found to contain the remains of a man of about 1600 BC with a bronze dagger by his side.

In the west corner of a triangular field, about 300 yards west of Penny Bridge farm-house, stood, until the early 1900's, a circle of stones not shown on the 6 in. Ord. sheet. 'the circle had been grubbed up when land-cleaning, before our Assist. Inspecting Officer heard of its existence. Upon his arrival at the site he found the twelve stones of which it was composed placed in a row against the hedge of the field. The tallest was 7 feet long by 2 feet square; the rest were smaller. The circle ; had a diameter of some 30 feet, and occupied a slightly elevated position. So far as could be gathered no finds had been met with.—Visited, 12th May, 1922.

Bowett Wood or Quoit's (?Cott's) Mill Camp

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 40 S.W.; lat. 51° 40' 7"; long. 4° 56' 5").

An earthwork situate in Bowett Wood immediately above Bowett Bridge, on the boundary between this parish and that of Monkton; not marked on the 6 in. Ord. sheet. The defence on three sides consists of precipitous descents to a stream which empties itself into Quoits Pill, and to a dingle through which runs the high road from Monkton to Hundleton village. To the south an earthen bank cuts off approach, thus marking off an area measuring 200 feet east to west and 180 feet north to south, now nearly covered with trees. This bank is fairer perfect, it rises 6 feet and falls 10 feet to a ditch 15 feet wide. The entrance was at the west end.—Visited, 17th May, 1922.

Pembroke Priory pre 1877

In 1098 Arnulph de Montgomery, who had invaded the area in 1093 and erected a fortification on what is now the site of Pembroke Castle, made a gift of the Church of St Nicholas "within his castle" to the Benedictine Abbey of Seez in Normandy while half the tithes of his churches in Wales were to be devoted to provide footwear for its Monks at Seez the rest to go towards the support of the new site at Pembroke. Soon after this the monks started to build the monastery on which, some evidence suggests, was the site of an earlier pre Norman settlement. As it was subsevient to a foriegn monastery it was regarded as an alien priory and thus had a very unsettled existence These alien priories were cells of the religious houses in England which belonged to foreign monasteries.

When manors or tithes were given to foreign convents, the monks, in order to have faithful stewards of their revenues, built a small convent and constituted priors over them. Within these convents there was the same distinction as in those priories which were cells subordinate to some great abbey. Some of these were conventual, and having priors of their own choosing, thereby became entire societies within themselves, and receive the revenues belonging to their several houses for their own use and benefit, paying only an acknowledgement to the foreign household but others depended entirely on the foreign houses, who appointed and removed their priors at pleasure. These transmitted all their revenues to the foreign houses to which they appertained, and on this account their estates were frequently seized to supply the means of carrying on the wars between England and France, and restored to them again on the return of peace.

The whole number of these institutions is not exactly known as but it has been ascertained that it exceeded one hundred. The alien priories were first seized by Edward I 1285, on the breaking out of war between France and England; and it appears, from the roll, that Edward II also seized them.

1337 Edward III confiscated their estates, and let out the priories themselves, with all their lands and tenements, at his pleasure, for twenty three years; at the end of which term peace was concluded between France and England. He restored their estates 1361. At other times, he granted their lands, or pensions out of them, to several of his nobles. Their condition was not improved by the accession of Richard II and it was not until Henry IV began his reign that these priories experienced any royal favour. He restored all the conventional ones, only reserving to himself, in time of war, what they paid, in time of peace, to foreign abbeys. Their prosperity, however was not of long duration; for they were all dissolved by act of parliament, in the second year of the reign of Henry V, and their estates were vested in the crown.

According to an

had three appropriated Churches

Castlemartin value £26 13 4d,

Monkton value £ 26 13 4d,

Pembroke St Michael's value £10 0 0d,

Assessed value for temporalities £19 6 3 1/2d - no figure given for spiritualities.

Attached to St Michaels Pembroke was , according to Fenton, a subordinate Chapel or hospitium dedicated to St Mary Magdalen, which was situated to the east of the church outside the town walls. This hospital had an income of £1 6s 8d. There is also evidence that there was a leper house as land at Kingswood was let to the lepers in the inventory of 1326/7 (for the same pasture of the sheep of the lepers)

Accounts for Pembroke for the same year also show that there was a house of St John there on which no fees were paid.

When the Alien priorys were seized by the Crown in 1414, Monkton was granted to Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, who returned it to the church by giving it to St Albans Abbey to which it belonged until the dissolution of the Monasteries.

The last prior was William Waren in 1534 and at that time the number at the priory consisted of the prior and three monks. After the dissolution he was one of those permitted to hold a benefice and wear his habit under that of a secular clerk. There is records which also show that he held the land which had belonged to St Daniel's Church.

The property of the Priory was sold by the Crown to John Vaughan and Katherine his wife in 1546.

1670 At this time only the nave of the Church had a roof on

According to the records of the Archdeaconry of St David's Episcopal Visitations in 1678 due to the failure of the tithe holders to carry out the maintenance of the chancel it had become in a very poor state of repair.

From 1770 until an Order in Council was granted on 5th February 1872 the vicarage of Monkton was united with the vicarages of St Michael's and St Mary's Pembroke. The combined livings at the time were valued at £40 and "Mouncton" church is described as "down".

Fenton in 1810 said " The priory church taking in the unroofed old chancel, or Virgin 's Chapel , making nearly half of the building , was of great length , and is a mixture of the Saxon and pointed order. The nave is vaulted with stone. The pointed arch that led to the unroofed part must have been stopped for some centuries, as it incorporates a monumental recess neatly wrought, to which were formerly affixed brasses of figures and coats of arms, but long since stripped off, now forming the back of the communion table. The church is paved partly with the glazed bricks, having arms, mottos, and flowers on them as at St David's and Carew. The modern font is placed on the fragment of a beautiful clustered column, such as does not occur anywhere in the present edifice, so that there is reason to suppose the ancient church, which appears to have been enriched with ornaments now not existing, has undergone much change.

This church has long been the mausoleum of the family of the Owens, and probably of the Wyrriots, of Orierton, before them, as well as of the Meyricks of Bush, as we see the monuments of the first of the former who settled in this country, as well as of the latter.

In the unroofed chapel there are four handsome windows on the south side and one in the east end. On each side there is a canopied recess as for a recumbent figure, but now untenanted; and on the right hand of the altar stone stalls of neat workmanship for two officiating priests.. Parallel to this on the north side is a building of similar dimensions, separated by an open passage and though now detached, a considerable building called by the common people the Monkey-house, was formerly connected with the nave of the church, as may be clearly traced.

The prior's mansion, a little to the west of the cemetery, now converted into a farm house, is of singular form, uniting the architecture of various fashions and ages. It is ascended by a flight of steps, at the foot of which on each side are the remains of very curious pillars. The basement is all vaulted; and the outbuildings together with the walls that enclose the whole, give us an idea of the prior's great state. The monastic precinct, or rather prior's liberties, occupying a very large tract, formed a paddock well walled round, commanding a fine view of the estuary, castle and town of Pembroke, and must have been a sumptuous and delightful residence. A dove-house of large dimensions, an inseparable appendage to houses of the first note in this county, still exists entire just without this paddock"

The livings of the three parishes of St Mary, St Michael and St Nicholas were recorded in 1834 as being consolidated into one discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £9 (£4 for St Michael and £5 for that of Monkton. St Mary's not being in charge.) and in the gift of Sir John Owen Bart.

Up to the year 1834, the inhabitants of what is now Pembroke Dock had the "right" of burial in St Mary's Churchyard, Pembroke, but that place being very limited Monkton Churchyard (with the exception of a few buried at Bethany Chapel) became the burial ground.

Monkton Churchyard contains by far the greater number of the 'honoured "dead of the early dockyard. On the west side of the churchyard they were laid side by side from the Churchyard gate up to the Church door, close alongside the pathway. His Majesty King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra, on the 23rd Aug, 1902 visited Monkton Church scanned some of the headstones whilst passing along this path. It may be interesting to record some of the inscriptions:

To the memory of Mary the wife of Thomas Roberts, 'master' shipwright of His- Majesty's Yard; Pembroke, who departed this life, 24th January, 1824. Aged .52 years

Sacred to the memory of William Calder, Esq., late of H.M.Dockyard, Pembroke, who departed this life, 4th May, 1826 aged 62.

To the memory .of Elinor Burch, daughter of. Thomas and Anne Burch, of Plymouth who departed this life, April 3rd 1819

One who was buried there in 1829 was Joseph King He had served on the " Boreas" the Agamemnon and the "Captain" as Boatswain under Nelson and was recommended by him and the Earl of St Vincent to the post of Boatswain to the Dockyard of Gibraltar from December 9th 1796 to 1808. He then came to the Haven, first as Boatswain to the Dockyard at Milford then on its transfer to the Dockyard at Paterchurch . He had a son John Nesbit King who married Ann Gale.

In 1851 the church of Monkton or St Nicholas (this was what is now the nave of the present church) had a seating capacity of 52 of which two were free seats. The patron and impropiator of the parish was Sir John Owen Bart. and the tithes amounted to £475 of which £300 belonged to Sir John Owen and £175 to the Vicar. The consolidated parish had, besides the Vicar, two curates. One of which had a stipend of £110 the other £50. Two services were held each Sunday. Congregations for the morning service averaged 80 while the numbers fell to 60 for evensong

The northern side of the nave of the present Church supported outside by buttresses is the original wall of the nave of the ancient church of St Nicholas.

When the Rev David Bowen, an architect (Deputy Provincial Grand Master Past G C of England Ancient Order of Freemasons Loyal Welsh, Lodge of Wales Pembroke Dock) was appointed Vicar in 1877 the church was partly in ruins and had been for some time. At that time the congregation worshipped in the nave, a drawing shows that the chancel and side chapel were in ruins with no roof or windows and covered in vegetation. The first entry into the bank pass book for the Restoration fund was dated May 17th 1878 and the first faculty was granted in 1882 (2 Aug) for the restoration of the then Church.

During the restoration the floor level was lowered and levelled. This revealed that, like in many other churches, there had been numerous burials below the floor one of which, if the terms of his will of 1500 were carried out, was Richard Newton. The remains were collected and reinterred in a large grave by the north wall of the Churchyard. Two effigies were uncovered in the floor of the porch and these were later placed in recesses in the chancel and sanctuary. Whilst work was proceeding in the porch, the fine Norman arch was uncovered and a room above the porch was found and opened. This was found to contain the skeleton of a monk. The first part of the restored building was reopened on 8th December 1882 to a large congregation by the Lord Bishop of St David's who took as his text Coll III., 3-4. He was accompanied by Venerable Archdeacon Lewis. The collection of £21 14s 5d was given to the Restoration fund and after the service many paid 2s for lunch in the crypt of the Old Hall.(this would have been soon after its restoration by Mr Cobb). The Bishop also baptised the son Walter Mark, of Captain Walter Hoare and his wife Edith Mary.

Contributions for the lunch had been provided by Mrs Bowen, Mrs Leach, Mrs George, Mrs Russel,Yerbeston; Mrs Hitchen, Iveston; Mrs Lloyd, Goldboro; Mrs Sweet, Mellaston; Miss Thomas, Moorston; Miss Evans, Castleton;

The pulpit for the Church was donated by Mrs Bowen; the font, Mr and Mrs Hurlow; reading desk, Mr George Lewis; lectern, anon friend; book stand for the Holy Table, W O Hum Esq; bible, Miss Bryages; bible, Mrs Hird; two prayer books for the holy table, Mrs Robert George; prayer book for reading desk, Mrs Ada George; bible for the pulpit, Master Howard Penney; book markers, Miss Peard; gas standards, Rev T G Cree; cushion for the pulpit, Mrs Williams, Salutation; two offertory basins, Miss Mary Hurlow, font bucket (oak with brass mounts), Miss Hester Hurlow. The west window was installed at the expense of M.A.Saurin of Orielton. The cost of renovating the nave was £400 and the work was carried out by Mr Mc Alpin of Pembroke Dock. The organ was built and erected by Messrs Wade and Meggit, Tenby.

The present parish church of Monkton was formerly the church of St Nicholas originally founded by Arnold de Montgomery within his castle of Pembroke, and annexed by him to the Norman abbey of Seez doubtless on the condition that the abbey should establish a subordinate house on or near the same site. Slight traces of Norman work incorporated within the present priory or found built into its walls point to its erection during the lifetime of Arnold or soon after his death; but, with the exception of the lines of the exterior walls, the existing building has suffered such extensive demolitions at, and since the dissolution of the lesser of the lesser monasteries, and even more extensive restoration within the past half century, that it is difficult to be sure of the periods to which its component parts.

It was carefully examined and described by the late Professor E A Freeman a few years before its restoration (Arch Camb 1852 II iii 181). The professor refers to the “vast length of the nave , and the noble, though melancholy aspect of the ruined choir”

Like many Benedictine monastic churches, the nave was used , probably from the first, as the parish church of Pembroke, whilst the chancel was walled off for the exclusive use by the monks; hence in 1535 the former part lived on uninjured whilst the latter portion was stripped of its roof and left to become a total ruin. It is now largely a modern church.

At a meeting held after the Easter Vestry in 1883 it was agreed to level all the unmarked graves in the Churchyard.

A second faculty was granted in 1887 (21 April) for enlarging the Church The restoration work involved rebuilding the chancel and side chapel, making the church nearly half as long again, removing the dividing wall between the old nave and the ruined chancel. A new east window was installed to commemorate the Royal visit and new choir stalls with canopies, some of which were donated by Masonic lodges throughout South Wales, were carved and erected by Mr Edwin Thomas of St David's.

The Masonic Lodges also gave the stain glass windows in the Chapel. Much of the stone carving was done by a local mason Mr Chas Henry Williams of 4 Charlton Place Pembroke Dock. He also carved the pulpit in St John's Pembroke Dock, the South African War Memorial in Carmarthen and work in St Patrick's Church Pennar.

In this church are the vaults of the Meyricks' or Bush; of the Owen's' of Orielton; and the Corston family. One under the tower arch is inscribed as that of Thomas Meyrike, Knt... and is of the time of James 1st on the side of it are a number of figures wearing trunk-hose and some era of a good age. They are placed in the north wall; the upper one cannot be deciphered with accuracy now as the letters were not cut in the stone but were painted in gold paint.

There is a nice tablet - to the memory of Abraham Leach, of Corston, Esq., a magistrate and deputy Lordly Lieutenant of this county, who died March 29, 1843, aged 79 years," and one in memory of 'John Frederick Leach, Esq a Barrister-at-Law, who died March 13th, 1843, aged 31.

The tower was restored in 1887 at a cost of £80 the work being carried out by Mr John Phillips, for Mr McAplin Builder Pembroke Dock

The Church was visited by King Edward VII and Queen Alexandra on Saturday 23rd 1902 but according to a local paper, for some reason it is believed the Rev David Bowen was absent that day and so did not meet the Royal party.

On September 17th 1909 a faculty was granted for the erection of a churchyard cross in the parish churchyard.

During the clearing away of some of the remains of Monkton Priory a metal seal was found. The inscription reads "SIGILLU' PRIOR: PROVINCIALIS: ANGLIE: ORDINIS: FRATRU': PREDICATORUM; its date is about 1500 and it is in the Tenby Museum.

Also a stone vessel described as a domestic mortar of medieval date was found in ground adjoining the Priory Church. Height 10ins, outside dia. 18ins, interior dia, 13ins; with a heavy lug at each of the four corners. Clergy and Churchwardens of this ancient church, which at times were combined with those of St Mary's Pembroke, go back to 1711 but fortunately some of the Bishops transcripts from as early as 1685 still survive.

There was once, according to legend, a passage from the priory to the castle, but the sites entrance and exit have been lost. (In fact according to one very reliable history of the area the entrance site is where a large bush stands in the vicarage garden and the passage was last partly walked in the late 1800's by the Davies brothers, one of whom later helped with the exploration of the Priory Cave.)

The Monastery or Monks house which was known locally as the Monkey House has completely disappeared. It used to be where the Vicarage now stands. It had in it curious stone steps, a vaulted roof and at one time twelve stone statues of the apostles in niches in the walls. All these historical treasures were lost when it was taken down to build "the barn" attached to Priory farm.

When the Vicarage was built, there was deposited on June 14th 1893 in a cavity in the North East Foundation Stone a bottle containing a small piece of parchment with the following names written on it -- Archbishop of Canturbury, Dr Benson; Bishop of St David's Dr Basil Jones; Vicar of Monkton, Rev David Bowen. This bottle was sealed with an impression of the original seal of the Benedictine Prior.

Monkton Old Hall

About 100yds south-east of the Benedictine Priory church of Monkton is a building which, though some what drastically renovated in recent years, still preserves in its restored features many of the characteristics of a small residence of the 15th, or even as is claimed of the 14th century. By the latter half of the 19th century its internal arrangements had become a heap of ruins, so that the account given in 1868 bt the Rev E L Barnwell in Arch Camb III xiv 70 is incomplete, and the illustration of the exterior which he appends is far from presenting an adequate idea of its outward appearance. Some years later (1879) when it was leased by Mr J R Cobb F.S.A. the slated roof, which had been probably replaced in 1819 as some of the timbers bore that date, had fallen in as had the vault of the porch and that of the north east wing. An elder tree 7 1/2 inches in diameter was growing in the chimney. According to his description, after the rubble had been cleared, the building consisted of a long low vaulted hall of three bays the eastern bay having a vaulted porch This low vaulted hall was, in his opinion, the oldest part of the building being cut into the limestone rock . Over the middle and western bay there is another hall with an external staircase with a fireplace and a slender Pembrokeshire stack. The north east limb consisted of kitchen with plain barrel vault built on the eastern bay of the main building and having a large fireplace with another room above. There was also fragmentary remains of a north western limb built on to the western bay. Cobb compared the design of the building with that of the Hostelry of the Prior of St Pancras, Southwark described in "Domestic Architecture of the Middle Ages vol 1 page 50".

was, according to Fenton, once the Prior's mansion, it has been very much restored but the corbels high on the front indicating parts are medieval.

Castleton

named after the Castle family -- a suggestion of a connection with Phillip Castlemartin in 1314

Acc/to Fenton in the 1300's Mabel Castle of Castleton sole heiress married Sir Stephen Perrot of Eastington

Phillip Knethell of Castleton Monkton was Bailiff of Pembroke in 1546 he died around 1587 and his son John inherited.

In 1786 Francis Meyrick owned Upper Castleton and Mrs Price was the tenant.

In 1834 Evan Evans held a lease of the property.

Corston

(in the past also known as Causon, Corston House, Corsiton)

Home of the Meares family from 1665 to 1770.

Francis Meares of Corston was High Sheriff in 1695 and an inventory of his possessions in 1720 gives a description of the house

Ground Floor ---- Hall, parlour, kitchen, pantry, and an inner cellar.

Upper Floor ---- Large Chamber, middle chamber, chamber over the kitchen, two lodging rooms, chamber of convenience, Garrets --- a number of rooms, store rooms, maid's room.

Outbuildings -- outer store room, dairy, outer cellar, brew house, cooling house, stables, ox-house, cart house, and other out buildings.

1670 Hearth Tax assessed as 3 and 4 hearths

In the pre marriage settlement of 1726 between Francis Meares Jnr and Anne Elliot of Pembroke the capital messuage of Corston was settled to the uses of the marriage.

1770 William Meares, the last of the family sold Courston to John Prout described as a yeoman of Moor.

1780 on John Prout's death it was purchased by Abraham Leach of Pembroke and remained the seat of the Leach family till the death of Brig Gen H E Burleigh Leach in 1936. His widow married Captain Lionel Green and went to live in Herefordshire. The House was requisitioned by the RAF and was later used as a Land Girl's Hostel. It was finally sold by Mrs Green in 1946.

Members of the Leach family were High Sheriffs in 1797, 1852, 1855 and 1933.

Fleet

Home of the Meyrick family in the late 16c, there are records of Sir Francis Meyrick of Fleet House in Moncton in 1608

1786 Land Tax Records John Francis Meyrick is recorded as owner of Upper Fleet with William Powell as tenant and also of Lower Fleet with Jason Bedford as tenant

Other place names in the area

mentioned in early records according to B.G.Charles include :-

Back Lane 1751

Monkton Bridge 1552

Pigeon House 1662 this is probably the medieval dovecote lying to the west of the farm and mentioned by Fenton in 1810. It is similar to the one at Manorbier near the castle . There was another in the area, at Beirspool Pembroke Dock associated with the manor of Kingswood but this has been pulled down

Windmill Hill 1613

St Nicholas Well

This is the name given to a large spring at the end of Watery Lane now enclosed within a modern conduit. It is said to have formerly supplied water to Pembroke Castle through pipes of earthenware and lead. One of the former was built into the boundary wall of Monkton Council school and one of the latter is preserved in Tenby Museum.

Acc/to The Description of Pembrokeshire by George Owen (1603) There was a small fair at Monkton near Pembroke on both Holy Rood Days Later records suggest that fairs were held on May 4th and September 25th but gradually, probably because the Parish was consolidated with that of Pembroke St Mary's and St Michael's, these fell into disuse.

Monkton Independent Chapel

Ebenezer --- A Chapel was built in 1845 which was used for a Sunday School and for occasional services. In 1851 it is recorded that no services were held there but occasionally the Minister of Tabernacle or one of the members would conduct a service. It was a branch of Tabernacle Pembroke and any records would be linked to that chapel.

Education 1847

Acc/to the State of Education in Wales

Parish of Monkton

Thomas Merryman , labourer informed me that a labourer's wages with food are from 8d to 9d a day, and without from 7s to 8s a week; farm servants from £6 to £10., and female servants from £2 to £6 per year. Labourers have not the means to get drunk otherwise some of them would. They suffer severely from the failure of the potato crop this year. The slight advance in wages is nothing to be compared to this loss. Most of the farmers are able to read and write. Still many children and labourers are without education

Mr William Thomas's school - This school is kept upstairs in two rooms of the master's house which is in good repair except the windows. There is a door to each room from the landing at the top of the stairs, but the master cannot see all the scholars from one room while they are in the other. He generally sits with the elementary classes.

The furniture consists of one masters desk, two long desks and twelve benches., no maps, prints, nor cards of any description.

The master, who seemed to be well informed, had been for 10 years conducting the National school at Tenby. He devotes his whole time to his school ; his wife sells bread.

The scholars are tradesmen's mechanics, and a few labourers children; but the inclement weather prevented many from attending.

Dec.15th 1846

At the time the parishes of St Michael's St Mary's and St Nicholas were united. The borough of Pembroke included all these parishes which covered the whole area of Pater. Apart from Pater where there was an excellent National school owing partly to the influence and proximity of the Dockyard , the only school of public institution for the poor was the National school . This was held in a house in the town, hired for the purpose, which is also used as a savings bank . Over 200 children of both sexes attend the school which is supported by subscription. There had been since 1690 endowment for a free grammar school founded then but at this time the sum amounted to £11 3s 4d a year, just a little above a farm servants wage.

It was estimated that upwards of 500 children were without even a nominal education. The Sunday schools were few and worse attended. This inferiority would particularly apply to that part of Pembroke and its vicinity which lies in Monkton parish to the south and west.

acc to Mason 1905

This school was built as a British school in the year 1865,- and has been improved several times since that date. An infants school was built on part of the play-ground in 1875, but latterly has been abandoned for infant teaching, and fitted up for teaching ecology The school is situated on the corner of Monkton Terrace at the commencement of the road leading to Norgans Hill. [it will accommodate 186. The average attendance in 1904 was 201 This school has always been popular with the whole of Pembroke, and in years gone by, children from the east would pass their own school to attend this one, a circumstance which often created a difficulty for the School Board to secure a different arrangement The headmaster (of many years standing) is Mr W James. Mr. R. Owell is the assistant master, and Miss C Treharne is the assistant mistress.

In 1873 The Pembroke and Pembroke Dock School Board took over Monkton Pembroke British school enforcing attendance at this elementary School.

Infants School Monkton.

This school is situated in a space on- the north side of the Main Street ,running through Monkton, westward. It was built in 1898 and will accomodate 350. The average attendance in 1904 totals 130. The headmistress is Miss F. M. Logan, and the Misses C. L. Thomas, S. A. Kenniford and M. G. Norris are the assistant mistresses

In 1883 as well as rebuilding of work being carried out in connection with the church work was also undertaken on a school room This was completed by the extending of the boundary wall by 20 feet, lengthening the main hall and erecting a dwarf wall with iron railings at the front.

There was a thriving Sunday School and that year the Sunday School treat was held at Orielson on July 17th by kind permission of M.A.Saurin Esq who provided one of the conveyances to take the younger children. The elder ones had to walk lead by the school band. The event finished at 7.30 pm when the drummer sounded the "alarm" and as the children marched out of the field each was presented with two buns. The church was reached about nine and after a few words from the Vicar and the singing of the National Anthem the children dispersed to their homes.

He promised that he would give other land of his lying in England, sufficient to provide footgear for the brethren of the abbey. When required for the third time to restore the same, he utterly refused and even promised worse, Gerald sent word to him that unless he restored the oxen he would be placed immediately under sentence of excommunication, to which he replied that he would not dare to excommunicate the king's constable in his own castle. Gerald replied that when the sheriff heard all the bells of the whole monastery rung at triple intervals then he would know without doubt that he was being excommunicated. immediately the messengers had returned, by authority of his legation, with candles lit, he solemnly gave the sentence of excommunication on him, in the presence of the monks of that place, and many of the clergy of the country, and likewise caused all the bells to be sounded together, as was customary, to confirm the sentence or rather to announce the fact. On the morrow, the robber came to the castle of Lanwadein, before David, the diocesan bishop, and Gerald and his colleague, Master Michael, whom the archbishop had attached to him, who had gone there, restitution having been made and satisfaction given, when he was beaten with rods, he was to be absolved'. 1399 approx. Henry IV restored the priory but it was seized again by the Crown

Henry by the grace of God king. etc. to all whom the present letters shall come, greeting. Know that we inwardly considering how some alien priories, houses and religious places being within our realm of England and Wales were laudably founded and built by our noble progenitors and other nobles and magnates of our realm to do and maintain divine offices and works of hospitality and alms and other works of piety and devotion, and that the same priories and religious places, as well by sudden and frequent removals and expulsions of the priors and occupiers of the places aforesaid as by divers secular and other farmers after they were that they were first taken into the hand of Sir Edward, late king of England, our grandfather (Edward III), by occasion of the war between us and those of France, are so above measure destroyed, dilapidated and wasted as well in houses as in things and possessions that the divine worship and regular observances therein are at an end, and hospitalities and alms and other works of charity besides, of old established and accustomed to be done there are withdrawn, and also the pious vows of the founders are in manifold ways defrauded and frustrated to no small offence and displeasure of Almighty God, as we believe. And it being our will therefore to the glory of God and holy church to provide more graciously for the increase of divine worship and the renewal and continuance of the said works of charity and other works incumbent, we of our especial grace, of our certain knowledge and with the assent of our council in our present parliament have granted and by the tenour of these presents have restored to the abbot and convent of St Martin, Sees of the power of France, the advowsons of all their conventual and other priories to which priors have been accustomed of ancient time to be admitted, instituted and inducted, in our realm of England and elsewhere within our lordship and power being, and taken and seized into our hand by occasion of the war aforesaid, and we remove our hand from the advowsons aforesaid; to have and to hold to them and their successors, so that the same abbot and his successors aforesaid shall henceforth present fit persons to the priories aforesaid in all avoidance of the same, the seisin thereof aforesaid or any other seisin in our hand or the hand of our aforesaid grandfather or of Richard, late king of England, by the occasion of the war aforesaid, made before these times, or any ordinances published to the contrary, notwithstanding; saving nevertheless to us and our heirs and other chief lords the services due therefrom, and further saving the right of any other person whatsoever. In witness etc. we have caused these our letters patent to be made. Witness myself at Westminster, 15th November in the first year of our reign (1399) By K.

1548 During the time of Bishop Ferrar attempt to re-organise the Diocese of St David's he was opposed in this by Thomas Young the precentor and Rowland Meyrick (father of the 2nd Earl of Essex's household steward) Their allies were the Devereux and the Barlows, whom Ferrar had estranged, the Barlows by challenging their claims to the farm of the prebend of Brawdy and the lease of Monkton and accusing them of withholding tithes that ought to have come to the Bishop from Carew and the Devereux by seeking to recover Lamphey. The Bishop was accused by his chapter of numerous charges of abuse of authority, maintenance of superstition, covertousness etc. and remained in custody till his martyrdom in Mary's reign. Meyrick proceeded to the office of a commissioner and Bishop of Bangor.

Letter

Erasmus Phillips, Sampson Lort and William Phillips, Pembroke Town to the Committee for regulation of Markets, the Inner Exchequer Chamber, Westminster

Having received their order of 15th June 1652 concerning the regulating of markets, enclosed in a letter from Mr Blackgrave, the writers caused it to be published at the public sessions holden for co. Pembroke at the town hall of Pembroke on 5 October. They made known such [fit] places within the county where markets may be directed, viz. , Mouton in the hundred of Castlemartyn on Tuesday, Fishguard in Kemes on Wednesday, Lawhadden in Dungleddy on Thursday, St Florence in Castemartyn on Thursday, and Narberth in the hundred of Narberth on Wednesday. The reason of their certificate herein is that there is no market in the county but in the corporate towns of Pembroke and Tenby and the county town of Haverfordwes. (Calender of the Records of the borough of Haverfordwest 1539 - 1660)

On June 15th 1810 Sir John Owen of Orielton purchase the estate of Monkton from Viscount Hereford for £45,545 He also spent considerable money on the refurbishing and embellishing Orielton.

1648 Peregrine Phillips Vicar of Monkton during the Civil War.

Acc/to J T Rees "History of Protestant Nonconformity in Wales" (1861) the Oxford-educated Phillips, the son of a vicar of Amroth, was appointed to the Llangwm living after briefly serving as his uncles curate at Kidwelly. Pluralism was very common, and with the backing of such gentlemen as Sir Hugh Owen, Sir Roger Lort and Sir John Meyrick, he was soon preferred first to Monkton, then to Cosheston and Pembroke St Mary's. When Cromwell placed a battery, in his garden with the aim of bombarding the castle Rev Phillips hid his flour in the bolster of his bed to save it from the hungry Roundheads who were searching for food. He was invited to preach before Oliver Cromwell and his troops during the siege of Pembroke (1648) probably on Sunday July 16 1648 and he so impressed the future Protector that he was invited aboard the men-of-war about to undertake the Irish campaign. During the Protectorate Phillips became widely known as a committed advocate of the governments religious policy. A very accomplished orator, hailed by many as the best in the county, he preached in almost every church English and Welsh, and before the Justices of the Assizes at Cardigan, Haverfordwest and Carmarthen. He must have relinquished his Pembroke incumbency when the parishes of Llangwm, Freystrop and Rosemarket were united (July 1656). Peregrine Phillips continued to be very active as an open-air preacher and public evangelist until he fell foul of the Act of Uniformity (1662) which banned all acts of worship not conducted in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer.

Upon his death at 68 years of age in September 1692, this unforgettable former rector of Llangwm, Cosheston and vicar of Monkton and St Mary's Pembroke was buried near the pulpit at Haroldston church.

The complaint of Richard Bathoe to the Starr Chamber 1602, not long after the execution of the earl of Essex. Bathoe who claimed to be a preacher resident in Ireland, alleged that, having landed at Milford and made his way to Pembroke about his necessarie affaires and business he made some slighting reference in private conversation to the late earl and his treason and was subsequently set upon and severely beaten up by an armed gang led by John Meyrick of the Fleet, Monkton brother of Essex's steward Sir Gelly. With Meyrick were Thomas Adams 'a desparate young gentleman', Hugh Powell, John Cheere, John Shakerlyne John Lynche and others, supported by a number of women, amongst whom were Meyrick's mother-in-law, Maud Wogan, wife of Morgan Powell, a merchant-gentleman of Pembroke, Meyrick's wife, Lucy, and her sister Elizabeth, wife of Nicholas Adams, and Jane Webb, the wife of George Powell of Pembroke.

(NB There are some doubts about Richard Bathoe -- was he an agent provecur as when he died in 1627 he was described as a "parson of Llangwm" and son of a previous parson of Llangwm)

Sir John Meyrick - third son of Sir Francis Meyrick was one of the military officers of the third Earl of Essex and fought in the thirty years war. He was wounded in 1632 at Maastricht. In 1640 commanded a regiment in which his brother Sir Gelly Meyrick served as an ensign. Later he became an MP for Newcastle -under-Lyme. During the Civil war he was a military adviser to the Earl of Essex and president of the Earls council of war. He married one of the daughters of Morgan and Maud Powell .

1641 Sir John Meyrick of Fleet was on of the officers appointed by Parliament for service against the rebels in Ireland.

1642 - Sir John Meyrick of Fleet was a supporter of the Parliamentary cause

In 1660 Francis Meyrick (also refered to as Captain Meyrick) was tenant of Boughwood [Bowett farm near Hundleton] the property of Leister, 6th Viscount Hereford . This he held on an annual tenancy but was trying to obtain a lease of either three lives or one and twenty years. There was also at the same time a land dispute in progress between William Holcombe of Brownslade (who acted as local agent) and Captain Meyrick quoting threats alleged to have been made by Mr Esix Meyrick

In 1661 Francis Meyrick had financial problems, he was unable to pay his rent but hoped to be able to do so in the near future as he was owed £20 by his nephew

Barri John de 1301 granted the advowson of Penally to Acornbury Priory," an Austin nunnery in Herefordshire, and that of Manorbier to the Priory of Monkton 1324 John de Barri was seised of five Knight's fees at Manorbier of the value of 100 marks It is probably of this John that there is the effigy in Manorbier church, he was a witness to the Angle charter of 1298 Shortly before that he by two fines passed his lands in Ireland to his nephew David, who, upon his uncle's death, claimed the lordship of Manorbier against Richard Simond who had married the daughter of Nicholas de Carew The grant to Acornbury may be accounted for by the fact that Barri Ann de 1301 daughter of John daughter, was prioress of the nunnery at Acornbury Priory He also had 2 sons.

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 39 S.E).

The church is a modern building a low red brick with red pantile roof church- Ellery Anderson- Cheltenham -architect

The village of Hundleton is situated about a mile and a half south west of Monkton, and the Church of St David Hundleton is a good half mile further on the Angle and Castlemartin Road. This Church today is the only other Church within the Parish of Monkton.

The site was given by Colonel Morgan James Saurin of Orielton, and was conveyed to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners on November 30th, 1891

The Church was licensed as "Holy Trinity".

The following is a report taken from the Archidiaconal Magazine of the opening of the first Church.

The Vicar was Canon Bowen.

"The event of the month to be recorded in our Magazine is the opening of the Iron Chapel of Ease at Hundleton, which took place on Monday, November 23rd.

The service commenced at 7.30, but long before the hour of opening the little church was crowded, many—indeed it was said by some that there were as many outside as inside—were unable to gain admission. The Vicar read the service, the lessons being taken by the Rural Dean, the Rev. I. G. Lloyd, Rector of Bosherston, and the Rev. W. J. Price, curate. An excellent and appropriate sermon was preached by the Venerable the Archdeacon of St. David's. The service was hearty and congregational. The singing on the occasion was taken by the choir of the Priory Church, and was given with excellent effect. Mr. Edmunds presided at the harmonium. The collection amounted to close upon £14 which was very good.

The building is neat and very well arranged. That it may become the centre of much spiritual activity should be the prayer of everyone.

It is much to be regretted that Colonel and Mrs Saurin, who took such all active part in the erection of this church should be leaving home so soon after the opening to winter abroad. we are sure all wish their sojourn abroad to be a very happy one.

1934 The present Church was built . The Vicar was the Rev Tudor Evans and the foundation stone was laid on Saturday July 8th 1933 by the Lord Bishop of St David's

Mr and Mrs W G Wynne of Mellaston had materially helped in the provision of the building. The new Church was consecrated on January 6th 1934

Cost £1500 designed by Mr Ellery Anderson , architect of Cheltenham, builders Messrs Sidney G Thomas and Son , builders of Pembroke.

Mr C Roblin was the organist. Altar carved in oak by Mr Ernest . Cross and the Candlesticks made by Mr Williams of Farnborough

Licensed for the Solemnization of marriages on May 21st 1954

Hundleton - The Parish Hall

October 1921 a plot of land was conveyed by Mr. Henry Williams to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in deed of gift, and some time later Mr. Davies of Crickmarren presented the Parish Hall to be erected on this site. Curate and congregation then got to work together to dig out the foundations, and prepare the site. This Hall has since been of the utmost use to the churchgoers of Hundleton Village, and the social functions which do so much to add to neighbourliness in a small village have always had an assured venue, thanks to this generous gift of land. The first organ, which had been presented to the Church by Mrs. Wynne of Mellaston, has now found a home in the Hall, and was replaced by a new organ

Hundleton Calvinistic Methodist Chapel.

Formed early in the 19c when services were held in the cottage on the site of which the chapel was built in 1820 but was not as a separate church till 1845 and was linked to Bethel at Pembroke and Walleston in Pullcrochan parish under the pastorate of Rev W Powell. The first Chapel was built in 1820 and the second in 1879, after the first became too small, at a cost of £750. The first deacons of Hundleton were William Griffiths, John Griffiths and George James. This John Griffiths was one who loaned £10 free of interest towards the building of the Neyland Zion Chapel.

Subsequent deacons included William John, James Long (who was very outspoken) William Tasker, William Richards, William Davies, and John Davies who became the first caretaker of the Victoria Nurses Home Pembroke Dock.

In 1851 Services were held in the afternoon and evening with an average afternoon congregation of 100

Any records would appear to have been held either by Bethel or Walleston.

Chapel Hill

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 42 N.E.).

A small hamlet in the south of the parish which in its name preserves the existence of the chapel of Crug Marren, a building in ruins in Fenton's time (Tour; P 375). In 1259 it was appropriated to Monkton Priory church by Richard Carew bishop of St. Davids.—Visited, 24th May, 1922.

Cross Park

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 39 S.E.; lat. 51° 39' So"; long. 4° 59' 20ff).

A field belonging to Moreston Farm. The reason for the name is not apparent, but a closely adjacent field. is also called Cross Park; both names suggest the former presence of a cross in the neighbourhood.—Visited, 23rd May, 1922.

Maidenwells Calvinistic Methodist Chapel-- Gilead

The first Chapel was built in 1846 but preaching had been occurring in homes for some time before that.

At first this chapel was a branch of Gershom Pembroke Dock but was later linked with the pastorate of Wallaston and Bethel St Twinnels parish. In 1851 the congregation was as large as 95 for the afternoon services

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 39 S.E.).

Acc to the Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments

A modern house, built on a site apparently occupied by successive residences from 1188, when Giraldus Cambrensis found Stephen Wiriet in possession, and the house " haunted by unclean spirits." In 1583 the property passed by marriage to Sir Hugh Owen of Bodowen, Anglesey!. His descendants remained at Orielton until 1809. The new proprietor built the present house.—Visited, 23rd May, 1922.

Stephen Wirriott of Orielton is mentioned in 1124 in. some of the chronicles of battles of which the history of those times almost entirely consisted;

In 1295 the Wirriotts of Orielton are spoken of as having a ' strong house' there; as all houses were fortified at that time, it was probably extra strong.

1300 Sir David Wyrriot of Orielton attended the Court of Joan de Valance Countess of Pembroke. He was probably the same David who was Sheriff of Carmarthen in 1314 and 1317. and was alive in 1324.

1384 Richard Wyrriott of Orielton was instructed to deliver Manorbier Castle to the king's hands.

1459 Thomas Wyrriot was Sheriff of Pembroke, He had been an officer in the bodyguard of Humphrey Duke of Gloucester and when the Duke was arrested and murdered Thomas was imprisoned but he was later released. His heir was

Henry Wyrriot who led troops in Henry VIII's war in France and was High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire in 1549 and 1559. he married Margaret natural daughter of Sir Rhys ap Thomas of Dynevor. their son, George. had a son who died young, and an only daughter, the Elizabeth aforementioned who married Sir Hugh Owen of Bodeon.

In 1580 one Thomas Wirriott was the bitter enemy of Sir John Perrott of Carew; in fact, Sir John's fall was greatly due to his untiring enmity. Wirriott was imprisoned in the Marshalsea during the quarrels and when he lost £1000 in a lawsuit with Sir John, he was thrown into Haverfordwest Gaol in default of payment.

In Lewis Dwnn's Visitation mention is made among gentlemen residing in Pembrokeshire between 1588 and 1613, of Sir Hugh Owen, Knt. of Bodeon, near Aberffraw, Anglesey, who had married Elizabeth, heiress of the Wirriotts of Orielton (she was daughter of George Wyrriot who High Sheriff in 1570); he was M.P. for Pembroke Boroughs in 1640, and in 1644 his son Arthur was one of a Committee nominated by Parliament for the defence and safety of Pembrokeshire and the adjoining counties.

At the time of the marriage of Elizabeth and Sir Hugh Owen the Orielton estates of Elizabeth consisted of :-

eighty farms

four water corn mills
and 5400 acres in south and mid Pembrokeshire .

There was again a link with Anglesey in later times. when Sir Hugh Owen, second Baronet, married in 1664, Arme, daughter and heiress of Henry Owen of Bodeon. The first connection is recorded in Boulston Church, on a monument to Lewis Wogan, Esq. of Boulston, who died in 1692. Among his four great-grand-fathers and mothers is mentioned Sir Hugh Owen of Bodeon, Anglesey, and Elizabeth Wirriott of Orielton, Pembrokeshire, whose daughter must therefore have been Lewis's mother, whose death, with that of her husband, Morris Wogan, Esq., is recorded on another monument in the same church.

In the 1670 Hearth Tax Orielton was assessed for 17 hearths

In 1713 Sir Arthur Owen was Whig Member for the Pembroke Boroughs.

Polling partisans of the Owen family of Orielton wielded pitchforks at polling in Pembroke 1741 to keep opponents out of the polling Hall.

In 1802 the house is described as neither ancient nor modern, being fronted with brick and the frames of the windows and the cornerstones are of freestone.

In 1803, when Sir Hugh Owen, sixth Baronet, came of age, 5000 persons are said to have attended the festivities. He died six years after, leaving Orielton and Bodeon away from his cousin Arthur, the succeeding Baronet, to another cousin, John Lord. Lord took the name of Owen, and was created Baronet in 1813. He built the new house in 1809 He died in 1861 and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Hugh Owen, who sold Orielton to M. A. Saurin, Esq., of Kilwendeg, near Boncath; he had married Margaretta Jones, niece and heiress to the owner of that place. The house at that time had been deserted and was ruinous necessitating rebuilding.

The present house has passed through various hands and was bought in 1954 by the naturalist and writer R.M. Lockley for development as a bird sanctuary. It is now a Field Study Centre.

Nash

St Mary

This was originally a very ancient church and it has been suggested that it dated back to the building of Upton Castle. Fenton gives a picture of it being very dilapidated in his day but I was unable to find any illustrations of description. I walked round looking many times, a joy in the early spring with its carpet of flowers. Only once though did I find any clues and then I could have been mistaken. Snow was on the ground and there was a line on the north side about two feet wide parallel from the present church wall. It is suggested that the effigies in Upton Chapel and the font were originally in this church which was the parish church while the chapel was just for the convenience of the Castle.

Nash Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments

This is a modern church possessing nothing of archaeological interest. The 13 century recumbent effigy of a knight, which formerly lay in the churchyard, "neglected and overgrown with moss" (Glynne "Notes" Arch Camb 1888, V v 125) has been removed to Upton Chapel visited 11th May 1922

"This Church seems to have been wholly rebuilt, except that some portions of the original walls are partially slated. It is a plain, oblong building, with square headed windows and a modern bell cot at the west end. In the Churchyard is a fine sepulchral effigy of a knight, neglected and overgrown with moss, with a helmet of 15c and his hand on his sword. There is also an old font with a square bowl"

"Archeologia Cambrensis 5786 Vol V 5th Series, August 4th 1871;"

I took many services at this church and for me it was always an enjoyable occasion. The Church is situated way off the main road along a narrow lane leading to what I believe was once a manor house but is now a farmhouse belonging to the Gibby family where Mrs Gibby serves tea and biscuits to all the congregation after the service. The Church one side of the lane and the farm is the other but just over the graveyard wall is a large pond with the remains of a mill. In spring the graveyard is a carpet of flowers and I often sat there before a service and mentally rewrote my sermon.

The organ (played for services when I took them by Mrs Skelton wife of Canon Skelton of Upton Castle who also chose the hymns and could always be counted on to pick ones that the congregation liked and could sing) is situated on a gallery at the west end and access is gained via very narrow stairs from the porch. The seating is rather unusual in that it consists of box pews, in two of which half of the occupants would be sitting with their backs to the altar. One of the double box pews was always occupied by Mrs Gibby but also sometimes as well by her grandchildren when they came to visit. In winter she had a single bar electric fire in the double pew as sometimes the church could be cold (In temperature maybe but there was always a warm friendly atmosphere there)

There is a two decker pulpit with narrow steps up.

The original Church dates back to at least 1291, and had some fine carving and effigies, one of a lady, and one of a Knight in mail armour but by the time of Fenton's visit in 1810 parts of the church had deteriorated so badly that they had been pulled down. The effigy of the knight was removed to Upton Chapel after spending years lying in the churchyard overgrown with moss.

Nash Church – Angela Jones

Fenton Records

Fenton

“On the way from Pembroke to Tenby I visited the Church of Nash, to which Upton was a chapel, where I have been informed there was an effigy of a Crusader. a great rarity here

The Church of Nash, though certainly ancient as containing the remains of one of the earliest followers of the crusades, and founded, no doubt, by the first baronial possessor of Upton Castle , probably the Crusader himself, neither has, nor appears to have had, any steeple, or other ornament whatever, being the meanest religious structure I have seen in this Hundred.

We found the knight of the cross, disgracefully lying without the north church wall under the dripping of the eaves, amidst the rubbish of an aisle that, being grown ruinous was taken down a few years ago by the patron of the living, and then Rector. The parts of the figure were of good sculpture and the minute wire armour particularly well executed. It was of purplish stone and of large size; the face was entirely broken off.

On examining the old man who had been employed to repair the Church and stop up the doorway leading to the Chapel, I was told that the Palestine warrior originally laid on a bench at the North end of the delapidated aisle.

To the discovery of his name and rank, there was nothing to help us; but the tradition was that he died abroad and that his body was landed at Cosheston Pill, little below the Church and that he was an Admiral and a giant; the effigy giving some countenance to the latter part of the story, being represented much above the ordinary stature.

One thing I have always puzzled about. I took many Services and always robed in the little vestry. It always seemed out of keeping with the rest of the Church as if it was a lot older.

NASH, a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (N. E.) from Pembroke; containing 128 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in the southern part of the county, and near a small inlet from Milford Haven, comprises a moderate portion of land, in a good state of cultivation. Its scenery, though not distinguished by any striking peculiarity of feature, is generally pleasing; and the adjacent country affords some interesting objects, and some views which are not destitute of beauty. The great turnpike-road leading from Narberth to Pembroke passes through the southern part of the parish. The living is a rectory, with the living of Upton annexed, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. 8½.; present net income, £130, with a glebe-house; patron, the Rev. William P. Evans: the tithes of the benefice have been commuted for a rent-charge of £80; and there is a glebe of about twenty-seven acres, valued at £55 per annum. The church is a very ancient structure, remarkable for the rude simplicity of its architecture, and is said to have been erected by one of the earliest proprietors of Upton Castle. A Sunday school is held in the church.

Introduction

The area we know today as Pembroke could have a very long inhabited history. Unfortunately many remains of previous inhabitation's have been destroyed by later building. What do we know? Stone age and Bronze man lived in Priory cave Monkton, did they also live in Wogan's cave? Mr Cobb suggests a maybe Roman connection as he believes Roman Bricks were built into parts of building work he examined . Yes, Roman coins have been found both in Pembroke and at Pennar but did Romans live here or just trade? St Daniel's Church maybe the pre-Norman religious centre of Penfro?

acc/to the Llandaff records the lands of this area belonged to St Teilo.

Amongst the various documents contained in the collection known as The book of Llan Dav which were brought together in connection with the claim of Landaff to episcopal jurisdiction over all churches of Teilo's foundation, wherever situated are several lists of the churches thus claimed, the lists being unquestionably of earlier date than the collection within which they are preserved. The churches which fall into what may be termed the Teilo area of the later county of Pembroke include

THE JOURNEY THROUGH WALES

The province of Pembroke comes next after Rhos, lying towards the south and by the sea: indeed, a branch of the sea divides the two. Its main town, also called Pembroke, is the capital of Dyved. It is built high up on an oblong plateau of rock, and it extends along the north and the south af an inlet of the sea which runs down from Milford Haven. Hence its name Pembroke, which means the head of the estuary.

Arnulf de Montgomery was the first to build a fortification here, from wooden stakes and turf, in the days of Henry I, King of the English. It was not very strong and it offered little resistance. When he went back to England, Arnulf left the fortress and a small garrison in the charge of Gerald of Windsor, a stalwart, cunning man, who was his constable and lieu tenant. Without more ado the inhabitants of South Wales began to lay siege to the place. They had just lost their prince, Rhys ap Tewdwr, a warlike leader, who had been betrayed by his own troops in Brecknockshire, and they were left with his son, Gruffydd, who was still a boy. Under cover of darkness fifteen knights deserted the fortress in desperation, clambered into a boat and tried to escape over the water. The very next morning Gerald transferred their estates to fifteen of their own men-at-arms, dubbing them there and then as knights. The siege lasted a long time, and those inside were greatly reduced and near the end of their tether. When they had hardly any provisions left, Gerald, who, as I have said, was a cunning man, created the impression that they were still well supplied and were expecting reinforcements at any moment: for he took four hogs, which was about all that they had, cut them into sections and hurled them over the palisade at the besiegers. The following day he thought of an even more ingenious stratagem. He signed a letter with his own seal and had it placed just outside the lodging of Wilfred, Bishop of St David's, who chanced to be in the neighbourhood. There it would be picked up almost immediately, and the finder would imagine that it had been dropped accidentally by one of Gerald's messengers. The purport of the letter was that the constable would have no need of reinforcements from Arnulf for a good four months. When this despatch was read to the Welsh, they immediately abandoned the siege and went off home.

The next thing Gerald did was to marry Nest the sister of Gruffydd, Prince of South Wales, with the object of giving himself and his troops a firmer foothold in the country. In the process of time she bore him a large number of children, both boys and girls. With the help of this family the sea-coast of South Wales was held secure by the English, and Ireland, too, was stormed,

1589 George Owen's Pembroke

Pembroke

The town of Pembroke standeth upon a long back or ridge of rock, being all one street in length without any cross streets. and being walled about with a strong wall of lime and stone and compassed on each side with a branch of Milford, being the upper end of the creek of Pennarmouth where the said creek parteth itself in two and, running up on each side of the town, compasseth the same as a strong moat, flowing at every tide in such sort that no access on horse or foot is permitted to the town but over two bridges, the town having three gates only and the town walls being strongly defended with six flanker towers in such sort as out of them the whole walls may be scoured and defended from approach of enemies. And in some of the same towers are fair springs of clear, sweet running water for the necessary relief of the people within the town, not to be cut off by any means.

At the west end of the town on the part where the said creek parteth itself into two branches standeth a fair, strong and large castle, strongly walled with a mighty thick wall all built of lime and stone. Having within the gate two large courts, an inner and an outer, being compassed with strong garretted walls and set forth in the outer parts with divers flanker towers of all sorts necessary for the defence thereof. The said castle is seated upon a high main rock of thirty and in most places forty foot high, naturally steep in most places and the rest easily to be made in such sort that if the castle walls might be battered (as most thereof cannot be), yet were it not possible to ascend up the said rock to enter the breach, the same being so high and inaccessible. Besides the tides daily flow about the same and the ooze and slime whereof the channel is full doth mightily defend the said castle from any assault of enemies.

This castle is thought almost impregnable. The weakest part thereof is a small ditch that joineth to the town, which is only defended with a dry ditch, and which may be made very strong and deep. The town walls springeth from the said castle and, stretching forth on each side of the said town, enclose the whole town, as it were, within one outer or base court of the said castle. All the castle walls are standing very strong without decay, only the roofs and leads having been taken down. Within the said castle there is the great cave called the Wogan, able if occasion were to receive a great multitude of people, being a place free from all assaults or battery, and in the same is a well of fresh water of great depth which cannot be taken away by any means possible, serving for the use of the people within the said castle. The gate or entrance of the said castle is made strong divers ways, as with drawbridges and portcullises and other means . . .

Danial Defoe records” we crossed over the isthmus to Pembroke which stands on the East shore of the great haven of Milford.

This is the largest and richest and at this time the most flourishing town of all south Wales . Here are a great many English merchants and some of them men of good business and they told us there were nearly 200 sail of ships belonging to the town small and great.called little England beyond Wales.

1804 The Scenery, Antiquities and Biography of South Wales Benj Heath Malkin

As you proceed up the harbour , this magnificent piece of water is forked by a peninsula in front, dividing the great reach up to Burton Ferry from Down Pool which forms so interesting an approach to Pembroke. Here ,as in all the numerous estuaries and creeks branching out from the great body the scenery becomes richer as less expanded. Fertility and beauty combine. The approach from the water shews the castle and the town to the most possible advantage. The noble and extensive ruin, hanging on the edge of the pool, with the mouth of the cavern opening as a sally port and the buildings of the ancient borough crouching under its command. the petty trade giving life to the scene without obscuring its predominant features of rural interest.

The town is old and has declined in the same proportion as Haverfordwest has risen in importance. The buildings about the water side and generally in the suburbs are verging fast on a state of decay; but the principal street which is long and wide has a very respectable appearance though without the air of business generally expected in a county town. It has however its attractions to call the people of Castlemartin together or days of great rejoicing Sir Hugh Owen's roast Ox produced a jovial confusion as could be witnessed in a better place. It is situated in a plentiful country; it has little or no trade; and under the circumstances affords a cheap retirement to many families with slender incomes

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis

PEMBROKE, a borough, market-town, and sea-port, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of Castlemartin, county of Pembroke, in South Wales, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Milford, 10 (S. by E.) from Haverfordwest, and 248 (W.) from London; the borough containing 7412 inhabitants, of whom 5441 are in the parish of St. Mary, 1223 in the parish of St. Michael, and 748 in part of St. Nicholas', or Monkton, parish. The name of this place is derived from the words Pen Bro, literally signifying a headland, or promontory, and originally applied to a district nearly corresponding in extent with the present hundred of Castlemartin, stretching out into the sea, and separating Milford Haven, on the north, from the Bristol Channel on the south. On the erection of a castle, and the consequent growth of the town, the name of the district in which they were situated was transferred to them, and subsequently to the whole of the county, of which that town became the capital. The early history of the place is involved in some confusion. It is stated by Giraldus Cambrensis, that Arnulph de Montgomery, in the reign of Henry I., raised a slender fortress of stakes and turf here, which, on his return into England, he placed under the custody of his constable and lieutenant, Giraldus de Windsor. In the Chronicle of Caradoc of Llancarvan, who was contemporary with Giraldus, it is expressly recorded that the castle was attacked in 1092, and again in 1094, by the forces of Cadwgan ab Bleddyn, but that it was so strongly fortified as to baffle every effort of that chieftain to reduce it. The latter of these dates, which is some years prior to the accession of Henry I., contradicts the statement of Giraldus Cambrensis, with respect to the time of the original foundation; and the result of the attacks by so formidable an enemy is at variance with his description of the character of the fortress. Arnulph de Montgomery, on the accession of Henry I., having joined in a confederacy against that sovereign, the castle of Pembroke, together with his other estates, became forfeited to the crown, and the king afterwards conferred the castle, together with the lordship of Carew, and several other manors, on Giraldus de Windsor, Arnulph's lieutenant, who had married Nêste, daughter of Rhÿs ab Tewdwr.

Norman Conquest of England

began the reign of Rhys ap Tewdwr, the last Prince of South Wales. His accession met, apparently, with little opposition. The legend that he returned from exile in Brittany to claim the throne of his ancestors is an embellishment of later chroniclers.

These were troublous times for Dyfed. In 1078 Menevia was “miserably devastated by the pagans”, and Bishop Abraham was slain. This was the Bishop the tombstone of whose sons was found in the late 1900’s in the cathedral. The venerable Sulien, who had resigned only two years before, was compelled to resume his episcopal charge. It was not long before the saintly old man, who had reluctantly quitted his retirement was called upon to take part in still more stirring scenes, Rhys ap Tewdwr was unable to protect the ecclesiastical metropolis of his dominions and was being hard pressed from another quarter. Trahaiarn ap Caradog from North Wales joined by the chiefs of Powys and Gwent and tried to expand his kingdom into the South. Rhys, found his natural ally in Gruffydd ap Conan, who, as he had been beaten back in his attacks on the North of Wales previously had joined Rhys in the south.

His forces probably landed at Porth Cais and where met and blessed by the Bishop

The battle was fought in Cardiganshire, Traihaiarn and the Chiefs of Powys and of Gwent were killed. Gruffydd became ruler of North Wales and Rhys the South

Gruffydd was betrayed into the hands of the Normans later by one of his own chiefs and was imprisoned at Chester

The Welsh chronicals tend not to favour Rhys read 1078 and then 1079

It would appear from the Domesday Book that Rhys paid an annual sum of £40 to King William this would indicate some sort of agreement with him. We also know that Neste Rhys daughter was, some say “educated”, some say held as a hostage at the King’s Court.

Rhys ap Tewdwr met his death when he was killed in battle by an old enemy Jestyn -- a relative who was ruler of Glamorgan and who was aided by the son of a Welsh ruler from the Cardigan district called Einion. Einion had fought with the Normans in several campaigns and enlisted the help of some of his Norman friends especially one called Fitzhamon who with eleven of his friends joined the force to raid the lands belonging to Rhys. Einion was promised the hand of Jestyn's daughter Nesta (whether she consented or not) as reward for his support. Rhys who was said to be about 90 was captured with his sons and beheaded.

As far as I have been able to find out Rhys was survived by three children. I suspect his eldest son was the Rhys killed in 1081. The rest all but an infant Gruffydd died with him. He was survived by two daughters Nesta who was at the court of the English King and Angharad.

This left the whole area of South Wales in complete flux. There was no one capable of succeeding Rhys; his wife was dead, his surviving son was an infant. The only relative other than his daughters able to rule was the treacherous Einion and there was so much hostility towards him that he dare not appear in the area.

In fact Einion had troubles enough. Jestyn had paid off the Normans etc who had supported him but refused to carry out his promise to Einion regarding Nesta. Einion was not very happy about this and had a word with his Norman friends. They returned and Jestyn had to flee, they divided Jestyn's estates up among them giving Einion the poorest portion, Miskin, but he also had Nesta and her personal property.

The Northern parts of the Estates belonging to Rhys were being invaded from the North.

A Norman Knight Martin de Turribus who held lands in both Somerset and Devon landed at Newport and set up a base at Nevern. He proceeded to defeat the Welsh at a battle at Morvill. It is interesting that the people living at Meline, Eglwysrwr and Nantgwyn are recorded as welcoming him without resistance. What is not recorded in the chronicles is that his grandson Sir William Martin was married to Angharad daughter of Lord Rhys whose land it was as she had inherited it from her father. It is very interesting as we shall see in the south that when tracing the estates in the north part of the county many of those who came into the hands of the Normans came not by conquest but by marriage. Many of the Normans were single men and took Welsh wives.

While Maryin de Turribus was sorting out the North of the property belonging to the granddaughter of Rhys, Arnulph de Montgomery came to the South. He was the son of Roger the great Earl of Shrewsbury, Roger de Belesme had not come to England with William the Conqueror as he was the knight entrusted by William to help William's wife Matilda to rule Normandy in his absence so therefore must have been well trusted by the King.

From Arnulph's father the Welsh Montgomery takes its name, though the castle was built by Baldwin in the Conqueror's time. But Roger retook it from the Welsh in 1090 and named it after the Norman seat of his family. He was perhaps the most influential and turbulent baron in Europe, and had married Mabel (the wicked daughter of wicked William Talvas), heiress of the grand old house of Belesme. This evil dame bore him five sons:

The notorious Robert; who assumed the title and lands of Belesme when his mother was murdered in her bath

2. William, a clerk.

3. Hugh of Chester, called by the Welsh, " Goch " (the Red), and slain by them in 1098

4. Robert of Poitou.

5. Arnulph, who seized Southern Pembrokeshire.

A sister Mabel, married Fitz Hamon whose name is associated with a few acts of murder and double dealing in connection with Glamorgan.

Of this family Henry of Huntingdon says that their sins were enough to frighten the devils themselves.

Brut y Tywysogyon edited by Thomas Jones Cardiff 1952

"One Thousand and one hundred (actually 1102) was the year of Christ when there was treachery between Henry, king of England and Robert, earl of Shrewsbury, who was called de Belleme, and Arnulf, his brother, who had come to Dyfed and had established the castle of Pembroke. And when the king heard that they were working treachery against him, he summoned them to find out the truth concerning that. But they sought pretexts to make an excuse, for they could not trust themselves to the king. And the king rejected their excuses after learning of their treachery. And when they knew that the king had learned of their treachery, and they dared not show themselves to him, they occupied their castles and fortified them, and summoned help to them from all sides and summoned to them the Britons who were under them, together with their leaders, namely the sons of Bleddyn ap Cynfyn, Cadwgan, Iorwerth and Maredudd. And they received them with honour, and gave them gifts and promised them many things and gladdened the land with liberty. And a second time they fortified their castles and encompassed them with ditches and strong walls and prepared provision and gathered together knights and gave them gifts. Robert occupied four castles, namely Arundel and Blyth and Bridgenorth and it was against Bridgenorth that the whole treachery had been aimed for he had built that without the king's permission and Shrewbury. Arnulf occupied Pembroke alone. And immediately after that they assembled hosts and summoned the Britons along with them. And while they were doing that Arnulf thought to make peace with the Irish and seek aid from them. And he sent messengers, that is, Gerald his officer, and many others, to Ireland and he asked for the daughter of king Muircertach for his wife. And that he obtained easily. The messengers came back joyful. King Muircertach sent his daughter and many armed ships along with her to the aid of his son in law. And for that reason the earls waxed proud against the king, without wishing for peace or agreement from him. And King Henry gradually gathered a host. And first he took the castle of Arundel. And thereupon through agreement and promises he gained possession of Blyth. And at last he came towards the castle of Bridgenorth and with him a great host. And after surveying the castle from a distance he took council as to how he might capture the earl or subdue him or drive him out of the whole kingdom. And he resolved in council to send messengers to the Britons; and he summoned to him in particular Iorwerth ap Bleddyn, and he promised him more than he would obtain from the Earl. And he gave to Iorwerth freely, without rent or payment, that portion of Wales which was in the hands of those earls, for his lifetime so long as the king lived; that was Powys and Ceredigion and half of Dyfed the other portion was in the hands of fitz Baldwin and Ystrad Tywi and Cydweli and Gower. And when Iorwerth ap Bleddyn was going towards the king's castle, he sent his war band to plunder the territory of earl Robert. And the war band, cruelly and hostilely executing their lord's behest, gathered vast plunder and ravaged the land and pillaged it; for the earl had before that ordered his men to take their flocks and herds and all their chattels into the land of the Britons, for he placed trust in them, not supposing that he would meet with opposition from them, not remembering the wrongs that the Britons had formerly suffered at the hands of Roger his father, and Hugh, his brother, and at the hands of their men, which was held in remembrance by the Britons.

Cadwgan, however, and Maredudd, sons of Bleddyn, were with the earl, knowing naught of that. And when the earl heard that, he despaired; and not trusting the help that was with him, because Iorwerth and his men had deserted him for Iorwerth was foremost of the Britons and the most powerful he sought a truce of the king to make peace with him or to leave the kingdom altogether.

Whilst they were about those things, Arnulf and his men had gone to meet his wedded wife and the fleet that had come to his aid. In the meantime Magnus, king of Germany (correctly of Norway), and with him a fleet, came a second time to Anglesey; and after felling for himself some trees for timber he returned to Man. And there he built three castles and a second time filled Man, which he had previously left desolate, with his men. And he asked for the daughter of Muircertach, king of Ireland, as a wife for his son.[NB she was already wife of Arnulf] And he obtained her easily and gladly. And he set him up as king over that island. And there he stayed that winter.

And when earl Robert heard that, he sent messengers to him to beg help for himself; but he obtained none from him. And when the earl saw that he was besieged on all sides, he asked permission of the king to leave the kingdom; and the king granted it to him. And then he left all that was his and sailed to Normandy. And then the king sent to Arnulf and commanded him to go after his brother and to leave the kingdom or else to come at the king's will with his head in his lap. And when Arnulf heard that, he preferred to go after his brother than to submit to the king's will, and he surrendered his castle to the king; and the king sent a garrison to keep it.

And after that, Iorwerth ap Bleddyn made peace with his brothers and he shared the territory with them. And after a short while he seized Maredudd, his brother, and imprisoned him in the king's prison. And he made peace with Cadwgan, his brother, and gave him Ceredigion and a portion of Powys. And thereupon Iorwerth went to the king, thinking that he would have his promises from the king. But the king did not keep faith with him, but took from him Dyfed and the Castle and gave them to a certain knight called Saer. And Ystrad Tywi and Cydweli and Gower he gave to Hywel ap Goronwy.

" Henry 1st was no more restrained in his passions than any other powerful ruler of the 12c. It made little difference to him that the beautiful Nest, daughter of the Welsh Prince Rhys ap Tudor, had been placed in his care as a royal ward;(she was William Rufus's hostage for the good behaviour of her family) he fell in love with Nest and seduced her, and she bore him a son. In those days, however, there was an accepted way of dealing with such a situation. Nest's baby son was named Duke of Gloucester and King Henry gave Nest in marriage to one of his barons, Gerald de Windsor, who it seems was in love with her himself. Gerald took his new wife with him to South Wales, where the fame of her beauty soon spread far beyond those parts as far, even, as the kingdoms of Gwynedd and Powys in the north. Though Gerald was a Norman Baron and maintained an armed force in Pembroke Castle, he was on terms of slightly uneasy peace with Prince Cadwgan, Welsh ruler of this land of Ceredigion as well as of Powys.....Then came a Christmas when Cadwgan ordained a great Eisteddfod in South Wales, to which everyone of distinction flocked including Nest. And with the guests came Cadwgan's daredevil son Owain. Owain lived in his father's second kingdom of Powys, in a hunting -lodge called Plas Eglwyseg at the head of a secret glen north of the Dee. Here he had gathered about him a band of reckless fighting men, with whom he would sally forth by the path he called his war path to hunt or raid or harass King Henry's men -at- arms. When he came to his father's Eisteddfod and set eyes on the lovely Nest he determined at once to carry her off. That very night he and his men broke into the castle of Pembroke, (other authorities say Carew, or Newcastle Emlyn) set fire to it and dragged Nest from her bed and carried her off to Owain's retreat at Plas Eglwyseg, where (it appears) she lived quite happily with her captor for some time as it alleged she bore him a child.

But the mad action of Owain ap Cadwgan brought terrible consequences. King Henry, appealed to by Gerald de Windsor ordered Prince Cadwgan to restore the stolen countess in pain of losing his kingdoms. Cadwgan's attempts to comply met with flat defiance from his son, who eluded all efforts to capture him and war broke out throughout Wales. Norman barons aided Cadwgan's Welsh rivals to take Powys from him and others robbed him of much of his southern kingdom. The new rulers of Powys disinherited Owain and at last succeeded in driving him out of his refuge at Plas Eglwyseg, whence he fled to Ireland, leaving Nest homeless.

The deserted beauty made her way south to be re-united with Gerald. A year or two later there was an attack by a raiding party from Ireland on South West Wales. This was opposed by the Gerald de Windsor in alliance with the Welsh. Owain had accompanied the raiders, but now elected to change sides and fight for his native land. In the midst of the battle Gerald recognized Owain, and even though he was fighting on the same side, he and his bodyguard fell upon Owain and slew him, thus wiping out, to the satisfaction of everyone who counted in those days, the dishonour he had suffered at Owain's hands.

Gerald de Windsor ended his warlike career by dying peacefully at his wife's castle of Carew, (c1120) but his wife's career was not finished. Though her children were now grown up and married, Nest still had her beauty - She transferred her affections to Stephen Constable of Cardigan Castle then to the Sheriff of Pembroke, presenting each of them with a son.

[Acc to Lewis 1839 he states that :-

According to Caradoc of Llancarvan, Giraldus or Gerald de Windsor rebuilt the castle of Pembroke in the year 1105, on a more advantageous site, called "Congarth Vechan," and removed into it his family and his goods. Soon after this, as we are informed by different authorities, Owain, son of Cadwgan ab Bleddyn, having heard the beauty of Nêst extolled at a banquet given by Cadwgan either at the castle of Aberteivy, or at that of Eare Weare in the parish of Amroath, came, under the pretence of relationship, to pay her a visit at this place, and becoming enamoured during the interview, resolved upon carrying her away by force. For this purpose, having obtained the aid of some young men as profligate as himself, he returned in the evening to the castle, which he entered unobserved; then, placing a guard over the chamber of Nêste, he set fire to the building, and, in the confusion and alarm that ensued, forcibly conveyed her and her children to his residence in Powys. Other writers, however, are of opinion that the castle of Carew was the scene of this outrage and abduction.]

1109 Gilbert de Clare, surnamed Strongbow, was created Earl of Pembroke by Henry, and thus became possessed of the royal territories in this quarter, and of the castle of Pembroke.

1138 The earldom was became a county palatine, with the privilege of jura regalia; and under the authority of its earl, a session and a monthly county court were held within the castle. In the latter all pleas of the crown were determined, fines levied, and recoveries passed; the writs were issued in the name of the earl, who held also at this place his courts of chancery and exchequer. Strongbow enlarged the castle, which he strengthened with additional fortifications, and made in every respect a residence suitable to the dignity of the elevated rank he held. He also incorporated the inhabitants of the town which had arisen under the protection of the castle, and surrounded it with a lofty embattled wall, defended by numerous bastions, and entered by three principal gates and a postern.

Gilbert de Clare,s grand daughter' husband William Marshal succeeded in 1199 he and his sons built castle as it stands today with well made right angle entrances of a sort designed by the Infidel to resist a battering ram, copied by the Marshalls when they got home; the keep now occupies the site once humped by the motte

William Karquit, sheriff of the province (provincia) ordered his officers and apparitors to take eight yoke of oxen belonging to the priory of Penbroc, where Gerald de Barri was fulfilling his legation, and drive them to the castle. When required for the third time to restore the same, he utterly refused and even promised worse, Gerald sent word to him that unless he restored the oxen he would be placed immediately under sentence of excommunication, to which he replied that he would not dare to excommunicate the king's constable in his own castle. Gerald replied that when the sheriff heard all the bells of the whole monastery rung at triple intervals then he would know without doubt that he was being excommunicated.

Immediately the messengers had returned, by authority of his legation, with candles lit, he solemnly gave the sentence of excommunication on him, in the presence of the monks of that place, and many of the clergy of the country, and likewise caused all the bells to be sounded together, as was customary, to confirm the sentence or rather to announce the fact.

On the morrow, the robber came to the castle of Lanwadein, before David, the diocesan bishop, and Gerald and his colleague, Master Michael, whom the archbishop had attached to him, who had gone there, restitution having been made and satisfaction given, when he was beaten with rods, he was to be absolved.

Close Roll, 9 Edward III m19 (Cal pp411 2)

To the treasurer and barons of the exchequer. William Crippyngis, of co. Pembroke in Wales, has besought the king by his petition as Thomas de Hompton, at the time when Roger de Mortuo Mari, late earl of March, had the custody of co. Pembroke by the king's commission, and Thomas was the steward of the earl there, had caused William to be taken and long detained in prison, and while he was in that prison compelled him by force of such imprisonment to make a letter of obligation to the earl to pay 200 marks to the earl at certain terms contained in the deed, which was delivered to the exchequer for levying that money for the king's use by reason of the earl's forfeiture; and thereupon prosecution was so far made against William for the king at the exchequer that William, appearing in person before the treasurer and barons in the exchequer, asserted that he had made that deed by force of imprisonment as aforesaid, and offered to verify this in the way which the king's court should think fit; and afterwards, because William believing that a certain issue of the affair had been ordained by the king's court, did not come to discuss that affair in his absence before the treasurer and barons on the day given to him according to the process held thereupon, to answer upon that affair, it was considered there that the king should recover £128 6s 8d., this being in arrears of the said 200 marks, the said answer of William not being discussed to be pleased to grant that William may be admitted to such verification, notwithstanding the aforesaid consideration, the king considering that the said deed ought to be of none effect if it should be found to have been made as the said Stephen (sic) pretends to verify, and wishing to do William a favour, in discharge of his conscience, orders the treasurer and barons to admit him to the said verification in the same state in which it was before the said judgement was rendered, the record and process held before them upon the premises being viewed, those being summoned before them who ought to be ; and to cause justice to be done further in that affair both for the king and for William, notwithstanding the same consideration, causing the execution of the said £128 6s 8d so recovered, levied from William's lands and chattels for the king's use, to be superseded.

Charters of Pembroke

Pembroke received its first charter of Incorporation from Gilbert Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, in the time of Stephen.

1168, Henry II. confirmed to them all the privileges which they had previously enjoyed; also granting that they should not answer in any plea out of their own town, unless the same should concern the crown; that they should be exempt from toll in Bristol, Gloucester, Winchester,

Devonshire, Cornwall, Rochelle, and Normandy; and that they should have an eight days' annual fair, beginning at the feast of St. Peter and St. Paul.

By a charter of King John's the freedom from toll appears to have been extended, and a second fair of two days granted, commencing on the eve of John the Baptist.

All former charters were confirmed by Richard III. in the 2nd year of his reign, by Henry VIII. in the 9th year, by Edward VI. in the 1st year, and lastly by James I. in the 5th, of his reign. In the grant by Richard it was declared, that "the town shall now become a corporate body, instead of being, as hitherto, incorporate; and shall consist of a mayor, two bailiffs, and the burgesses of the said place."

The title of the corporation was "the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses of the town and borough of Pembroke," and the government was vested in a mayor, an indefinite number of common-councilmen, a town-clerk, two bailiffs, two serjeants-at-mace, and an unlimited number of freemen or burgesses; the mayor and common-council forming the controlling body. The mayor, who was a justice of the peace concurrently with the county magistrates, also coroner, and a judge of the "Fortnight Court," was elected in July, by the burgesses, out of three members of the commoncouncil proposed in council as candidates. The councilmen were appointed by a majority of the council and the mayor, and those of them who had served the office of mayor were styled aldermen: one of the bailiffs was chosen by the mayor, the other by the council; and the serjeants-at-mace were elected in a similar manner.

Translation Of The Charter Of Richard II To Pembroke

exhibited at the Council Chamber, Pembroke. 30/8/35

by A.J.Williams, M.A. LL.B.

Richard, by the grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland too, all to whom these present letters shall come, greeting.

We have inspected the letters, patent and exemplification, under the seal of the late Father, Adam, Bishop of Menevia, lately made in these words:

Adam, by divine permission, Bishop of Menevia, to all to whom the present letters shall come, greetings, and the permanent memory of these exploits. We deem it worthy and an acceptable work to God, and we trust to do a profitable service, if through us the noble exploits of Kings, and things particularly useful to the condition of our Diocese, which have long been buried in oblivion, be discovered and brought to light by the aid of our pen. We have discovered in our Treasury, and among the archives of our Church of Menevia, among other old records in an ancient book, the perfect tenours of charters of the old text, free from all faults and suspicions, granted by Henry of renowned memory, late King of England, Duke of Aquitaine and Count of Anjou, to the town and burgesses of Pembroke and Haverford. The tenour of this Charter is a grant to the town and Burgesses of Pembroke, with a rubric of that kind written in red ink, " The Charter of Pembroke, word for word, with nothing added or taken away, is known to be on this wise".

Henry, by the grace of God, King of England, Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine and Count of Anjou, to the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls and Justices, Barons and Sheriffs, and to all his faithful people of all England, Wales, Ireland, Normandy, Brittany, Anjou, Poitou, Gascony, and to all his men, whether dwelling on this side or beyond the sea, greeting. Know ye that I have given and granted, and by this my present Charter, have confirmed to my burgesses of Pembroke all their liberties, immunities and free customs as freely and fully as they had them in the time of King Henry, my grandfather.

Wherefore, I will and firmly enjoin that all persons who shall enter the port of Milford with merchandise, whether they wish to buy or sell on the land, shall come to the bridge of Pembroke and sell and buy there. Or, if they wish otherwise, let them do business at the Cross, discharging their lawful customs; and that all merchandise which is bought in the County of Pembroke to be carried into England, ought to be shipped at the bridge at Pembroke, paying their customs; and that all persons who come to my market at Pembroke, shall have the security of my peace from the ford of Landfey and from Stentbrigge, and from the Great Ditch at Pencoyt and from the Passage from the hour of nine on the Sabbath to sunset on Monday, if they do not break my peace.

I also command that if any of my burgesses of the said town, for one year and a day shall hold house or lands which belong to the said town, without reproach, and anyone shall afterwards claim right, let him not have it if he shall have in the meantime remained in my kingdom.

If any man of whatsoever place remain in the same town for a year and a day, without reproach, whether he be a freeman or a serf, he shall ever after remain my freeman and a burgess of the same town.

And, when a burgess of the said town, by whatsoever death and in whatsoever place, dies on land or sea with a will or without a will, his heir shall have all his goods by payment of a relief of twelve pence.

I also grant that the burgesses of the said town shall have grazing rights in my forest of Nerbart and Coytrath, and timber rights in the same town by permission of the forester, and they may take decayed wood to burn wheresoever they shall find it; and if they shall have swine in my forests, they shall be acquitted of pannage.

I also will and command that those things which the aforesaid burgesses shall perform in the said town, if the debtors are willing to render in the same town, they may take their pledge (Cattle). But, if it shall happen that my said burgesses ought to go into our army, the safe keeping of my town being in the hands of their warden, let them go with my bailiff, so that they may return at night. But if the army be raised by their warden, so that the merchants may serve me at my camp, the custody of the town being safe, they shall go.

Whatsoever merchandise any of my aforesaid burgesses shall buy, if anyone shall claim the same as stolen, he shall acquit himself by oath and by his witnesses, and he shall lose the same chattel and what he gave for it.

Also, my aforesaid burgesses shall answer no plaint out of their hundred unless it be that which pertains to the royal crown. Their forfeiture in the hundred and shire court is twelve pence.

All the merchants of the County of Pembroke, by the appointment of the warden of the burgesses, shall come to their merchant guild.

I also will and grant, and firmly enjoin that the same burgesses shall have the aforesaid liberties and their customs well, quietly and freely, with the addition of their other liberties and customs which they still remember.

Know ye, furthermore, that I have given and granted, and by this, my present charter, confirm to the same my burgesses acquittance from toll, pontage and havenage, and from all customs whatsoever at Bristol, Gloucester, Winchester, Devon, Cornwall, Rochelle, Normandy and throughout all my lands in commotes, in burgages, in castles, in towns, in fairs and markets, in uplands, in woods, in plain, in roads, in lands, in waters and in all other places. I also forbid anyone to do injury to them in the matters which I have granted to them, and by this my present charter, have confirmed; nor shall anyone draw them into pleas concerning the liberty and acquittance granted to them under forfeiture of fifty pounds sterling.

Furthermore, be it Known to you that I have given and granted to the same, my burgesses of Pembroke, a fair of eight days at the feast of the Apostles, Peter and Paul, and to all coming to the same, my firm peace, those being excepted who have forfeited my peace, and they shall have the same liberties and customs at the fair as they have at my market in the same town on Sunday.

And if any heir is such, (ie. in respect of his youth), that he cannot hold and defend his land, if the burgess who has died left a will, let his heir and the inheritance remain the custody to which he,

on his death bed, committed him. But, if he shall not have left a will, then the heir and inheritance, by the advise and consent of the nearest relatives, being my burgesses, shall remain in the custody of any one of his friends. In witness of the foregoing, we have ordered our seal to be hereto attached.

Given in our manor of Landfey, the seventh day of the month of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand three hundred and sixty eight, and in the eighth year of our consecration. We,(ie. Richard II), therefore having perused the tenour of the exemplification of the said letters of the aforesaid Bishop, at the request made to us by the Burgesses of Pembroke, the tenour of these presents we have made to be exemplified. In witness wherefore we have caused these, our letters, to be made patent. Witness ourselves at Westminster on the sixth day of the month of February in the first year of our reign.]]

Municipal Corporation Act

Under this Act the corporation is styled the "Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses," and consisted of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, forming the council of the borough, which is divided into two wards, and of which the municipal and parliamentary boundaries are the same. The council elects the mayor annually on November 9th, out of the aldermen or councillors; and the aldermen triennially from among the councillors, or persons qualified as such, one-half going out of office every three years, but being re-eligible: the councillors were chosen by and out of the enrolled burgesses, on November 1st, one-third going out of office every year. Aldermen and councillors must each have had a property qualification amounting to £500, or be rated at £15 annual value. The burgesses consisted of the occupiers of houses and shops who have been rated for three years to the relief of the poor. Two assessors for each ward, and two auditors, were elected annually on March 1st by and out of the burgesses; and the council appoint a town-clerk, treasurer, and other officers on November 9th. The total number of borough magistrates was seven.

1534 Lawlessness in Wales

Juries failed to convict the local powerful magnates either out of fear or because they were bribed. Many of the more major criminals were friendly or related to the local magnates witness Sir John Perrott, the town authorities and the pirates living in Quay St. Haverfordwest. Murder went unpunished except by the Council of Wales the magnates would force the local population to pay the magnates fines.

Henry authorised Rowland Lee, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield (although a clergyman, he had never preached) to stop the crime in the Marches of Wales. He was a man who had little love for the Welsh and was appointed President of the Council for Wales with power to order executions and he is reputed to have had 5,000 people hanged in his six years as President

.Henry VIII backed him with a series of laws:-

- 1] Juries suspected of giving false verdicts were to be severely punished by the Council
- 2] no night time crossing of the River Severn was permitted (this was to stop cattle raiding)
- 3] No one was to carry arms and arthel (befriending criminals) and commorthas (gatherings at which collections were made to pay the fines of local magnates) were forbidden
- 4] All offenders escaping from a lordship had to be returned.
- 5] Marcher lords' officials were to be tried by the Council if they wrongfully imprisoned or fined people.
- 6] Crimes committed in the Marches could be tried in the nearest English county

This was followed by the Act of Union

1535 Act Of Union, S. 17.And Relevant Acts

That the Lordships, Towns, Parishes, Commotes, Hundreds and Cantreds of Haverfordwest, Kilgarran, Lansteffan, Laugherne otherwise called Tallaugherne, Walwyns Castle, Dlewysland, Lanwehaden, Lanfey, Herberth, Slebeche, Rosmarket, Castellon and Landofleure, in the said country of Wales, and every of them shall be united annexed and joined to and with the County of Pembroke.

Union was brought about in three stages

An Act which said that eight JPs were to be appointed in each Welsh shire. The English legal requirement of £20 a year income did not apply. Shires were to be divided into Hundreds fitting the old commotal areas of administration.

An Act was for "laws and Justice to be Ministered in Wales in like form as it is in this Realm" This was designed to make Wales part of England. It abolished the rights and privileges of the Marcher lords and ordered that English law be applied. Welsh men could then stand for Parliament, but were only allowed to hold office in Wales if they could speak English. Two Commissions of Inquiry were appointed.

One to fix boundaries and one to consider whether to keep any of the laws of Hywel Dda

In the rural deanery of Pembroke there were 41 parishes all told. Within this deanery were some of the best benefices in the county Carew (£43) Tenby (£26) and Narberth (£25). In all there were 12 parishes worth more £10 a year. Of these only two had a resident parson in 1534 and they were two of the least valuable Begelly (£12) and Bosheston (£11)

1538 Official attacks on shrines and places of pilgrimage

An Act giving the Council of Wales and the Marches wide powers over Wales and the Bordering English Counties of Herefordshire, Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, Shropshire and Chester.

It had powers to hear all criminal cases brought to it by poor people who couldn't afford to go to common law courts, it tried serious offences and heard appeals from lower courts which it was responsible for supervising. This was abolished in 1641

.Court of Great Sessions was established to take place twice a year for six days at a time in every shire, presided by the assize judges.

Quarter Sessions were to be held by the new JP's

County Courts were to be held by the sheriffs monthly and also Hundred Courts for minor matters every fifteen days.

Sheriffs position was downgraded they were in future only allowed to hold office for one year and were under the control of the JP's they also were put in charge of county goals

Bailiffs were reduced to supervising executions, pillories and whippings

Constables of the peace were appointed in each hundred under the control of the JP's.

This new system of courts lasted until 1830.

The JP had to take oaths of supremacy and allegiance, recognizing the Monarch as head of the country and of the Church, they were also required to supervise inns, regulate alehouses, maintain bridges, apply regulations on weights, and deal with vagrants and later under Queen Mary to supervise the maintenance of roads. During Elizabeth's 1st reign the administration of the Poor

Laws including poor relief, the regulation of manual workers wages and the establishment and management of houses of correction which provided compulsory work for the unemployed.

Under an Act passed in 1530 to deal with an "alarming" increase in robberies and theft "Any person, being whole and mighty in body and able to labour, found begging or being vagrant and giving no satisfactory account of how he or she lawfully obtained his or her living" could be arrested by a constable. A JP could have him or her stripped naked, tied to a cart and whipped "till his or her body should be bloody". The vagrants then had to swear to return to their birth place or where they had lived for the last three years and there "labour as a true man ought to do".

1554 Before this date JP's could only arrest people on definite charges

After they could arrest people on suspicion and interrogate them for three days then if need be commit them for trial. At these felony examinations the person who arrested the accused as well as those who had accused him had to appear. If the JP felt the accused had a case to answer, he noted "the examination of the said prisoner and information of them that bring him of the fact and the circumstances thereof for certification to the next gaol delivery". He then bound the accusers to give evidence at the trial and committed the accused to prison. If two JP's were present the prisoner could be granted bail.

Offenders committing Misdemeanours (drunkenness and brawling for exmple) could be dealt with "summarily" (without a full trial) by a single JP, often in the JP's own house.

1555 Responsibility for the upkeep of the roads fell on the parishes. Each parishioner was supposed to give four days labour (later increased to 6) towards the maintenance of the roads. - The Act was not rigidly enforced. This state of affairs existed until the setting up of the Turnpike Trusts by Acts of Parliament which were really private companies that built, improved and maintained roads and could charge travellers tolls for using them

1572 Act for the Punishment of Vagabonds and for the relief of the poor and impotent (helpless) started:

"Where all parts....of England and Wales be presently with rogues, vagabonds and sturdy beggars exceedingly pestered, by means whereof daily happeneth.... horibble murders, thefts and other great outrages.... be it enacted [that any over 14 years old] be brought before one of the justices of the peace.... and be presently committed to the common gaol.... there to remain.... until the next sessions of the peace or general gaol delivery"

Anyone then found guilty was whipped and burned through the "grisle" of the right ear with an inch thick "hot iron".

JP's had to compile a register of the "poor, aged and impotent" and then tax the community to raise money to care for them. They were to appoint overseers of the poor to specialise in poor relief.

1576 Act instructed JP's to buy work materials and provide "houses of correction" in which vagabonds were to be "strictly kept as well in diet as in work, and also punished from time to time"

The importance of Pembroke subsequently to the abolition of the palatinate depending principally upon its castle, which, after the events of the civil war, was never re-fortified and left to decay. There was a further decline, owing to its remote situation and want of commerce; and though it nominally retained its dignity as the capital of the county, it dwindled into comparative insignificance, as all the substantial benefits arising from that distinction were transferred to Haverfordwest, which, from its more central situation, was found better adapted for the transaction of the business of the shire.

The export of cloth from the area had virtually ceased and George Owen laments "The trade of clothinge used in tymes past in this countrie ys now utterly neglected, whereby thousands were mayntayned" Owen estimated that twice as much wool was shorn in Pembrokeshire as forty years previous but was sold unwrought acc/t tradition the woolen manufacturing in West Wales declined in the 16c due to an epidemic of "the sweating sickness".

1545 63 Acc/to George Owen Pembroke "Very ruinous and much decayed" with an estimated population of about 630

The sum of £200 towards the house of correction, which was never made nor any person put on work therein.

And £40 yearly towards thc relief of maimed soldiers where there are but two maimed in the said county which are allowed only but £11 per annum.

And £12 yearly levied for the relief of persons where there is but £6 employed. And also for levying of the sum of 20 marks imposed upon the whole county towards the repairing a little bridge called St. Katherine's Bridge, which should have been repaired by the next two parishes adjoining and not by the whole county.

And for the raising and levying of divers other sums of money for the supposed repairing of divers other decayed bridges within the said county, and converting the moneys to their own uses. And not employing of the same according to the true purpose, intent and meaning of the decrees taken and the laws of this realm ordained for the true and due use and employment of the same.

Which grievances, with the said petition enclosed, were by your lordship in your honour's letters recommended unto the deputy lieutenants and others of the justices of the peace of the said county, requiring them duly to examine the matter and to take order therein and to make due certificate thereof to your lordship. Which letters your petitioner did deliver accord ing to the direction of the same. And in respect there was some doubt made that your petitioner did pcefer the said petition without the privity or consent of the rest of the inhabitants of the said county, the petitioner has brought certificate under divers persons' hands of the said county purporting their consent thereunto.

The petitioner now sheweth that Thomas Canon, esquire, one of the deputy leutenanys of the said county, dot'h demand £32 of the country for his travail and expenses in [purchasing?] of the mises imposed upon the inhabitants of the said country, and therefore humbly prays respite of the payment of the same until order be taken for the payment of the said moneys remaining, not employed and spent by the treasurers.

And that Sir James Bowen, knight, now appointed by the whole county indifferent to be treasurer and receive the moneys not employed and remaining in the hands of the said former treasurers, and out of the same to make satisfaction to the said Mr. Cannon and to account to the said county for so much as shall remain in his hands not employed. And withal sheweth that one Mr. Swynnew has a pension of 20 marks by colour of having been a maimed soldier, who was apparent to be hurt in the said county and not in His Majesty's service, and therefoo prays a suspension of his pension till the matter shall be further examined before your honour.

1650 February 22 Act for the better propogation and preaching of the Gospel in Wales 71 commissioners appointed most of them prominent Parliamentary supporters to investigate complaints against the clergy and to eject those whom they considered unfit. Amongst the Commissioners appointed were Sir Erasmus Philipps of Picton Castle and Samual Lort of Stackpole Court

(196 clergy deprived of their living in South Wales within 3 years offences included pluralism, ignorance, drunkenness, keeping an alehouse, or supporting the King. A group of 25 Approvers were appointed to select "godly and painful men" to fill the vacant livings but their found the task well nigh impossible and a system of "itinerate" preachers was forced upon them).

The Act also attempted to establish a national system of schools. The approvers were charged with appointing suitable schoolmasters 63 new schools were opened in the market towns of Wales where children of both sexes were taught to read and write and count without paying fees.

Erasmus Phillipps, Sampson Lort And William Phillipps To The Committee For Regulating Of Markets, Inner Exchequer Chamber, Westminster.

Having received your order of the date of the 15th of June 1652 concerning the regulating of markets enclosed in a letter from Mr. Blakgrave, we according to the contents thereof have caused the same to be openly published at the public sessions holden for the county of Pembroke at the town hall of Pembroke the fifth day of this instant October, the which we certify as is desired. And further we make bold to make known unto you such places within the said county as we conceive fit where markets may be directed viz. Monnton in the hundred of Castlemartyn on Tuesday, Fishgard in the hundred of Kemes on Wednesday, Lawhadden in the hundred of Dungleddy on Thursday, St.

Florence in the hundred of Castlemartyn on Thursday, and Narberth in the hundred of Narberth on Wednesday. And the reason of our certificate to you herein is for that there is not any market in the county but in the two corporate towns of Pembroke and Tenby and the county town of Haverfordwest.

1660 October 1. Boughwood.

Francis Meyrick To Mr. George Garrett.

To defraud or to contest with my lord, far be that thought from me. It pleased you, being my lord's agent, at your last being in the country, to suffer me to continue tenant to those lands and tenements which I held that time of his lordship, not cutting down any timber or selling any furze from off the land, paying the rent and tithe of my corn as formerly I did. I confess I ploughed up two acres in the wood wheoin there has not been sown these forty years and upward any corn, and I had part of the East Close in the parish of Pernbrocke called St, Maries in corn also, for which I paid no tithe, nor did I formerly in regard it was part of the priory demesnes, and in my weak judgment if I had paid the tithe I should have brought the priory demesnes to have paid tithe wool, lambs, cheese and hay to the minister of the two parishes, which has not been paid in any man's memory, and so consequently have prejudiced my lord or his tenant who shall hereafter hold it, but rather than I will incur his lordship's displeasure I shall be willing to give his lordship any reasonable satisfaction.

Sir, you know I pay a great rent for Boughwood, which is as much as any man will give unless it be one that will hold the plough himself, I have been at a great charge on it. It is a bare, open place, neither succour for young cattle or sheep without the wood, and I have no encouragement either to manure, hedge or build on it, having no term, so that if yon please to use the means whereby a lease of three lives a one and seventy years on it with the wood may be procured from his lordship, I shall not be unmindful nor ungrateful to you for your love and favour herein. Endorsed in another hand :

William Holcombe To Mr. George Garrett At Ipswich,

I have written unto Mr. Browne as concerning his rent and have desired him to pay it into the hands of Mr. John Acrode and take his receipt. I did speak with Mr. Richard Brown's brother and did cause him to make fine in Mouncton House. On Tuesday last Mr. Hinton kept court in Mouncton for my honourable lord and there I caused a new jury to be formed and had five of the old jury sworn as witnesses concerning that piece of land which Mr. John Lortt caused to be ploughed and claimed it to be his brother's land called by the name of my lords Court, which the jury brought to be my lord's when you were here and do continue in what they said and say plainly that it is my lord's land and was ever so, to which the new jury have assented unto and have given it under their hands, which you shall receive by the next. I have not yet received any more rents.

Sir, I am presented by the mayor of the town of Pembroke for the repairing of the chancels of the two churches of Pembroke, which must be repaired. Sir, I desire your advice. Worthy sir, if you think it convenient I shall wait on you and my lord at London as concerning my father's business when you shall think fit.

Mr. Browne of Pembroke tells me he built this last summer a house in Pembroke 39 foot long and near 18 foot within the walls, all with stones, and the wall 2 foot 3 inches thick and 24 foot high, and bought most of the stone and the slate for the house, all timber work, and all materials. This work, Mr. Browne thinks, will cost him about £250.

William Holcombe To Mr. Georg Garrett At Ipswich.

I thought fit to write unto you now in regard I fear my letters do miscarry by the post. Sir, as for my lord's rents, I have received them and should be very glad to give an account for the same, but if you think fit I shall gladly wait on you and my honourable lord about the last of April to pass my account and shall then bring up my lord's rents that will be due at Lady day next, if you please to give order, and should then gladly take a lease of our house if you think fit.

Sir, as for Mouncton farm, I suppose Mr. Browne will not hold it, for he was telling me that my lord did intend to come here himself, but that is not likely. Mr. Strasy the victualer has a desire to take it, but what he will give I cannot tell. But if you please my father and myself will give as much as any man alive shall, but I shall protest unto you Mr. Browne has much worn it and ploughed it so that there is not one foot of meadow on it. Yet nevertheless you and I shall not differ for I shall leave all things to yourself, for I deal truly with you. I desire to be my lord's servant and your's for I [word omitted] there is no man in Walse that can make more of it than my father can. Therefore if you please I shall take it and give my honourable lord £50 per annum. But the first year I desire there may be some abatement made of it so that we may not exceed the rent that Mr. Browne now gives, and every year after I shall be willing to give £50 per annum. Mr. Brown told me that my honourable lord told him that his tenant Holcombe proffered £50 per annum for it: therefore I am loth, and so is my father, if I should be worse than my word, always provided that we may have the wood with it that Captain Meyricke holds.

I have glazed the west chancel of Pembroke, but for the other church I shall not meddle with that till further order, for that will cost at least £10 to be done sufficiently, but it may be made to serve three or four years better cheap. Mr. Bywater will not be reformed, and what to do for a minister I cannot tell.

It's the desire of your poor friend to be my lord viscount's tenant for St. Daniells lot of tithe. I pray you, being his agent, to give order to Mr. William Holcombe, your friend and mine, that I may have some years upon it. Although the rate is raised double by it was formerly, It will not be amiss for the landlord to be at a certainty, let tillage increase or decrease, or let the price of corn be cheap or dear. Subscribed : If you possibly abate of £17, which was the rate I gave last year, it will be well. Pray use your interest with all expedition and I shall not be wanting to gratify you for your trouble herein, and what charge you are out shall be thankfully repaid. Elections Pembroke

Haverfordwest Corporation MS. 421.

Slebech MS. 5609.

From 'The Mayor And Diverse Burgesses Of Ye Ancient Borough Of Wiston' To The House Of Commons.

That the said borough of Wiston is an ancient borough by prescription and hath divers franchises and privileges belonging thereunto.

That the mayor and burgesses thereof share a right together with the mayor and burgesses of Pembroke and the liberties thereof and the mayor and burgesses of Tenby and the liberties thereof in the said county of Pembroke to vote at the election of a burgesse to serve in Parliament for the said borough of Pembroke, and ought to have public notice given them of the time appointed for every such election, which right they have frequently exercised without interruption and notice has been given to them by the mayor of Pembroke for the time being in order thereunto.

That Sir Arthur Owen, baronet, with an intent to gain the government of the said borough of Pembroke wholly into his own hands, in the year 1704 procured himself to be elected a mayor of the said town of Pembroke although by the charters of the said borough of Pembroke he was not qualified so to be, and by reason of the said election and some pretended new election continued to serve the said office of mayor for two years successively although he was not (as your petitioners are advised) legally admitted thereunto, during which time the said Sir Arthur Owen admitted and swore great numbers of his dependants, tenants and servants who did not live within the liberties of the said borough of Pembroke, to be common councilmen and burgesses of the said borough, contrary to the charters and bye-laws of the said borough, thereby intending to bring the election of burgesses to serve in Parliament for the said borough and the return thereof wholly into his own power, and deprive your petitioners as well as the other legal electors of their rights of election or having any share therein.

That the better to effect this unjust design, the said Sir Arthur Owen has procured divers of his dependants of mean fortune, who were no householders in the said town, to be elected mayors thereof, who have in an irregular manner admitted and given great numbers of the dependants, tenants and servants of the said Sir Arthur Owen who did not live within the liberties of the borough of Pembroke to be burgesses of the said borough, and the election for a member for the present parliament for the said borough drawing on, Joseph Rickson, the present mayor thereof, solicited on the behalf of the said Sir Arthur Owen to procure him to be elected burgesse to serve in this present parliament for the said borough, and afterward proceeded to the said election without giving unto the said borough of Wiston such notice thereof as by law is required, and your petitioners and divers other burgesses of Wiston resorting to the said town of Pembroke to be present at and vote at the said election were in a riotous and tumultuous manner menaced and insulted by the said Sir Arthur Owen, his dependants, servants and agents. And your petitioners having at the said election offered themselves to vote for Lewis Wogan esq., who stood a candidate at the said election, were denied by the said mayor so to do, who alleged that the burgesses of the borough of Wiston had no right to vote at the said election, by means whereof and other undue practices of the said Sir Arthur Owen his agents, and servants, the said Sir Arthur Owen procured himself to be elected and returned burgesse to serve in Parliament for the said borough of Pembroke, and your petitioners and divers others having a right to vote in the said election and excluded therefrom are in danger of losing that great privilege for ever unless relieved by your hands.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray your honours to take the premises into your consideration and grant the petitioners such relief therein as to your honours shall seem just. And your petitioners shall ever pray [un finished.]

J. Barlow To An Unknown Recipient.

Yesterday the election for this place came on. Sir George and the brigadier were candidates, but before the election was preceded to Sir George desired one Mr. Owen and myself to go to the mayor and the brigadier and to endeavour to come to some method and agreement as to polling the burgesses, which was at last agreed to and was as follows.

That they would first poll only the old burgesses of Pembroke which were made before the contest between Mr. Wogan and Sir Arthur Owen, and then proceed to those of Tenby of the same date, and after they would poll fifty of the burgesses of Pembroke and as many of Tenby made since, and would take those of Wiston amongst them till they had polled them all. This method was pretty well observed till all those old burgesses were polled out, and the mayor proceeded to the fifty of each borough and first he polled fifty of Pembroke, who all to a man voted for the brigadier, being occasionally made for that purpose, but when Sir George demanded the like number to be polled for him of Tenby the mayor demanded to see the town books of Tenby that he might be satisfied that they were legally admitted. The town clerk attended with a list of the burgesses, which he offered to make oath was a true copy from the town books and alleged that neither the mayor nor himself could justify the carrying them out of the corporation, but that would not be allowed off by the mayor by reason, he said, that was not a satisfaction to him that they were legally admitted.

Upon this I demanded of him to show me what he required as a legal admittance to prove them burgesses that had had been polled for the brigadier, but he said he would not give me that satisfaction, that he was judge of the poll, and since he was satisfied that they were he was not obliged to give it anyone else, and notwithstanding we offered in case he would give us time to send for the town books he should have them produced, but he absolutely refused unless they had copies of their admission with them, and so closed the books and returned the brigadier.

I had almost forgotten to tell your lordship that I demanded of him to poll the old Wiston burgesses that were allowed by the House of Commons at the former contest, and several of them being in the Hall demanded their right to be polled, but could not obtain it. Upon this we proceeded to poll them all as we did formerly in the Castle green, by which Sir George has a great majority, but I must tell your lordship that most of those new burgesses of Pembroke were made to outnumber our Wiston burgesses, and abundance of new ones at Tenby by Sir George to equal those made at Pembroke for the Brigadier. The numbers of each side was so great as to amount to a thousand men. Sir George is resolved to petition, but has designed first to beg your lordship's advice, as also to send you a copy of his petition. Our country election comes on St. David's day at this place, and they threaten me in the same manner, but I defy them to have anything like a majority.

Pembroke 1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales

The town is beautifully situated on an elevated ridge projecting into the head of the Pennar Mouth Pill, forming the largest southern creek of Milford Haven. It divides the creek into two branches, by which, at high water, it is nearly insulated, and over each of which is a neat bridge of stone. It consists principally of one long street, irregularly built, connected on the west with the ancient village of Monkton, which forms a suburb to the town, and on the north with a new street leading to Pembroke Dock, a flourishing and populous place, about two miles to the north-west, within the parish of St. Mary, forming a distinct town, which has arisen since the removal of the dockyard thither from Milford.

The houses are built on both sides of the ridge, of which the western extremity is crowned with the magnificent ruins of the castle; and on each side are gardens sloping down from the houses to the water's edge. The embattled walls with which ancient Pembroke was surrounded are still tolerably perfect on the north side, and the town, rising above the waters of the broad inlet, amidst some of the richest scenery in this part of the principality, has an air, in some aspects, of venerable grandeur, and in others of picturesque beauty. The streets are partially paved and lighted, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with excellent water from seven public conduits in different parts of the town, to which it is conveyed from a distance of half a mile, by means of pipes laid down at the expense of the corporation. Exclusively of Pembroke-Dock and the village of Monkton, the town contains about 2000 inhabitants, partly included in St. Mary's parish, and partly in St. Michael's.

There are no particular manufactures carried on at Pembroke, the inhabitants consisting of persons of small independent fortune, shop-keepers, and a few whose business is at the dock; but it serves in a great measure as a depôt for the neighbouring districts. Stone-coal is brought from a distance of about six miles to the east of it, and bituminous coal from Swansea, Llanelly, Newport, and other towns on the southern coast. When colonial produce was not permitted to be imported into Ireland direct, it was lodged in warehouses appropriated to the purpose at Pembroke ferry, in the parish of St. Mary; but that place is at present of no commercial importance. The market, which is abundantly supplied with provisions of every kind, is on Saturday. There are fairs held annually on April 12th, Trinity-Monday, July 10th, October 10th, and November 30th; and in the suburb of Monkton, on May 4th and September 25th.

The borough, in addition to the towns of Pembroke and Pembroke-Dock, comprises a considerable agricultural district. The parish of St. Mary is surrounded by the parishes of St. Michael, Coshaston, and Monkton, and is computed to contain about 2000 acres, of which nearly 1600 are meadow and pasture, and 400 arable: the soil is of a reddish colour, and indifferent quality, except a line of limestone which passes through it; and there is little timber of any kind. St. Michael's is bounded by the parishes of St. Mary, Nash, Coshaston, Lamphey, and St. Petrox, and is calculated to comprise about 1800 acres, of which nearly 1400 are meadow and pasture, and 400 arable: there is little timber, and the soil is of much the same character as that of St. Mary's, but rather better; a line of limestone, also, runs from east to west through the parish, and there are a few small quarries. The parish of St. Nicholas', or Monkton, comprising a village or suburb within the limits of the borough, and a rural district in the hundred of Castlemartin, is noticed under its own head.

Pembroke Castle

In the town of Pembroke, Pembrokeshire, south Wales massive castle begun about 1190 on site of earlier earth and palisade fort built in 1093 when Arnulf de Montgomery built a simple "fortress of stakes and turf" cutting off the headland which later became the inner ward of the Castle

Twice before 1100 Welsh attacks on the castle failed.

1102 Montgomeries disgaced.

For a time the home of Princess Nest princess of Dyfed who owned Carew castle was reputed to be very beautiful she married twice was also mistress to Henry 1 and Cadwgan the prince of Powis and had children from all these liaisons.

Wogan's cave

The site of Pembroke is almost perfect for fortification of its date and type. A substantial tidal creek, opening out of the main waters of Milford Haven at Pennar Mouth, here divides into what were originally two tidal arms, everywhere wide enough to act as a substantial obstacle, and running nearly parallel to one another for upwards of half a mile, at which point they are still only about a furlong apart.

Neither is now tidal; that on the north (the Mill Pond) has long been dammed up at the mill-weir under the site of the North Gate. This permanently tideless portion has been extended to the fork of the creeks by the recently constructed barrage below the castle. The southern arm, Monkton Pill, has been dried up by draining and tipping, and now forms a length of fairly dry ground.

The narrow ridge, slanting down to the water on each side, made an excellent site for a substantial medieval town, with the castle at its extreme point. but to complete the perfection of the position, this point forms a fairly level rocky platform, decidedly higher than the body of the ridge in its vicinity, and protected from it by considerable falls of ground on the south and east (in part at least artificially scarped), so that the only practical approach is along the crest of the ridge and up a fairly steep slope to the south-east angle of the castle. Finally, the greater part of the perimeter overlooks the two creeks and their junction, and these sides are high, steep, and rocky; on the northern half of the circuit they form cliffs which need virtually no artificial defence, and carry, indeed, little more than a breastwork. The platform is about 500 ft. long by 350 ft. wide, a very convenient size for a fairly large medieval castle.

It has been suggested that so fine a defensive site was fortified in earlier ages, but this notion rests on nothing but conjecture. As distinct from fortification, simple occupation during the Roman period is attested by the finding of a fair number of Roman coins; Mr Cobb in particular testifies to having discovered nine personally apparently in the Wogan cavern.

The actual history of the castle opens with Domesday Book, which discovers the great Earl Roger of Montgomery firmly entrenched on the upper Severn. It seems that he was already poised for a thrust south-westwards into Dyfed, for immediately upon the death in 1093 of Rhys ap Tewdwr, the effective ruler of the area, he undertook this surprising march over the backbone of Wales, and it seems that he at once occupied the splendid site of Pembroke, as if he had already found out that it existed. It was conferred on his son Arnulf de Montgomery.

In the course of the Welsh reaction against the Norman invasion-which began in 1094, only a very short time after Earl Roger's conquest of Dyfed-all the Anglo Norman castles in the south-west were lost, with the single exception of Pembroke. The Welsh, indeed, never succeeded in capturing it, and its great strength went far towards depriving it of any military history.

This brings us to the very arguable question of the eleventh-century siege. If it occurred at all, a very likely time for it would be just those months of 1094 when the Norman's lost so many castles; but there is also a passage in the Brut Tyrysogyon, which could place it in the year 1096. This reads like an account of a successful cattle-raid rather than a siege; the castle itself clearly cannot have been pillaged, as it was never taken. Nor does the detailed and very readable narrative in Giraldus Cambrensis' Itinerary, (composed nearly a century after the event) give us much help; his chronology in general is very faulty. His typically vivid anecdotes of the siege are almost certainly pure invention, though we need not doubt that he is right in describing the newly-founded castle as ex virgis et cespite, tenue satis et exile [constructum].

The downfall of the house of Montgomery in 1102, following the war between Henry I and Robert of Belleme, involved Arnulf losing Pembroke; the king took it into his hands and entrusted Dyfed and the castle to a knight called Saer. In 1105 Saer was dismissed from office and replaced by Gerald of Windsor. There follows a fairly long blank period in the history of the castle. The chronicles have virtually nothing to say about it, and no part of the fabric can be ascribed to a date before the last years of the century.

The great house of Clare, a Norman family whose principal abode came to be the great castle of Clare in Suffolk, achieved fame and importance in the British Isles from Leinster in Ireland to Tonbridge in Kent. In 1110 Gilbert fitz Richard of that family conquered Ceredigion in 1117 he was succeeded by his son Richard who was killed in an ambush set by the men of Gwent in 1136,¹⁵ and in 1138 Richard's brother Gilbert, commonly known as 'Strongbow', was created earl of Pembroke by King Stephen. His son Richard, also called Strongbow, succeeded to the earldom on Gilbert's death in 1148. The invasion of Ireland by Earl Richard and other Anglo-Norman barons in 1169-70 was an event of the first importance in the history of Pembroke castle, though the earl himself did not live long enough to make any changes in its structure to discharge its new function; he spent the last few years of his life in Ireland. In the course of his adventures, the extreme importance of Pembroke was indicated in an unexpected fashion when Henry II decided to visit Ireland, his main purpose being to assert his position as overlord particularly over the Anglo-Norman adventurers. On both the outward and the homeward journey he passed through Pembroke.

In 1176, Richard Strongbow died leaving two young children: another Gilbert, who died before reaching manhood, and Isabel, who in was married to the great William Marshal. The Marshal thus became earl.

It may be said at least that he was the greatest of the earls of Pembroke; indeed he was probably the greatest lay subject of our Middle Ages. What concerns us more closely is that the earliest masonry of the castle is certainly his work, and that virtually the whole of the defences appears to have been completed by him or by his sons, the last of whom died in 1245.

Down to 1170, Pembroke formed a remote extremity of the property of any of its lords, with nothing beyond it save the Irish Sea. Nor was the county a very large area; it occupied only the south-western part of the county of Pembroke of modern times. With Ceredigion in Welsh hands it was an isolated outpost of no great importance, and its lords were inclined to style themselves earls of Striguil, after their great march-holding of Nether Gwent. Now things were very different. With his wife's enormous inheritance to which were later added his own family lands and the lordship of Goodrich, the Marshall was a very rich man indeed; and very much the largest, and possibly the most valuable part of his property lay across the Irish Sea, in the form of the vast fief of Leinster: five modern counties and part of a sixth, held by the service of 100 knights. The St. George's Channel passage became very important; the Marshall himself made several crossings, his officers and messengers a great many. Pembroke, at the eastern end of this passage, increased enormously in importance, and the great masonry works undertaken in this period were needed for its defence. What had been there before? Was it still the slender fortress of stakes and turf of the days of Gerald of Windsor, or a wall of unmortared stone, here on the lime stone where splendid mortar was ready to hand? There is no means of saying; but at best the defences, some traces of which may yet be revealed by excavation, were so slight that they were destroyed to make room for the walls and towers of the post-1189 period. Nothing seems to have been incorporated in the later works.

In the thirty years of the Marshal's rule (1189-1219) there was one interruption of royal authority, between 1207 (when the earl, going to Leinster against the will of king John, was obliged to surrender to the king all his castles in England and Wales) and in 1211, when the king received the Marshal back into favour; it is unlikely that much work was then going on at Pembroke or elsewhere among the earl's castles.

On the death of the earl in 1219, he was succeeded in the lordship by five childless sons: William the younger (died 1231), Richard (murdered at the Curragh in 1234), Gilbert (killed in a riding accident in 1291), and Walter and Anselm both of whom died in 1245. 'Thus ended the male line of the Marshals without a single heir. In contrast to the earl's five daughters, who, all had families a genealogical freak which the more superstitious of contemporary opinion was inclined to ascribe to Albinus O'Maelmuidhe, Bishop of Ferns, who had had a dispute with the great Marshal over some Irish lands. Getting no satisfaction either in the earl's lifetime or after his death, Albinus cursed the family. The vast patrimony of the Marshals was divided among the numerous relatives of their numerous sisters. The lordship of Leinster ceased to exist. The earls of Pembroke ceased to guide the fortunes of the March. And for Pembroke castle there were notable times to come; but the great days were gone beyond recall, for ever. The partition of the Marshal lands left Pembroke separated even from Haverfordwest, and Wexford severed from the bulk of Leinster; with Goodrich, these made up the share of the youngest sister, Joan.

Joan Marshal after the death of her father had married a wealthy baron, Warin de Munchensy, and died in or before 1234, when Warin married Denise (Dionysia) de Ancsty. By Joan he had two children, John and another Joan, by Denise a son and eventual heir, William.' Probably because his first wife had never enjoyed her share under the partition, Warin did not obtain the normal life-tenancy of a surviving husband 'by the courtesy of England', and Joan's share passed directly to her children. John de Munchensy died in 1247, during the actual process of partition, and his sister Joan married William de Valence, half brother to Henry III, and carried her mother's share to her husband.

William de Valence was perhaps the most unpopular of the foreign relatives of the king at the time of the Barons' War. In 1264, in the time of Montfortian supremacy, all his lands in the county of Pembroke were committed to the custody of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, and it is significant that it was 'in the parts of Pembroke' that John de Warenne and William de Valence landed in 1265 to renew the struggle.

William and Joan de Valence were never formally created earl and countess, though by inconsistent contemporary usage they were often given these titles. William seems to have made Pembroke his main seat of power; his involvement in local matters, his foundation of Tenby Hospital, and his activity in Edward I's South Welsh army (which he commanded in 1282) all suggest a deep interest in Pembroke. He died in 1296; Joan outlived him for eleven years; in 1307 their only surviving son, Aymer, succeeded to the title and vast estates of his parents, adding eventually those of the Munchensy family. Unlike his father, he had preoccupations which will have kept him from giving much attention to Pembroke, since he was involved to a major extent in the nightmare of national politics under Edward II as well as in the Scottish wars; but he was able to unite Haverfordwest to the lordship, re-creating something like the great county of Pembroke which the Marshal earls had ruled.

Aymer de Valence died childless in 1324 and his estates were divided between the descendants of his two sisters. The elder, Isabel, had married John de Hastings, lord of Abergavenny, and accordingly the title of earl passed to this family, along with the castle. In fact it was Isabel's grandson Laurence who became the first Hastings earl of Pembroke, succeeding to the title in 1325 at about the age of six. From the time he was recognised as of age in 1339 until his death in 1348 he was continuously and gloriously involved in the first phases of the Hundred Years' War. The second earl, John, was only a year old when his father died; he did homage and had livery of his estates in 1368, and from the next year followed his father's path in the wars of France. But in June 1372 he was in command of the English fleet at the disastrous battle of La Rochelle; the Castilians were completely victorious, his fleet was destroyed and he himself taken prisoner. After three years in captivity, he died in suspicious circumstances on the way home. His only son, another, John, was born in 1372 and was killed in a jousting accident in 1389 at the age of 17, so that he never held the name of earl nor the estates of his father. On his death the title became extinct and the castle passed into the hands of the Crown. .

By this time the fabric might be expected to be out of repair; the Marshals and William de Valence were resident lords to whom the castle was a principal dwelling and a major seat of influence; Joan and Alymer de Valence are likely to have kept it up, if not to have embarked on much new work, but as early as 1331 the Crown found it necessary to undertake repairs to the roofs of the Prison Tower, the chapel, the house where the County Court was held and other buildings, and new hinges for the wicket of the prison. The Hastings earls well either they inherited a minors or they were involved in the 100 year war. Thus they had been unable to maintain the castle properly. In the invasion scare of 1377 a survey was ordered 'on information that many defects in the castle of Pembroke are threatening through lack of good keeping and repair, to the great peril of the loss thereof and of the parts adjacent if any peril of hostile attack arise'; in addition, the castle was said to be neither garrisoned nor victual. On 2 July the garrison recently put in, under a Welsh knight, Degary Seys, and consisting of 19 other men-at-arms and 20 archers, was ordered to be doubled, the new contingent to be under Jolun Joce, knight; in fact, Degary eventually found himself in command of an impressive force of two other knights, 67 sergeants-at-arms and 70 archers.

The scare once over, the castle was neglected once more, and worse than neglected. In 1386 a commission on the decays and damage to the lordship of Pembroke reported a most deplorable state of affairs. The castle of Pembroke in particular had suffered damage to the amount of some £250. All the sections of the report end monotonously: 'all which destruction's and damages took place during the custody of the said William Beauchamp, by himself and his ministers, to the manifest contempt and prejudice of our lord the King'. The very large sums of money set aside against decay of posts beams and spars in the hall and its adjacent chambers through defective roofing suggest forcibly that William de Beauchamp or his ministers had stripping the lead from the roofs. After this it is depressing to have to record that on the death of the young John de Hastings in 1389 the castle was committed to William de Beauchamp.

The castle was now Crown property, and the subject of short-lived grants not a favourable situation from the point of view of upkeep. In 1390 it was farmed out to John Golafre, knight, for live, and in 1399 to William de Beauchamp, lord of Abergavenny. In 1403, Henry IV, with Beauchamp's assent, granted the castles and lordships of Pembroke, Tenby and Cilgerran, with the commote of Oestrelowe (Ystlwyf) to Francis Court, knight, and Joan his wife and the heirs male of their bodies at a rent of 100 marks yearly. This was not a comfortable gift; in the first years of the Lancastrian era even so defensible a holding as Francis and Joan received in Wales would have been no bed of roses, when the earlier troubles which followed the downfall of Richard II became a formidable national revolt under Owain Glyndwr. As early as 1400 orders were issued for the safe custody of this and other castles; in 1403 came a warning of imminent attack and a commission of array to withstand it. In the crisis-year 1405, when the French sent an expedition to Milford Haven, Court was given munitions: 16 crossbows, three thousand quarrels, 50 pounds of gunpowder and 50 pounds of saltpetre (evidently he had guns already). About that time, Thomas Roche, the constable of the castle fell into the hands of the rebels. The times were certainly hard, but at least there was a resident lord, and the castle must have been kept in some sort of defensible order. Francis Court saw the war through, and died in 1413, leaving no heir by his marriage to Joan, whereupon Henry V granted Pembroke, Tenby, Cilgerran and Ystlwyf to his own youngest brother Humphrey, who was next year created Duke of Gloucester and earl of Pembroke.

It seems probable that Duke Humphrey a fighter in the wars of France, turbulent and unlucky politician, patron of learning and the arts, founder of a lordly Library was very much of an absentee lord. Pembroke formed part of his property when he died without heirs of his body in 1447. This contingency had been foreseen in 1443, when a reversionary grant of the familiar group of lordships of Pembroke, Tenby, Cilgerran, with the commote of Ystlwyf, to which were added Treynne (the hilly area towards the western part of the St Clears Lordship) and St. Clear's, was made to William de la Pole, earl of Suffolk and Alice his wife, and in 1443 Suffolk was raised to the rank of duke, and received all these estates, with the addition of Llanstephan.

From this point onwards, the grantees of the Pembroke title and estates were mostly dogged by an evil fortune. Suffolk, in particular, after his serious mismanagement of the wars of France, fell from power in 1450, and was exiled from the realm, only to be intercepted and beheaded by pirates, probably in the pay of his enemies. Though he had never been attainted, his title was treated as extinct.

The next earl of Pembroke, Jasper Tudor, received the county, castle and lordship in 1454,

During his tenure of the earldom occurred the most famous incident in the history of the castle, the birth to the very young widow Lady Margaret Beaufort of a posthumous heir to her husband Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond and brother of Jasper-an heir later to be known as Henry VII. After the Yorkist triumph in 1461, earl Jasper was accounted 'a rebel', and William Herbert was commissioned to seize the county of Pembroke and all his other possessions; on 3rd February 1462, the same William Herbert was granted the castle, town and lordship of Pembroke (a grant on 12th August in the same year to Richard Duke of Gloucester, brother of King Edward IV and afterwards King Richard III, seems never to have taken effect). William Herbert, the first earl of that name, was created earl in 1468, only to be beheaded after the battle of Banbury in the next year. His son, another William Herbert, was only about 14 at the time of his father's death.

In 1482, the young earl exchanged the earldom and title with Edward, Prince of Wales and thus the castle returned to the Crown in the person of its most hapless representative, Edward V. During his tenure of the Principality, there was some work undertaken, mainly on the roofs. His uncle and supplanter, Richard III, had little better fortune as king; but in his hopeless struggle to preserve his throne, the castle of Pembroke played its part. As early as 1483 the treasurer of Pembroke was ordered to pay £100 for the stuff of the castle, and 20 marks (£13 6s. 8d.) for other small things to be purveyed there. Clearly this was the victualling and stores for a garrison. About the same time the chamberlain of Carmarthen was ordered to pay to one Richard Newton the sum of £113 14s. 6d. for his expenses incurred on the castle of Pembroke; and in 1484 the castle's firewood was ordered to be supplied from the forest of Narberth. In the same year the offices of constable and steward of Pembroke constable of Tenby, chief forester of Coydrath, constable and steward of Cilgerran, and steward of Llanstephan:, were granted to Richard Williams, one of the ushers of the king's chamber, for life, on the condition of his executing the office of constable of Pembroke castle in person.

Much more than this was necessary, of course, to prevent an invasion; but it is worth notice that when Henry Tudor, Earl of Richmond, came to Milford Haven in August 1485 he gave Pembroke a wide berth, landing on the far side of the estuary at Dale and so proceeding by way of Haverfordwest, through Cardigan shire and along the Severn to Shrewsbury, and ultimately to Bosworth and victory. By the end of the year Jasper Tudor had been restored to his earldom, which he retained until his death without heirs in 1495. He was the last earl of Pembroke of the old style, a great Lord Marcher ruling his March with jura regalia, independent of the crown for local purposes. Loyalists of the first generation, like Earl Jasper and Sir Rhys ap Thomas, were acceptable to the Tudor monarchy in the role of mighty subjects, but nobody else was permitted to take that place for long. Over a brief four years, 1532-6, the ill-fated (Queen Anne Boleyn was Marchioness of Pembroke. When William Herbert, grandson of the first earl of that name, was created earl in 1551, he received only a title of honour; the lands, revenues and whatever jurisdiction may have survived being retained in the hands of the Crown or the Principality of Wales,

The change was undoubtedly prejudicial to the survival of the castle. Already its military significance was diminishing in face of the advance in artillery, and its useful function in Tudor Wales was becoming questionable. The tale of its decline can mainly be traced by circumstantial evidence only. It seems likely that the fabric was in fairly good condition at the end of the fifteenth century. The emergency occupations by Court in the time of Glyndwr and by Richard William's in 1484-5 would be times for putting the place in repair. We have the record of some government expenditure, and Jasper Tudor and William Herbert, both Welshmen, are likely to have been in residence comparatively often. It would appear that even a tower-room in the outer ward was adequate for the bedchamber of Earl Jasper's sister-in-law.

Leland was here in about 1538, and gives a curious description of the castle :

The Castel standith hard by the Waul on a hard Rolke, and is veri larg and strong, being doble wardid. In the uttcr Ward I saw the Chaumbre wher King; Henri the VII was borne, He also said that the Hogan was a vaulted chamber underneath the keep and that the keep was capped by a mill stone

John Leland the Antiquary was a scholar of the very highest class; but as regards the inner ward, he is mistaken: the Hogan (Wogan) is a natural cave, not a vault; its entrance is not at the bottom of the Keep, but about 100 ft. away, in the front wall of the Hall; finally, there is no sign of any millstone ever having been used to close the top of the domed vault of the Keep. The obvious explanation is that he was dependent on unreliable second-hand information, and that while on his own account he was admitted to the outer ward, he was not allowed into the inner. Even his informants were vague as to its details.

Without considering the arrangements of the castle in detail at this stage, it must be pointed out that the inner ward is small and compact, and contains numerous buildings; the outer ward, occupying the remainder of the natural feature, is very large indeed, without trace of any habital quarters, except the chambers in the Great Gatehouse and the towers. It would be natural, during the gradual decay of such a castle, to abandon the large and costly outer enclosure first. Perhaps that is what had happened here.

1563, when the castle was still in the hands of the Crown, the decay of the Outer Ward had gone further; there was a lease of 'the utter grene' in the precinct of the castle' presumably for pasture or even cultivation.

Finally, by 1595, we reach what appears to be the end of the road, local leaders including the local antiquary, George Owen of Henllys, , wrote to Henry Herbert, earl of Pembroke and others

1595 November 8. Carmarthen.

Anthony Menevensis, John Wogan, George Owen, Frances Mey Rike And Albane Stepneth To Sir John Puckering, Lord Keeper, Lord Burghley, Lord Treasurer, The Earl Of Essex, Lord Buck Hurst, And The Earl Of Pembroke.

The bounden duty we owe to Her Majesty, the conscience we have for the safeguard of the whole realm, and the care that in nature and reason we carry of this our country have emboldened us to offer this discourse unto your honour concerning the safety of them and us all.

It becomes us not to fear, neither do we doubt of the wise and grave consideration that your lordship and the rest of the lords of Her Majesty's most honourable privy council have had and still have for preservation of Her Majesty and the realm, but yet fearing your want of due information touching the estate of Milford Haven and the adjoining parts, it may please you to understand that the haven itself, being neither barred to hinder entry nor to be embayed by any winds to let issuing forth, is a sufficient harbour for an infinite number of ships, which haven being once got by the enemy may draw on such fortification at Pembroke town and castle, standing upon a main rock and upon a creek of the Haven, and the town and castle of Tynby with other places near unto them, as infinite numbers of men and great expense of treasure will hardly in a long time remove the enemy, during which time Her Majesty shall lose a fertile country which yields Her Majesty £1,200 by year and more in revenue paid to Her Majesty's receiver besides all other receipts both temporal and ecclesiastical, as tenths and subsidies etc.

Also it is to be remembered that the soil near the said haven yields corn in such abundance as would suffice to maintain a great army and the sea coasts near about it yield great plenty of fish. The haven also stands very commodiously to receive victuals from France, Brittany or Spain, all which things may be an occasion to move the enemy to attack that place before others.

Also there are in Penbrockesheere eighteen castles of which though there be but two or three in repair, yet are the rest places of great strength and easily to be fortified by the enemy, some of which are so seated naturally for strength as they seem impregnable. Also there are in that shire to be seen in sundry parts thereof divers sconces or forts of earth raised in great height with great ramparts and ditches, to the number of 120 or 140, which in times past have been places of strength in time of wars, all which castles and forts would yield great advantage to the enemies to strengthen themselves in such sort that it would be an infinite charge to remove them from thence.

Again, the same is situate within seven hours' sailing to Waterford and Wexford in Ireland, so as if the enemy have an intention to invade Ireland (as by report we have heard he has), his harbour in this haven may serve him to great purpose.

Furthermore, being lord as it were of these seas by possessing the haven, what spoil he may make along Severne in both sides even to Bristowe may be easily conjectured. And if he, which God forbid, should enjoy Brittany withal, our English merchants can have no trade, which will decrease Her Highness's customs and decay the navy.

If it be thought that he may be kept from landing, neither the force of men nor furniture here will serve the turn, considering 'here be many places where he may easily land and he may come upon us within half a day's sailing, we having no ships at sea to descry him sooner, and how then our small forces may be in readiness to withstand him we refer to your 'honour's judgement.

If it be thought that Her Majesty's navy royal be able to conquer them being once in this haven, and that by them fortified, it would; be found very hard by reason that upon a very little storm for want of any other harbour or bay to abide in they should be in great danger of wreck, and no land forces are able to expel them. Whereupon we humbly pray your lordship to consider whether it be not expedient for the withstanding of the enemy that he obtain not this harbour, to have a convenient number of ships of war and fortifications to defend the same, which preparation if the enemy might perceive we believe verily it would alter his mind from adventuring his navy upon this coast.

And whereas of late Mr. Pawl Ivy was sent hither to survey the haven and to consider of fit places for fortifications, what report he has made of his opinion we know not, but sure we are that his abode about that service was very short and his survey very speedily dispatched, so that because none of us were privy to his intent or conceit we do yet retain some hope that if some other men of experience were sent down hither to consider of all the said circumstances some such report would happily be made unto your honour and the rest as some better event might ensue for the safety of this poor country and the whole realm than for aught we know has been determined upon, especially if the party shall have instruction to view the town and castle of Tynbye, being a place which may be easily made of exceeding strength and was not seen by Mr. Ivy nearer than two miles distance for aught that we can learn.

Thus having, we hope, discharged the duties of true and faithful subjects we humbly commit your good lordship and all your grave consayles to the blessed protection and direction of Almighty God. Subscribed : Four several letters verbatim was sent to the Lord Keeper, the Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Essex, the Lord Buckhurst, and a copy hereof enclosed in a letter to my lord of Penbrocke, all sent by Mr. Robert Davy, esquire, Receiver of South Wales, to be delivered to their lordships.

Copy.

Of Pembroke they wrote

All the Castle walles are standing verye stronge without any decay only the roofes and leades have been taken downe . . . This town and Castle thus lying upon the said branch of Milford being unfortified as yet nowe remayneth is thought very: perilous . . .

In the Civil Wars of the 1640's, Pembroke played a very distinctive part; but it must be emphasised that in the initial stages the castle was never defended separately and merely formed part of the perimeter of the fortress, a part against which a formal assault would have been madness, and even a surprise attack stood no chance of success.

At Pembroke neither Cromwell nor his army added much to their reputation. As far as can be made out, they were confronted with nothing more than a town wall of medieval character; they were veteran troops, and the defenders had little hope of relief. Nevertheless, the siege dragged on week after week, from 22 May to 11 July, 1648, with Cromwell directing to his masters a series of despatches of the most deluded optimism, each one forecasting the collapse of the defence in the next few days. At length on 1 July the siege-train arrived, but even then the defenders held out for another ten days, and yielded on terms which were extremely favourable,

After the siege (but at a date which cannot be more closely identified) the fortifications were slighted. This was done moderately, level archaic fortresses with the ground.) The eastern part of the town walls has almost entirely disappeared; at the castle the method employed seems to have been to fire a charge of powder in the basement of the towers between Northgate and Westgate, inclusive of both. The faces of these towers were more or less effectively blown out, except at the Tower, where it was the back wall gave way, leaving the tower shaken, but complete. At the same time, most of the parapets on the landward wall as those on points of vantage: like the Keep and the Great Hall, seem had their merlons knocked off.

From that time to this, we are dealing with a ruin; but unfortunately we have to wait till the 1800's before there are records that I could find.

There is an old illustration by the Buck brothers who travelled round the Country producing illustrations of the towns and Castles in the early 1700's

1740 Pembroke Castle Buck View

1790 A guide book of the 1790 does have an illustration of the Castle but as the text for the whole county is covered in one and a half pages, the castle description is very brief.

Lewis in his Topographical Dictionary 1839 gives a description in his day.

“The majestic and venerable remains of the ancient castle occupy the western extremity of the elevated ridge on which the town is built, and are justly regarded as among the most picturesque and magnificent ruins in the country. The entire fortress was surrounded by a lofty embattled wall, protected by numerous bastions, and having only one entrance from the land, through a grand gateway defended by two circular towers of prodigious strength, and a barbican. On this side it had likewise a dry moat, and the enclosed area was divided into an inner and outer ward, the former of which comprised the state apartments and the latter the inferior buildings and offices for use of the garrison. The principal remains consist of this grand entrance, the state apartments occupying the northern side, and the keep, which last is in the inner court a massive and lofty round tower, 75 feet high, 163 feet in circumference at the base, and gradually diminishing in diameter towards the top, which is covered by a vaulted roof. This tower is divided into five stages; the walls are seventeen feet in thickness at the base and fourteen feet thick at the summit. In the inner court besides the keep, is a suite of apartments, apparently of later date than the rest of the castle, extending over the cavern called the Wogan, or Hogan, by corruption of the Welsh word Ogov, signifying “a cave”. This subterraneous chamber is seventy five feet in length and fifty nine feet wide and communicates with the upper part of the castle by a staircase and with the harbour below by a sally port. The rock on which the castle is built is forty feet high and is almost insulated by the two branches of the estuary, into which it projects, and which is navigable to the town; underneath the southeastern bastion is a natural opening in it, of unknown extent. The great solidity of the walls, and its commanding position, must have rendered this fortress all but impregnable against any hostile attempt. Its ponderous towers, with the northern suite of state apartments rising above the embattled walls, and part of the platform and parapet, which are still remaining, give its present ruins an air of venerable grandeur; and the ivy and other parasitical plants with which the ruins are overspread contribute to heighten the picturesque beauty of their appearance. Leyland says, he was shown an apartment in one of the gateway towers in which he was informed Henry VII was born; but other writers refer that circumstance to a room in the inner court of the castle. Pembroke Castle is now the property of the crown and is held under a lease granted in the reign of James II”

1880-83 the castle was in the hands of, J. R. Cobb, He conducted a certain amount of restoration, particularly at the Gate,

1922 RCAM Report:-

The architectural description of Pembroke Castle has been strangely neglected by the professed students of antiquity. Neither King nor Clark has recorded the impression made upon him by the great fortress, nor does anything in their printed works show that they had paid the place a visit. Prior to 1883 brief references to one of the greatest military monuments in Great Britain were to be found only in a few desultory paragraphs in the journals of learned societies, or in local or general guide books.

The first satisfactory effort at a scientific explanation of the history and development of the castle appeared on Archaeological Cambrensis for that year (series iv vol 14 p196) [NB despite that Association visiting the area in 1852 thirty years previously]. The writer was Mr J R Cobb F.S.A[Fellows of the Society of Antiquaries] a gentleman who, having a few years previously obtained a lease of the premises expended much time and money in a careful examination of the fortress. As Mr Cobb was thus afforded an opportunity of acquiring unique knowledge of the constructive details of the castle, and as he proved himself to be a thoroughly competent observer, we have drawn extensively upon his account of the ruins which he did so much to preserve.

Mr Cobb observes:--

The castle now consists of a building rising from the beach of the Pembroke River , where it is about 25 feet from the high water mark, enclosing a cavern in the limestone cliff, and various chambers above it from which a wall of enceinte , having angle towers (for the most part shattered) and entrance towers on the south extends along the cliff top on each side enclosing nearly 4 acres, having a circumference of about 1,450 feet, with a domed round tower on the west side of the centre; the whole occupying a promontory at the west end of the main street of the town, bounded by the Pembroke river and Monkton Pill on three sides, and divided into two unequal wards by a ruined wall. It will, however at once be seen that the whole is merely the western end of the almond shaped area enclosed by the town walls, although shut off from it. The castle area is naturally divided into two parts; the enceinte of that nearest the town being formed and regular, the other irregular, and following the contour of the cliff.

As respects the cavern as part of a fortress, Pembroke stands alone; with the exception of its north front it seems wholly natural. Chepstow has a faint artificial resemblance to it probably fulfilling the same end ; but there is no other instance : and though there are many other round donjons, there is no one like this.

It should be born in mind that, owing to the absence from public records of later works of local history all of the early surveys or descriptions of the town and castle as well as to the havoc wrought to the structure by Cromwell's artillery, many of the different buildings have utterly vanished, so that little remained to Mr Cobb that provided accurate data.

We have been fortunate in discovering amongst the manuscripts of the British Museum a volume of sketch plans of the principle defensive posts of the kingdom, made by a French artist in the year 1650, one of which is a plan of the castle and town of Pembroke. This enables us to correct some of the errors into which Mr Cobb has unavoidably fallen, and in which he has involved later writers who have touched upon the castle. The plan of the town inset on Speed's map of the county should also be consulted and a photograph of the town taken from the air shows how little its essential characteristics have altered in the meantime.

The important features of Pembroke, those whose purpose and position have been governed by the character and conformation of the ground, and in their turn have influenced the arrangements of the other parts of the general scheme, are the great round tower or keep, and the spacious natural cavern called the Hogan or Wogan; the existence of the latter unquestionably led to the placing of the great hall immediately above it, as at once ensuring for the principal apartment a safe mode of ingress and egress to and from the castle, and complete immunity from damp.

The chapel probably occupied the story above the hall, exhibiting much of the same plan as at that adopted in the earlier part of Carew; the other residential and business chambers were grouped around it in the north-eastern angle of the castle enclosure, though the unbroken and long continued use of the castle as a residence and administrative centre doubtless led to changes in their uses and fittings.

On the keep Mr Hamilton Thompson observes:-

The introduction of the cylindrical donjon coincides with a period at which the keep was already beginning to disappear from the castle. The principal examples, which may be attributed to the early years of the 13th century, are on the frontier and in the south of Wales. VChief among them is the fine tower of Pembroke, which was probably built by William Marshal, earl of Pembroke and Strguil, about 1200. The castle of Pembroke was of great importance, owing to its situation upon an arm of Milford Haven [NB: It stands on a promontory between two creeks at the head of the inlet known as the Pembroke River], and its command of the passage to Ireland. The keep was probably the first completed portion of the present castle, the stone work of which, as it stands today, is very largely of the late 12th and early 13th century. [NB: The domestic buildings may be in part earlier, but were largely reconstructed in the 13th century]. It is a round tower with a basement and three upper floors standing just within, but not touching, the curtain which divided the inner and higher from the outer ward. The height is 75feet; the floors were of wood, but the uppermost stage was vaulted by a dome, which remains, rising in the centre of the tower above the ramp walk. The stair is a vice in the west wall, from the basement to the summit: the main entrance was upon the first floor, but there is also a basement entrance which seems to have been pierced not long after the building of the tower. The whole structure batters upwards and the walls are slightly gathered in each stage on the outside – a method the reverse of that pursued at Conisbrough: The masonry is rough-coursed rubble. On each of the first and second floors there is towards the inner ward, a two-light window with pointed openings, the spandrels between which and the enclosed arch are pierced with plate tracery. The third floor was lighted by windows pierced in the dome. {NB: The tower is sometimes described as being of five storeys: the dome however was merely a vault and did not form a separate stage]

Commanding as it does, the whole interior of the castle, this tower is remarkably grand in situation: and its thick walls offer considerable resistance to artillery. It shows, however no advance upon the defence of Conisbrough. The rampart walk is narrow, and the dome in the centre prevents the employment of the roof as a platform. (Mil. Architecture in England and Wales during the Middle ages p 179)

The keep, the nucleus of the late 12th century castle of Pembroke, was enclosed within a strong curtain wall that was carried along the crest of a partly natural drop in the rock that stretched across the little peninsula, and which was artificially deepened so as to form an almost impassable ditch in front of practically the whole length of the curtain from Monckton Pill on the western side of the headland to the Pembroke brook on the northern. This enceinte wall has a slightly bowed out course, which was strengthened at intervals by two partly engaged towers and also by a strong square tower at each terminus, this effectually guarding the approach from the two streams. The second tower in this dividing wall between the inner and outer wards, counting from the western end of the curtain had become so complete a ruin that its existence was not suspected until Mr Cobb brought to light its foundations. Notwithstanding that it was found to be deficient in most of the features of a gateway Mr Cobb regarded this as an entrance to the castle courtyard. The identification was inherently improbable, and happily, the French plan shows that the entrance was between the tower at the eastern end of the curtain and the tower called by Mr Cobb (and shown on Mr Wall's plan as) the Prison tower. The details of this gateway have so entirely disappeared that the long tunnel like space through which entrance was obtained was taken by Mr Cobb to be the site of the original, or (as he terms it) the old Norman Hall, notwithstanding that the site immediately to the north of the gateway is accepted by all authorities as that of the great hall of the castle, and coeval (or nearly so) with the keep.

Finally, to deal with the remaining buildings of the original castle, the sole buildings on the western side of the courtyard are two chambers standing side by side, though not structurally connected. One of these was taken by Mr Cobb to be the chapel, and the adjacent chamber, the priest's lodging. Seeing that the chapel would thus be separated from the residential part of the castle by the whole breadth of the courtyard, the suggestion is not a likely one. The original purpose of these buildings is not easily grasped, but it is possible that one of them may be the chamber in which the future Henry VII, the nephew of Jasper Earl of Pembroke was born. It is true that Leland says that this chamber was "in the outer ward" but as both rooms are built practically on the line of the curtain, the southern chamber might very well have been taken as falling within the outer ward. The rest of the courtyard was bare of buildings.

There can be little doubt that the buildings within the cross curtain wall constitute the original castle of Pembroke, and they date from the commencement of the 13th century, though materially modified and added to at several later periods.

Of the cavern, which was evidently considered to be an important adjunct to the castle, Mr Wall writes as follows:--

It is clearly an artificial enlargement and union of some natural spaces in the limestone rock to which a strong face wall, having in it a wide and high gateway was built. The chamber measures over 80ft from north to south and over 60 ft from east to west. Over the gateway there appears to have been a recess 10 ft high and over 6ft wide with a stone seat round it. It is surmised that these openings were approached by a wooden stair and platform. The rocky shore opposite the gateway was cleared so as to form a quay against which small vessels could lie to discharge or take in cargo. When the buildings above were roofed and guttered this cavern formed a fairly dry storehouse for heavy goods, and also probably served the purpose of a boathouse. It will be noticed that the stair was closed at the bottom, as well as at the top, by a strong door. (Guide to Pembroke Castle p 17) About a century later, probably during the tenure of William de Valence (died 1296) the modern town of Pembroke was established and surrounded by a stout wall with towers at intervals. Most of these towers have been destroyed but Barnard's tower at the north eastern angle a scheduled ancient monument is up for disposal. Due to economic reasons the County Council are unable to continue to care for it and has identified it as surplus to requirements and sold.

Major--General Sir Ivor Philipps acquired the castle, and commenced on clearance of ivy and vegetation.

1959

The castle is the property of trustees to whom Mrs Basil Ramsden, daughter of Sir Ivor Philipps, conveyed it in 1959.

Finds

Coins

- (i) Roman. while excavating at Pembroke Castle, in 1887 , Mr. J. R. Cobb found a coin of Carausius, which had been used to fit a blade of some kind to a handle. With it were a Constantine, a Constantine II, a Constans and two uncertain issues
 - (ii) In 1835 a small copper coin of the reign of Constantine, in excellent preservation, was found on a rock: near Pembroke Castle (Ms. in the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society).
 - (iii) A series of gold, silver and copper coins found at Pembroke was exhibited to the Cambrian ~Archaeological Association at its meeting at Tenby in 1851
- No trace of this collection now exists.

Acc/to Journal 1885 Vol XLI of the Congress of British Archeological Society they visited the site of the castle on Sept 8 1884 and met a Mr J. R. Cobb of Brecon who was restoring the Castle." That the site was occupied by the Romans may be assumed from the numerous coins of Constantine and Carausius collected. Mr Cobb had found several. No Roman bricks or tiles however have been found"

Bronze ornament found in Pembroke Castle February.-Mr. A. G. O. Mathias sends us particulars and a photograph of the small bronze ornament here which he recently picked up in Pembroke Castle. General Sir Ivor , K.C.B., the present owner, is, we understand, carrying out a considerable reparation work in connection with the Castle. In levelling the ground outer ward not far from the great gate-house and the central tower, he found walls and buildings, showing chambers with their doorways, a cobble pavement, two spiral staircases, and a latrine with its cesspit have been brought to light. Amongst the refuse from the cesspit the small bronze was found. It bears the shape of the head and shoulders of a dog. Mr. Reginald A. Smith, Keeper of the Department of British and Mediaeval Antiquities, at the British Museum, to whom it was submitted, wrote; " Your bronze has been gilt and enamelled in three colours (two shades of blue and red}, and dates from the thirteenth century, coming from Limoges or the Meuse district. I hesitate to name the species but it seems to be part of the decoration of a casket or shrine."

The bronze was in the possession of Sir Ivor Phillips.

The illustration depicts a large bottle shaped pot which appear to have fired a missile in the shape of a ball pierced by an arrow. Acc/to Mike Eastham there appears in VANUCCI BIRUNGUCCIO: PIROTECHNIA written on the 1540's a description of the process of casting bronze guns as used in 1540, This process differs little from the techniques described for bell founding by Theophilus

A bill for purchase for some of these " Pot de Fer" for the defence of Cambrai in 1339 shows that they were purchased by weight and that the total weight was, when cast in iron, 25lbs per gun. There is evidence that the English had three cannon at the battle of Crecy in 1346 said to have been carried slung below the baggage wagons] and on the site of the battle five balls roughly of 3in dia, three of iron and two of stone have been found in the part where it is reputed that the Genoese crossbowmen were halted by the fire of the English archers and our "Three cannon" The copper/bronze guns cast in 1353 for Edward III by William of Aldgate cost 13s 4d each to make.]

twelve pairs of guns (parea gynorum) with one iron chain (13s)

[Guns first recorded about this time but did not become common until around 1350, they were in general use by 1400. The earliest handguns consisted of a barrel attached to a wooden or metal pole and were ignited with a piece of smouldering tinder held in the free hand ---a picture illustrating Froissart's(died 1410) chronicle of the Hundred Year War in the Bodleian Library shows a hand gun being used] [Acc/to Funcken Handguns were found under a variety of names and developed among the lower rank of troops spread from Italy to Germany then into Flanders from where mercenaries were hired by the king of England in 1314. It had an enormous advantage over the bow and crossbow in that it did not require any special care or maintenance it could be manufactured in half a day and was much cheaper. (An English document of 1353 quoted by them claims the cost of a large crossbow was 66s and of a small bore barrel 3s. Lead bullets could be cast at the rate of 12 per minute. Range was only 50 metres but it could pierce a suit of armour at 20 metres]

Cannon

Until c1670 the word cannon was applied only to special types of guns - Very large artillery pieces - the smallest of which the demi-cannon weighed 6,000 lbs and fired a shot of 28-30 lbs

Gunpowder - introduced into Europe in the first decade of the 14c. There is little doubt that after 1325 "cannon" existed all over Western Europe and they were certainly used by the English under Edward III at Crecy although they were regarded as inefficient (what affect did they have on the horses)

Missiles - originally in the shape of a spear somewhat like a harpoon - later shaped stones and later still iron balls were employed.

The Guns were mostly made of cast bronze or brass - it was not until c15 that wrought iron was used. The original cast iron ones were inclined to burst when fired.

Early hand cannon - used in Europe C14 - the early hand cannon were small enough to be handled by one man but had to be aimed with one hand and fired with the other so hitting a moving target was very difficult.

Ballistae - giant crossbow type of engine in which the bow arms were generally levers held in vertical torsion coils one on either side of the projectile.

Catapults - used a single torsion powered arm that rose from the horizontal to the vertical to discharge a projectile held either in a cavity at the end of the arm or in a sling attached to it. Also referred to as Mangonels or Onagers

Springle - a single springy arm mounted rigidly in a vertical position. when the top of this arm was pulled back towards the horizontal it could be used to cast stones or impart forward velocity to arrows with strong heavy butts struck by the arm at the end of its free return.

Trebuchet - in general use in the Middle ages.- used gravity to propel a missile - by means of a tapered beam pivoted near the heavy end having a heavy weight attached to the heavy end. The slender end being pulled down the weighted end is raised, upon release by means of a trigger mechanism the weight falls jerking up the slender arm throwing the projectile which had been placed in the scooped out pocket at the slender end of the arm -- range - could be hundreds of yards - missiles -rocks, inflammable mixtures or dead animals (Mongol army said to have used the dead bodies of plague victims in 1334 as missiles when besieging a city).]

Pembroke Town Walls

The town of Pembroke still retains sections of its defences, which ran south from the Westgate Tower and east from the Northgate Tower. The northern line ran along what is now Millpond Walk. Little survives of the stretch nearer the castle, but further along are some well-preserved sections with crenulations still visible, but blocked by the raising of the walls, when the stair ramps were built along them to give access to the town houses within. A small circular tower on the north-east was originally attached by a now broken stretch of wall to Barnard's Tower, and impressive three-storied tower with a fore building over its entrance, defended by a bridge pit, portcullis and gate. The roof dome is intact, and the whole structure with its fireplace and lavatory is a strong, almost self-contained defensive unit; this was probably necessary as it was isolated on the north-eastern end of town, almost half a mile from the castle

The wall (inaccessible) continues south from Barnard's Tower to Eastgate which formerly stood over Main Street. The only other surviving sections are a small fragment of a tower on Goose Lane and two small round towers on the south. They stand on a rebuilt piece of town wall, and one has a late summer-house built on top. The southern town walls ran alongside a flat marsh, probably tidal in the 13th century. A fragment of Westgate survives opposite the castle entrance. The town defences, rather thin in comparison with others, are very early and probably date to much the same time as William Marshall's late 12th-century or early 13th-century work on the castle.

Civil War

The First Civil War

It would appear that most if not all of the action involving Pembrokeshire in the Civil Wars was concentrated in the south of the County

No record of personal bravery can be attributed to those who commanded or led for the King within the county-with the sole exception of that of John Gwyn, governor of Tenby, who paid for this dubious distinction with his life. He was, in any case, a Carmarthenshire man.

It is no less obvious that when the forces of the Parliament were confronted by a more professional soldiery under Colonel Gerard they were marked by a similar lack of determination, a deficiency minimised in their case by the greater experience and commitment of Rowland Laugharne and a few of his officers, and by the possession of defensible towns in Pembroke and Tenby, on which they could fall back. .

The Parliamentary cause was supported in Pembrokeshire principally by a group of men motivated mainly by what may be called 'anti-Popery and the experience of Ireland'. . Irish immigrants were already concentrated in that part of the county which was most vulnerable, near the chief ports, and doubts had plainly been raised in some minds about their true allegiance.

Other Prominent figures

John Wogan, in his old age, was one of two members of Parliament for Pembrokeshire firmly associated with the Parliamentary cause. At no time did he sign any kind of declaration in favour of the King (a fact sufficient to distinguish him from almost all his fellow-gentry); his mother was Sybil, daughter of Sir Hugh Owen of Orielson; he was educated, like Sir James Perrot, at Jesus College, Oxford (as, incidentally, was Nicholas Adams); his wife was Jane Colclough of Tintern, His sons, Rowland and Thomas, served as colonel and captain, respectively, in the army of the Parliament, the latter earning a very special and in some quarters hated name as one of the regicides of 1649.

In the vicinity of and within the town of Pembroke.

Prominent families which included Parliamentary supporters where Meyrick's, Adam's, Powel's, Cheere's, Shakerlyne's, Lynche's, Marychurch of Manorbier, Cuny of Welston --- The Meyrick's fought for the Parliamentary side but not in Pembrokeshire

In August, 1635, the King demanded ship money from the County of Pembroke. It was raised and the High Sheriff personally conveyed the specie to London, but was unfortunately drowned with his followers while crossing Ensham Ferry about the 1st of February 1636 and part of the money lost. Money had to be raised again to replace that lost.

1639

Presbyterians of Scotland became so aggressive that it was necessary to send an armed force to the north. This consisted of 6000 foot and a like number of horse. It was raised early in 1639, the Earl of Arundel receiving the command, the Earl of Essex being nominated Lieutenant-General. The latter according to Clarendon was "The most popular man in the kingdom, and the darling of the swordsmen." The army for service in Scotland was raised by general levy, towards which the County of Pembroke contributed 150 men. Two demonstrations were made against the Scots but not a single shot fired or a man injured on either side. On June 18th peace was signed and the armies disbanded.

Charles was terribly pressed for ready money. Indeed so great were his difficulties that after a lapse of more than eleven years he summoned a Parliament to meet him on April 13, 1640. In this assembly John Wogan of Wiston represented the county. Sir John Stepney of Prendergast was elected for the Pembroke Boroughs and Sir Hugh Owen of Oriulton for Haverfordwest. This Parliament for once and all declared that the levying of ship money was illegal.

12 May the earl of Strafford was executed and on 23 October following, the Irish of Ulster rose in revolt, claiming intent to rescue the King from his Parliament and confirming in the minds of all Puritans the suspicions they had of Strafford's activities in Ireland and the involvement of the King in his plans. The Commons, appealed to by the King for money to strengthen Ormond's army in Ireland against the rebels, resolved to raise 8,000 men but also to select such officers for service in Ireland that they could trust. Sir John Meyrick of The Fleet, Monkton, and member for Ashton, was one of the first three chosen

January 14

The Earl of Essex informed the House of Lords that he had been commanded by the King to attend at Hampton Court in his office of Lord Chamberlain and Groom of the Stole. It was resolved by the House not to dispense with his presence, and he was bidden to inform His Majesty of their decision. The King again repeated his command and again the Lords declined to let the Earl go. A third time the King bade his Chamberlain attend and in return received a somewhat insolent resolution from both houses, "That the Earls of Essex and Holland did not disobey the King by attending to their Parliamentary duties." The King then, as was but natural, deprived the Earl of all office and command. This royal order marks the rupture between King Charles I. and the people of South Pembrokeshire. So long as the Earl served the King they were prepared to do the same, and put up with a great deal of aggravation from the high churchmen, but now that the Earl whom they knew to be a most moderate man had broken with the King the outlook was hopeless.

18th January,

Sir Hugh Owen had laid Poyer's reports about possible French aid for the Irish rebels before the Commons, who directed that Poyer, in his capacity as mayor of Pembroke, should 'stay' ships from Ross, Wexford, Kilkenny and other ports and examine both merchants and goods thoroughly.

12 February

John Poyer, on informed Sir Hugh Owen (for transmission to the House of Commons) that since his last letter of 18 January 'there have been hundreds of poor English landed in Milford stripped by the rebels, who do increase daily. If aid be sent to the rebels it is very likely some of them may be driven or willingly will come into the river of Milford, where 500 or 1000 are armed men, as I conceive, may possess themselves of the whole country, and fortify Pembroke town with the castle and other strong places in the said county which will not so lightly be regained'.

He also asked Sir Hugh Owen to make plain to the Commons the sad disarray of the trained bands in Pembrokeshire, not two hundred of whom could be armed adequately to repel invasion, he went on: "We have not in this brave river of Milford one piece of ordnance mounted, the trained bands are not exercised, arms provided or power granted for punishing of persons refractory in this service"

Poyer, himself a merchant trading to Ireland, was profoundly nervous about all ships coming in from that country. There were refugees from Ireland for whose relief the member for Pembroke, Sir Hugh Owen, was in February 1642 authorised to spend £100.38 and there were travellers who might not be genuine refugees, about whom John Poyer was especially concerned. Delegates from Lords and Commons together discussed the defences of Milford Haven, long decayed; dilatory enough, they concluded that the only defence possible at short notice lay in an adequate naval force. The vulnerability of Milford and the southern Pembrokeshire ports induced Sir Hugh Owen to be more active in the House of Commons than he had ever been before. Owen was by January 1642 authorised to formulate instructions to the mayor of Pembroke (none other than that same John Poyer) about the detention of Irish ships, their goods and the merchants aboard them as they lay in harbour. These instructions were part of Parliament's measures to counter what was announced as a Popish plot, expected to culminate in an invasion from Ireland. Magistrates were ordered to set watches, secure magazines and hold fast all fortified places.

Poyer, whose continued pressure had been instrumental in obtaining precise instructions from the Commons, co-operated with John David, mayor of Haverfordwest, in February 1642 in seizing a number of Catholics, some of them unexplainably itinerant officers from Ormond's army, and on 31 March was thanked by the House for his services.

Both Houses drew up a Militia Ordinance, nominating lord lieutenant to command forces in the shires. A few months later the King answered this with his Commissions of Array, attempting to secure the same ground.

12 July the Commons had formed a Committee of Safety and resolved to raise an army of 10,000 men from London and its vicinity;

July 12 1642

After a long debate, the two Houses of Parliament

“Did choose the Earl of Essex to be Captain-General of such forces as are or shall be raised for the maintenance and preservation of the Protestant religion, the King's person, the laws of the land the peace of the kingdom, the liberty and property of the subject, the rights and privileges of Parliament, and this house doth now declare that they will maintain and adhere to him the said Earl of Essex with their lives and estates in the same cause”

Lord Essex selected his tried old friend Sir John Meyrick to be President of the Council of War and Adjutant-General, or as it was then called Serjeant-Major General. Meyrick was M.P. for Newcastle-under-Lyne, nephew of old Sir Gilly Meyrick and son of Francis Meyrick of Fleet, in the parish of Monkton, Pembroke, and uncle of Colonel Rowland Laugharne of St. Bride's. Sir John was already colonel of a regiment and among those serving in it as captains are to be found the names of his father Sir Francis Meyrick and Thomas Laugharne of St. Bride's. Also serving in it were young Gilly Meyrick, and Thomas and Miles Button (Rowland Laugharne's brothers-in-law)

The King had raised his standard at Nottingham and a state of war existed.

September 20

The King was at Shrewsbury and the men of North Wales had been summoned to his banner; in South Wales nothing had happened except the apparently bloodless surrender of Cardiff Castle to the Royalist commander, the marquis of Hertford, who had crossed the Bristol Channel from Somerset. Within the next few weeks, however, Hertford rode west to Carmarthen where

2 November,

The gentry of Pembrokeshire were summoned to meet him. Some, like Roger Lort, who was commissioned to raise a regiment for the King, obeyed with alacrity; others, like his brother Sampson, and John Eliot, followed. Sir Hugh Owen, John Wogan and Sir Richard Philipps of Picton, on the other hand, are known to have refused.

Support for the King was sufficient, nevertheless, especially with the greater numbers from Carmarthenshire, to form a Royal Association which, as winter came on, made surreptitious moves against the enemy,

One of these was Capt. Crowe's cattle raid on the lands of Lamphey Court, the home of that Major John Gunter who was known to be serving with the Parliamentary army and whose house was the property of the earl of Essex. Where there was maintained a garrison separate from and apparently not subject to the local Parliamentary command.

John Poyer, mayor of Pembroke, put the town in a state of defence for Parliament. (Records of 1595 show that the town walls and castle were in substantial repair though the latter was unroofed and dismantled; but as no repairs had been since that date Mayor Poyer must have expended a considerable sum of money Pembroke, which he rendered impregnable to aught but famine.

We do not know anything of John Poyer's early days, but Clarendon states "Had from a low trade raised himself in the war to the reputation of a very diligent and stout officer, and was trusted by the Parliament with the government of the town and castle of Pembroke" According to Carlyle he was given to brandy, and there is reason to suppose he was not particularly straightforward in money matters, he had acted as bailiff for Tenby in 1639, and a vessel belonged to him; so probably he was a merchant.

The mayor of Pembroke was ably seconded by Rowland, son of John Laugharne of St. Bride's, who had served under the Earl of Essex as a volunteer in the Netherlands in 1614 and Rice Powell. He is spoken of as a veteran " that came from Ireland to endeavour the relief, and not like many others the destruction, of his bleeding country;" He was a soldier of fortune, and was probably that Sergeant Major Powell who served for the King under the Earl of Northumberland in Colonel Lundsford's regiment in 1640. Colonel Powell proved a great acquisition to the Pembrokeshire Roundheads.

The King's party fearing lest Tenby should follow the example set by the sister town of Pembroke, directed Richard Vaughan Earl of Carbery (the Royalist Commander-in-Chief in South Wales) to occupy the place forthwith. The fortifications of Tenby were probably in a better state of repair than those of Pembroke; at all events they were restored in 1588. The people, if we are to judge from subsequent events, were at heart Parliamentarians; however they offered no opposition to the Earl, who was a popular man and well-known in Pembrokeshire as a nephew of old Sir Gilly Meyrick

August there were two Royalist men-of-war in Milford Haven: the Fellowship of Bristol, 400 tons, 24 guns, with four captains on board; Captain Barnaby Burly, Captain Brooks, Captain Will Hazle, and Captain Richard Nelson; and the Hart frigate, Captain Nesson. The captains of the Fellowship had called together the gentlemen of the county and assured them that His Majesty had taken Bristol, and that the war was over.

They were attacked by the Roundhead Captain William Smith in the Swallow, one of the Parliamentary ships which were blockading the Irish coast. Captain Smith took the Fellowship without any loss on either side, and also captured her consort the Hart. In the frigate two men were killed, the first bloodshed in Little England. Admiral (Captain) Richard Swanley in the Leopard, with the Prosperous, the Providence, the Crescent, and a merchantman known as the Leopard then came into the Haven. Captain Swanley then determined to bombard Tenby. They opened fire on the castle but with little effect.

"Eight ships presently rode before the town and made at least one hundred shots against the inhabitants, but one of the Milford canon shot one of the best ships through and through, and so set the rest apacking. Whereby the good people of Tenby received no prejudice". The design was to have besieged Tenby by land with forces from Pembroke town, but the beacons being fired, the good honest old way in times of rebellion many in Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire arose heartily to join with the noble Earl, whereby as the letter says, "Tenby was settled with thunder and lightning in despite of all the Pembrokeshire rebels."

This ill-fated ship may have been lying off the Sker Rock-as a large gun was dredged up at this place and is now in the Tenby Museum.

1643 September 26

Lord Carbery went to Haverfordwest where he was welcomed by the gentry and the trained bands, the mayor and aldermen pledged never to receive a hostile garrison in the town. They also gave a large sum of money for the King.

Thus the whole of Pembrokeshire except for Pembroke supported the King

January Roche castle was fortified by the Royalists

Ships were brought round from Bristol with ordnance and stores to fortify the Haven, a work that was undertaken by one Captain Richard Steele of Oxford (a great talker, who pretended to be an engineer).

The Bristol fleet captured the little ship which "Captain" Poyer had fitted out at his own expense with eight guns, in order that she might run to the Downs and beg aid from the Parliamentary fleet.

"The Earl of Carbery having voted that after the harbour was fortified he would plunder the town of Pembroke and the houses of the gentlemen who had adhered to that party, and that their persons should be put to death by cruel tortures". The Mayor of Pembroke they said should be put in a barrel of nails and brought to Prick's pill and from the top of a hill should be rolled down into the sea. This report so terrified the gentlemen that they fled from their houses and hid themselves in obscure places in disguise, and sent their wives and children to Tenby where his Lordship the Earl of Carbery then lay, humbly to supplicate his Lordship to be pleased to grant them protection that their houses might not be plundered, nor their persons abused by the rude soldiery among whom there was a reverend and aged gentlewoman, the wife of Mr. Griffith White, who had in her house (Henllan) eight sons and eight daughters, who were virgins, and four small grandchildren, in all twenty in number, with divers servants both male and female. This gentlewoman pressing his Lordship to commiserate her sad state in case her house should be plundered desired his protection, assuring his Lordship that when so ever he would be pleased to give her husband leave to wait on him she did not doubt but that her husband would give his Lordship ample satisfaction in all his lawful demands. His Lordship replied he would find a time to speak with her husband but as for protection would grant her none. The gentlewoman with tears in her eyes desired his Lordship to look to her children who in point of honour he stood engaged to protect, as also the chastity of matrons and virgin which without his Lordship's protection she said must be undoubtedly violated and her family perish to which his Lordship answered with divers reproaches and some jests, that it were better her children and family should perish than that the King should want means to perfect his design. To which she said the King could not want if his Majesty would be graciously pleased to be content with what God and the laws of the land had provided. At which his Lordship flung out of the room, leaving the gentlewoman with tears in her eyes, and so she departed to her house full of grief and pensive thoughts."

Rowland Laugharne who was in command at Pembroke sallied out with certain troopers and a few foot towards Carew. His men were dispersed (probably foraging) when the captain in command at Carew attempted to surprise Laugharne and seven troop who were with him but these latter routed their opponents, took twenty prisoners, among whom was a Lieutenant Jones, who afterwards joined the Parliamentarians.

This action was said to have been fought "between two garrisons of the enemy not much more distant from each shot." One of these must have been Carew Castle, the other the Fortified Rectory

Parliamentary Ships entered the Haven Admiral Captain Swanley in the Leopard and Vice-Admiral Captain Smith in the Swallow sailed into the Haven.

Laugharne and Poyer at once boarded the Swallow and explained the state of matters

The Royal ships from Bristol, Globe and Providence, ran under the guns of Pill fort for safety.

Laugharne borrowed hundred and fifty sailors from the Parliamentary ships and with these and his own Pembroke troopers took Stackpole with its little garrison of sixty men the owner hiding (perhaps in the cave known as Lort's Hole). Laugharne then moved on to Trefloyne, which was held for the King by Mr Thomas Bowen. Lord Carbery made sortie from Tenby to relieve him, but was driven back in confusion and lost part of his force in crossing the Marsh. Trefloyne was taken. Then it was decided to attack Pill Fort and Haverfordwest.

"Whereupon the little army, consisting of about 250 foot, half seamen, and half soldiers with 60 horsemen and a demi-culverin (fired a ball about 9 pounds) with a sacre (had a bore of 3 ½ ins shot weight about 5 lbs) and 5 small field pieces, made a resolute adventure over the water, animated and encouraged by the presence of a good hearty old gentleman, Mr John Laugharne, Colonel Laugharne's father, who had long before left his country habitation, and with his whole family a few servants excepted betaken himself to the town of Pembroke. His interest and fair noble carriage had always engaged unto him the affections of many in that part of the county we were set upon called Roose. It was God's will our landing was not interrupted, and our horse immediately dispersing abroad to bring in men, cattle, and other necessities to draw our carriages found the country willing and ready which so expedited the work that the demi-culverin and sacre were early in the evening planted in a hedge that within a short distance over looked the fort, and presently played effectually upon it. Hereupon 20 musketeers were placed in Stainton, a steeple seated on a hill that over sees most of that country, and thereabouts the horse presently ranged to hinder correspondence between Pill and Haverfordwest, and took some straggling soldiers and some messengers and put them in the church. We saw no body of the enemy till a little before night. Sir Francis Lloyd with about 60 horse and some foot descended a hill from Johnson, but they being, as we conceived, afraid of our artillery never touched the ascent of Stainton, where our horse were drawn, but retreated to Haverford." (Simon Thelwall' a Letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, April 1, 1644)

On the following day Pill Fort capitulated. There were taken at that place, Mr. John Barlow, Master of the Ordnance; five captains, certain inferior officers, thirteen great guns, six field carriages, 300 common soldiers, the two Bristol ships, wherein were twelve pieces of ordnance and six barrels of powder. The loss of the fort created a panic at Haverfordwest; a herd of cattle frightened by the cannonading at Pill stampeded, and these being seen by the Haverford garrison were mistaken in the gloaming for Roundhead troopers, both commanders fled. Sir Henry Vaughan, Major-General of the army ; Sir John Stepney, Knt. and Baronet, Governor of Haverfordwest ; Sir Francis Lloyd, Knt., Commander-in-Chief of the Horse; Lieutenant-Colonel Butler, High Sheriff of the County; James Martin, Captain of Horse ; Captain John Edwardes, Commissioner of Array ; Captain Hull of Bristol, and one hundred sailors disgracefully bolted. Laugharne and his men occupied Haverford on the day after the capture of Pill, and in two days " Roche Castle, a very considerable stronghold had it water, was summoned and delivered."

The Roundhead force then marched to Pembroke, and obtaining another gun proceeded to Tenby. To which place Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Butler the High Sheriff of the County had retreated with eighty men from Haverfordwest. Vice-Admiral William Smith in the Swallow, Captain Gettensby in the Prosperous, and the Crescent frigate, preceding the land force had opened fire on the town. When the latter arrived they placed their demi-cannon on a hill within musket shot, (Greenhill) a demi-culverin within half a musket shot, the small field pieces being set to scour the guard wings and hedges lined by the enemy ; our foot men having also drawn down, and armed hedges and a good strong house within pistol shot, and there continue in this posture, hot pelting between the small shot from Thursday two of the clock, till Saturday evening, and battered many houses in the town, but had not all this while impaired the town wall, except only the most necessary part there the great gate our only place of entrance. This gate Governor Commissary Gwynne (who in his actions show of a soldier), had strengthened with dung and rubbish. The gate was stormed and taken Commissary Gwynne was mortally wounded. Lieutenant-Colonel Butler the High Sheriff Colonel David Gwynne, Captains Lewis and Mitholl, non-commissioned officers and 300 men with their arms were taken.

Very soon after the capture of Tenby, Carew Castle surrendered to Poyer, on condition that the officers were to march out with their swords and common soldiers with their muskets, and bags and baggage

Captain Richard Swanley was sweeping the seas between Milford Haven and Ireland. He captured a troopship under the command of a Royalist, Colonel Willoughby, with about one hundred and fifty men on board bound for Bristol, and actually compelled seventy men and two women to walk the plank,

July, Colonel Gerard, a favourite of Prince Rupert and an accomplished commander, was sent to South Wales

Gerard retook Haverfordwest, then "Picton Castle, which the Parliamentarians had made a very stronghold, about twelve o'clock at night he fell on and stormed it, and mastered it in 1 hour with the loss of nine common soldiers hurt and taken, but not one officer, only Colonel Butler gentleman received a shot whereof he is now past danger. In the castle were found three barrels 150 arms, Baronet Phillipps' son and two of his daughters a good round sum of ready money, and 12 trunks of plate besides £500 more of money. The castle itself is very strong and in good repair" General Gerard placed a sufficient garrison and next day marched to Carew Castle near Pembroke, which was also taken, the remnant of the rebels being now driven to their last state, at Pembroke and Tenby

Gerard retook Roche Castle early in July, 1644, capturing at that place 500 oxen and sheep. He was then recalled to headquarters at Bristol

July 28 Acc to Rowland Laugharne

"The enemy's (Royalists) main body being at Haverfordwest, we drew forth out of garrisons of Pembroke and Tenby with 550 foot and 200 horse and dragoons (being the most that could be spared with security out of the towns), and two small guns and marched that day to Caneston, within five miles of Haverfordwest; there met 7 of the enemies scouts, killed one, took the other six. That day Captain Batten arrived at Milford; and by Divine ordination above our hopes, landed 150 seamen to increase our force. We kept the field until the 1st of August no enemy appearing. Then Major-General Stradling and Major-General Egerton drew forth out of Haverford with 450 horse, 1100 foot and four field guns into Colby Moor, three miles from Haverford and there put themselves in array for fight. A small part of our horse guarded on both sides with 150 musketeers charged their whole body, began the encounter about six of the clock in the afternoon, and continued very fierce and doubtful many an hour, but in the conclusion the enemies horse were totally routed, the residue of our horse fell on some part to do execution upon the foot, the other to pursue the horse speeding upon Haverford. We killed of the enemies 150, took about 700 prisoners, four guns five barrels of powder, near 800 arms, all their carriages and provisions and chased them home to their garrisons. The night then approaching we might not beset the town to keep in their horse, but drew back to the field, so that in the night the enemy deserted the town and fled leaving a garrison in the Castle. Saturday we entered the town and besieged the Castle, began our battery on Monday, but spent much ammunition to little purpose. Tuesday giving over we find the outer gate, and scaled the walls, gained the castle, took prisoners 120 common soldiers and near 20 commanders and officer's one piece of ordnance, 150 arms, some pillage to the soldiers besides the provision. Yesterday being the 8th of August we had a day of publique humiliation and thanks giving in Pembroke and Haverford and the League; this day we drew our force of horse and foot before Carew Castle and are drawing up our ordnance to plant them before the Castle relying upon the Lord of Heaven for a blessing, in all their actions; we bless God, we lost but two men and about sixty wounded, none mortally".

Carew and Picton Castles respectively belonging to Sir George Carew the Royalist and Sir Richard Philipps the Roundhead, were still garrisoned by the King's men. According to the newspapers Manorbier (probably a mere shell) was also held by the Cavaliers.

Carew seem to have capitulated,
Picton stood a three weeks' siege

1645

Laugharne and his troops followed up their success and drove the Cavaliers out of the county of Carmarthen. This was accomplished in October, 1645

1646

In February, 1646, the Pembroke shire troops relieved Cardiff, and the April following captured Aberystwith Castle.

1647

January, 1647, put down a serious insurrection in Glamorganshire.

1645

Rowland Laugharne had been rewarded for his valuable services by Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, who on the 4th of March, 1645, settled on him and his heirs the Slebech estates of John Barlow who had made himself peculiarly hateful to the Parliamentarians by his loyal service to the King under the Marquis of Worcester and Lord Glamorgan.

1645

A part of the Parliament side under Cromwell, determined to get quit of Lord Essex, who led the Presbyterians. In April, 1645, the Earl of Essex resigned his commission so all came under the command of Sir Thomas Fairfax

His resignation was accepted, but a portion of the army by no means approved. "There have been great mutinies and discontents among his (the Earl's) soldiers, in so much as they have refused to march with Sir William Waller." Among the discontents were Sir John Meyrick, who had already suffered for his loyalty to the Earl, for in 1643 he was superseded from his post of Sergeant-Major General of the Army to make way for Skippon, and was nominated General of Ordnance. Sir John sent in his resignation at the same time the Earl gave way to Fairfax, and we may be certain these matters were discussed in Pembrokeshire and had not a little to do with subsequent events that came about in that county whose course was nearly run.

On the 14th of September, 1646, Lord Essex died in Essex House, it is said, of fever brought on by over exertion in a stag hunt at Windsor. A public funeral in Westminster Abbey was decreed for him, both Houses of Parliament attending. Sir John Meyrick carried his gorget. Lord Essex was buried in St. John Baptist's Chapel. He had taken for his second wife Elizabeth daughter of Sir William Paulet of Edington. This marriage, like the former, had ended in disaster and separation. The only child died in infancy. Sir Walter Devereux, Bart., of Castle Bromwich, succeeded as fifth Viscount Hereford, and Lady Hertford to Lamphey Court and the Pembrokeshire estate, which was shortly afterwards purchased by the Owens of Orielton, in whose possession it remained until the year 1821, when the manor passed by purchase into the hands of Charles Mathias, Esq., of Llangwarren, who built the modern house.

"Master Gunter" seems to have been the last resident at Lamphey Court. During his occupation it was most likely rendered uninhabitable, for numerous cannon balls found in the vicinity prove the old house suffered a bombardment

The Royalist party had been suppressed throughout West Wales, and a victorious triumvirate composed of Laugharne Poyer and Powell ruled Little England in the name of Parliament come about. The Presbyterian faction, to which Pembrokeshire men mostly belonged, gradually became more and more bitterly opposed to the Independents, who were represented by Cromwell and the army.

In February, 1647, the Scotch Presbyterians sold King Charles to the English Parliament for £400,000 and the Presbyterian majority in the latter body, considering that as the Royal person was now safe in the keeping of Parliament, there was no further necessity for a standing army, and that the majority should be disbanded, thus saving England from a military despotism, . But the army declined to disband and while the matter was under discussion Cornet Joyce stole the King away from Holmby House and brought him as a captive to head-quarters at Saffron Waldron. The army remained undisbanded.

Taking advantage of these dissensions certain Royalists now in Glamorganshire `declared for the King and Sir Thomas Fairfax'. They stated that they would be very glad to hear how Rowland Laugharne looked upon their proceedings. Laugharne forwarded the letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons declaring "I shall (God willing) never desert my first principles for the Parliament of England," and then marched on Cardiff. The insurrection melted at his approach.

It would seem from Laugharne's protestations that his good faith was doubted by the Parliamentary party as early as June, 1647. It is difficult to discover what grievance could have rankled in his mind if it was not the Presbyterian feud. He was Major-General of the District, had been rewarded with the valuable estate of Slebech and was held in high esteem by the whole Parliamentary party.

According to Claredon

"The Pembrokeshire leaders communicated their discontents to each other, and all thought themselves ill requited by the Parliament for the service they had done and that other men (especially Colonel Mytton) were preferred before them; and resolved to take the opportunity of the Scots coming in, to declare for the King upon the Presbyterian account"

Powell seems to have been a free lance that followed the fortunes of his leader without consideration, deeming it was a soldier's duty to obey.

In Poyer's case the causes of disaffection may be readily discerned. He commenced life as a merchant, and had prospered in some trade, which he threw over, and took up first politics, then war, as a means of livelihood. His business was sacrificed and his capital squandered. To redeem the latter he availed himself of opportunities afforded by his position as Parliamentary Commissioner, and was openly accused of dishonesty by his neighbours.

On January 3., Sir Thomas Wroth proposed in the House of Commons
“That the King should be laid by, and the Kingdom settled without him; that some other government should be formed he cared not what, so that the ruling power be neither king nor devil”.

This motion was carried by 140 against 92, and forthwith sent up to the Lords. The upper house after a protracted debate, and two adjournments adopted the motion on January 15th.

Royalists and Presbyterians in England and Scotland were rebellious, and a portion of the fleet revolted.

It was in Pembrokeshire that the disaffection came to a head.

The leaders of the Independent party seem to have been kept well informed of what was passing in West Wales, for an order was forthwith given that the army of South Wales under the command of Major-General Laugharne should be disbanded, a few soldiers being retained to garrison the fortresses of Cardiff, Swansea, Carmarthen and Pembroke.

Laugharne notwithstanding his protestations is said to have been imprisoned, and Poyer was superseded in favour of Colonel Fleming.

This thoroughly roused Poyer who was threatened by some of his neighbours (probably Roger Lort of Stackpole and Griffith White of Henllan in Castlemartin) with a lawsuit for misappropriation of funds as a Commissioner. Poyer entrenched himself in Pembroke Castle which he garrisoned with a mixed force of Presbyterians and Royalists in number about 500.

Some time before March 13th Fleming occupied Pembroke town, where he awaited orders from Cromwell. When these arrived he held a council of war and sent a summons to deliver up Pembroke Castle within twelve hours, or Poyer and all with him to be proclaimed rebels.

Poyer was willing to agree subject to being paid £1000 plus his arrears of pay and the arrears of pay of his men.

Colonel Fleming offered him £200 pounds and laid down conditions regarding disbanding the forces.

Colonel Poyer answered this appeal by opening fire on the town: several houses were battered down, and eleven soldiers wounded, some mortally.

Then Colonel Fleming who appears to have been most anxious to avoid proceeding to extremities thinking perhaps it was a dread of the lawsuit hanging over Poyer's head that rendered him desperate with the advice, and upon the desire of the gentlemen of the county “offered he should have the security of the gentlemen of the county· whom he hath much oppressed that they would relinquish all suits and actions at law against him”.

But all these offers from Colonel Fleming and the gentlemen of the county could not prevail upon Poyer. He put out his flag of defiance and would not yield.

News arrived in Pembroke that the detachment of Laugharne's men in Tenby were prepared to revolt from Parliament, but on the other hand the garrison of Carmarthen declared that neither they nor their comrades in Tenby had any sympathy with Poyer. From what followed, it would seem that this letter was intended to put Fleming off his guard, for two hundred of Laugharne's men with the cognizance of Poyer, made a forced march on Pembroke ; when near at hand Poyer, who could see them from the castle before Fleming's men were aware of their approach, sent out instructions by a messenger. He then sallied forth and attacked Fleming in his quarters; the latter gallantly defended himself, and indeed seemed to be getting the best of the fight, but Laugharne's troopers coming up and taking him in the rear utterly routed the Parliament forces, killing and wounding many, “capturing twenty or thirty prisoners and two great culvens, with all arms and ammunition.” Laugharne's men must have entered by the east gate which no doubt was opened to them by confederates in the town. Poyer was now master of Pembroke and the surrounding district. He fortified and victualled the town in anticipation of a siege.

Captain Henry Addys, one of those of Carmarthen who had signed the false declaration, joined him with one hundred men, and he proceeded to raise foot and horse, pressing the country people, collecting arms of all sorts and provisions. He imprisoned Messrs. Sampson Lort of East Moor, Thomas Bowen of Trefloyne and David Poyer; his brother, they paid ransoms but subsequently joined the rebels.

“Hearing that two companies of foot sent from Bristol to join Fleming had landed near Pwllcrochan, Poyer sallied out with a hundred men in pursuit the Parliamentarians had however fortified the Church, and from thence it was impossible to dislodge them, so Poyer agreed they should retire to their ships on condition they left the Haven and did not return.”

Poyer then proceeded to Henllan House, where there were Mr. Griffith White the staunch old Parliament man, the owner of the house; Mr. Roger Lort of Stackpole ; the Royalist Adjutant-General Fleming; Mr. John Lort of Prickeston; and several other gentle men and commissioners; these also escaped by water It is said that while flying .from Poyer Mr. White dropped a number of gold pieces which have from time to time been picked up near the ruins of Henllan. Matters had now become very serious.

Poyer had between 1200 and 1300 men under arms, and the country was rising in his favour. Sir Henry Stradling Major-General John Stradling, Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Stradling, Lieutenant-Colonel John Butler, Colonel Morgan (Governor of Gloucester), Colonel Richard Donnel (late Governor of Swansea), all joined the rebels. The Earl of Carbery however would have nothing to do with them. On the 9th of April Poyer held a great review on Colby Moor,. He then marched to Carmarthen where he was joined by Powell. The Parliamentarian leaders had by this time recognised the extreme gravity of the situation. The fire that self-seeking Mayor Poyer had lit in West Wales kindled every disaffected spirit in the realm. Colonel Horton was directed to march westward with all speed, and a detachment of Colonel Reade's force at Bristol, under Colonel Overton, was ordered to proceed to Pembrokeshire. In April Horton overpowered the disaffected garrison at Brecon and shortly afterwards disbanded certain local troops at Swansea. Meanwhile Poyer and Powell had pushed on to Lampeter with a body of English, Scotch, Irish and Welsh. Recruits for the King's army were hurrying forward from all parts; not only the country gentlemen and their followers, " but divers porters, butchers, and such rascally fellows come hither (to Carmarthen) from London." Besides this Welsh army the Scotch were causing great anxiety to the Parliamentarians, for it was an open secret that they might rise any day. The Royalist cause was looking up.

About the beginning of May Horton entered Carmarthenshire. The Pembroke men had broken down the bridges, and were now camped near the Towy river. Captains Cozens and Addys, of Laugharne's horse, were despatched to fortify Newcastle in Emlyn ; there was some slight skirmishing between the two armies, but without serious result. At length Poyer entrenched himself on a hilltop near Llandilo Fawr, and so strong was his position that Horton feared to attack. Colonel Fleming was ordered to make for a pass in Poyer's rear, where he was met by Major Roach in command of a troop of Powell's. The latter retired and was pursued by Colonel Fleming, who fell into an ambush prepared for him in the town of Llandilo Fawr, where his force was cut in two. The Colonel with one hundred troopers fled to the church which Poyer's men stormed and there either by accident or intent Fleming shot himself. So terribly were the Parliamentarians affected by Fleming's tragic end that Horton fell back on Neath to await reinforcements under Colonel Okey, from whence he retired to Brecon, the people showing hostility on the whole line of march. The House of Commons fully realised the gravity of the situation. On the 1st of May Fairfax informed Mr. Speaker that Cromwell and a sufficient force had been despatched into Wales.

Poyer had marched through Carmarthen and proceeded towards Cardiff, with a view to raise Glamorganshire and Monmouth. Colonel Horton having obtained reinforcements and ammunition retraced his steps with all speed that bad roads, unseasonable weather, and lack of accommodation for man and beast allowed. On the 4th of May he camped at St. Fagans on the little river Ely.

Poyer's men were at St. Nicholas.

“It is reported that Major-General Laugharne is come unto Poyer; whether it were he or not we cannot tell but the Welsh shot off all their guns lately to welcome some person of quality.”

He certainly was with them when they reached St. Nicholas,

On the evening of Sunday Laugharne and Poyer advanced towards St. Nicholas about 8000 strong, and on Monday, May 8th, about seven in the morning attacked Horton's force. After a stubborn fight the Pembrokeshire men were driven back from hedge to hedge until they arrived at bridge where their reserves were; at length Horton's horse crossed the stream and flanked the Welshmen, who then gave way and fled panic-stricken. Horton's horse pursued them for eight or ten miles. Major-General Rowland Laugharne was wounded, and his brother Thomas was among the slain who were so numerous that the river Ely ran red from St. Fagans down to Penarth.

Three thousand prisoners were taken, with 2000 firearms, with pikes, Welsh bills, 50 colours, 360 horse, and all the ammunition, bag and baggage. Among the prisoners were Major Addys, the same who joined Poyer in Pembroke; Thomas Bowen of Trefloyne; James Lewis of Kilkiffeth; Lieutenant-Colonel Wogan of Wiston (?); Captain William Button, and Mr. Devereux Grafton of Carew. On Horton's side were Thomas Wogan, M.P. for Cardigan Boroughs, sent hither by the House of Commons, and subsequently distinguished as one of the regicides; and Captain Jones, captured by Laugharne at Carew, who on that occasion turned coat. This man again changed sides, for deserting Poyer with a troop of sixty horse he joined Horton. The defeated army of Royalists and Presbyterians fled to the westward, Laugharne and Poyer making good their retreat to Pembroke, while Powell with a hundred troopers took refuge in Tenby. To these shortly afterwards came in many fugitives, who straightaway set to work preparing for a desperate resistance.

Colonel Horton proceeded to take vengeance. Eleven of the principal prisoners were brought on board the Admiral Crowther man-of-war then lying at Cardiff, and tried by court martial: Major-General Stradling, Major Phillips, Captain Thomas Matthews, Captain Button (Laugharne's brother-in-law), Mr. Miles Matthews, Lieutenant-Colonel Hopkin Popkins, Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Morgan, Colonel Arthur Harries, Captain Edward Walker, Captain Rich Cradock, and Lieutenant-Colonel Lewis Thomas. Of these three were shot and one hanged. This excessive severity was perhaps necessary, for the insurrection was spreading. The number of prisoners, said to have been 3000, was so great that an application was made to the Parliament by Prince Charles Lodovick to have permission to transport some of the prisoners to Italy. This was granted with the proviso that they should be volunteers and confined to the common people of Wales. Any from outside Wales were to be transported to the West Indies.

Colonel Horton did not waste time; he followed up his victory and must have reached Tenby close behind the fugitives under Powell, the victory at St. Fagans was won on Monday, May 8th. On the Sunday Colonel Horton's men attempted to storm the town of Tenby but were repulsed. The Parliamentarians subsequently attacked again and took a certain work with thirty prisoners and some slain. Disconcerted by this further misfortune the besieged humbly desired permission to march out upon conditions.

On Wednesday, May 31, 1648, the garrison of Tenby under Colonel Powell desired that Colonel Horton would take them into protection and mercy. The conditions of surrender were as follows:

1. That the besieged delivered up all the ordnance, arms and ammunition of the Castle, to Lieutenant-General Cromwell for the use of the Parliament.
2. That the common soldiers be permitted (those who will) to be transported into Italy.
3. That those soldiers who desire to go home may be permitted, taking an oath never to engage against the Parliament hereafter.
4. That all the officers surrender themselves prisoners, their lives and estates to be at the mercy of the Parliament.

These latter were: Colonel Rice Powell, Colonel Edward Kemeys, Colonel Richard Donnell, Sergeant-Major Vaughan, Captain Beale, Captain Addys, Captain Powell, Mr. Thomas Basset, ; and

thirty others One hundred soldiers agreed to go abroad, twenty pieces of ordnance three hundred arms, four barrels of powder that had been partly used, forty horses only five colours and the standard of Tenby Castle; all their ammunition, provisions, bag and baggage were captured. Though the town of Tenby probably did not suffer so severely during Horton's siege in May, 1648, as when Laugharne operated against it in April, 1644, yet perhaps we should ascribe certain wanton mischief which some evil persons perpetrated in the Church of St. Mary's to the Independents commanded by Horton. The west window of the north aisle was once filled with fine stained glass, but it was utterly destroyed, perhaps at this time; the only relics of its former grandeur being a few fragments round the edges. And on William Risam's monument there is a mark which tradition has always attributed to a musket ball aimed at the benefactor's effigy by one of "Cromwell's soldiers."

To return to General Laugharne and Colonel Poyer. After the disastrous fight at St. Fagan's they retreated to Pembroke and prepared for the mighty adversary who was slowly advancing to try conclusions. Oliver Cromwell appeared before Pembroke about the 24th of May. Tradition relates that he formed his camp on the hill to the south of the town, near Underdown. (Pistol and musket balls have been found on the site) The General himself, who was suffering from an attack of gout, took up his quarters with Mr. Walter Cuney at Welston, a house which stood to the north-east (in Carew Parish) of Lamphey, and was pulled down early in 1800's. Fenton states that in his time there was "A quilted counterpane white lined with crimson that covered Cromwell's bed, still in the possession of a lady, a descendant of that house (Cuney), stained with ink spilled as he was writing one of his despatches during his confinement" (from gout).

Cromwell expected that by the time he reached Pembroke a battery of siege guns from Wallingford would have awaited his orders in Milford Haven, but through an accident at Berkeley the vessel in which they were shipped seems to have foundered, and as westerly gales prevailed, when the guns had been recovered it was impossible to deliver them in Pembroke until the beginning of July. The besiegers would have been checkmated had it not happened that the Lion, a Parliamentary warship, came into Milford Haven.

Cromwell forthwith despatched the notorious Hugh Peters, who had accompanied the expedition, to see what guns could be spared from the Lion; two culverins (18 pounders), two demi.culverins, and two drakes were obtained from this source. The first operation essayed by the besiegers was an attempt to storm the town one day about the 4th of June, but the scaling ladders were too short. A few men were lost Major Grigg's lieutenant and ensign among them, Captain Flower of Dean's regiment was injured, and Captain Burgess wounded and very sick; but Cromwell consoled himself in his confidence that the enemy had lost many more.

On the 9th of June Cromwell wrote to the committee at Carmarthen :

"Desiring we may have your furtherance and assistance in procuring some necessaries to be cast in the iron furnaces in your county of Carmarthen, which will the better enable us to reduce the town and castle of Pembroke. The principal things are: shells for our mortar piece, the depth of them we desire may be 14 inches That which I desire at your hands is to cause the service to be performed, and that with all possible expedition; that so if it be the will of God, the service being done, these poor wasted counties may be freed from the burden of the Army. In the next place we desire some D cannon shot and some culverin shot may with all possibility be cast for us and hasted to us also"

On the 13th Cromwell had planted two little guns with which he calculated he should take away their mills in twenty-four hours. The mills were probably those at the bottom of the Dark Lane, and the guns must have been placed on the other side of the water. The loss of these mills would prove very important to the besieged, who began to suffer greatly from famine; indeed the hungry garrison were already mutinous, saying: "Shall we be ruined for two or three men's pleasure; better it were to throw them over the wall," This occurred on Sunday. On Saturday night Poyer had told the mutineers if relief did not arrive on Monday they might hang him. No doubt Colonel Poyer remembered how closely he had been pressed by the Royalists in 1644, and how triumphantly he had been relieved by Swanley's fleet; he was in hourly expectation that Prince Charles and Lord Jermyn would send the squadron to his aid. On one occasion, the besieged garrison believed that the Royalist fleet had actually arrived, for guns were heard down the Haven. It turned out; however, to be the Parliamentary fleet firing a salute on account of good news from Kent, Pembroke was not victualled for a siege. This had not entered into Poyer's calculations. There were probably in Pembroke Castle only surplus stores such as had remained unconsumed when Fleming was forced to raise the siege. These, originally intended for the castle garrison, proved quite insufficient now Poyer had to feed the town as well. At the very beginning of the siege we find fodder was so scarce that horses and cows were fed on thatch stripped from the cottages. On the 14th of June the mutinous garrison was put on reduced rations: half-a-pound of beef and half a pound of bread per day to each man. The civilians in the town doubtless were very hardly pressed. Tradition avers the town and castle relied on two wells for their supply of water: one called Norgan's, in Monkton; the other in the Woogan under Pembroke Castle. Earthenware pipes three-and-a-half inches in diameter had been laid in cement from Norgan's well, nearly a mile distant, passing over the bridge, up the face of the cliff under an archway in the Monkton tower of the castle. According to tradition this pipe was pointed out to the besiegers by a man named Edmunds, and cut through where it passed over the bridge. Edmunds' cottage was still pointed out in Monkton village in the 1890's, and his descendants bore the nickname of "Cromwell" in remembrance of the treason of their ancestor, until they became extinct a hundred years ago. Tradition says also that Edmund was killed by the Cromwellian soldiers and buried in the hole dug to cut the pipe. Part of the pipe is in Tenby Museum and another part used to be in the wall of the old school in Monkton. Concerning the Woogan well, Cromwell writes: "We can take away his water in two days by beating down a staircase, which goes into a cellar where he hath a well.

Mr. Cobb has pointed out that the staircase leading to the Woogan was not beaten down, and there can be little doubt that the besieged had an uninterrupted access to this well. On the night of the 13th Cromwell got two small guns to bear on the Pembroke flour mills and set on fire certain houses in the town.

On the 19th the besieged were sore pressed by famine, and Poyer tried to keep up the spirit of the soldiery (who now despaired of relief from Prince Charles) by assuring them that Major-General Langdale was marching to their assistance with an army of North Welshmen, and would be at Pembroke before the week went by.

Cromwell's guns had breached the wall, and about the 19th date another storming party was told off. These made an attempt to gain the town, but were repulsed, twenty-three being slain, Poyer's men only losing four. By this time General Laugharne had recovered of his wounds received at St. Fagans and determined on sallying forth, probably with the hope of obtaining food. He does not appear to have been very successful, and was driven back with a loss of nine killed and twenty prisoners. Oliver Cromwell candidly acknowledges:

"Here is as I have formerly acquainted your Excellency (Fairfax) a very desperate enemy, who being put out of all hope of mercy, are resolved to endure the uttermost, being very many gentlemen of quality, and men thoroughly resolved, they have made some notable sallies upon Lieutenant-Colonel Reade's quarter, to his loss. We are forced to keep divers posts or else they would have relief or their horse break away. Our foot about them are 2400; we always necessitated to have some in garrison. The country since we sat down before this place have made two or three insurrections, and are ready to do it every day, so that what with looking to them and disposing of our horse to that end, and to get us in provision, without which we should starve, the country being so miserably exhausted and so poor, and we no money to buy victuals, indeed whatever may be thought it is a mercy we have been able to keep our men together in the midst of such necessity, the sustenance of the foot for the most part being but bread and water."

About the beginning of July a storming party managed to get into the town and drove the besieged up to the castle walls, killing about one hundred of them. But Laugharne with a troop of horse outflanked the intruders, and getting on their rear cut them up, killing thirty and driving the rest over the breach. In this fight Colonel Horton again distinguished himself

The siege battery had at last arrived, and the fire on the town became consequently distressing. Many desertions took place and a mutinous spirit again broke out, one hundred and twenty of Poyer's men laying down their arms, vowing they would fight no more but the Colonel quelled the unrest, he and Laugharne promising if relief did not come days they might hang their leaders. "The mortar pieces played hard against the town and battered down many houses, killing some thirty of the inhabitants, for though they could affect little or no damage on the castle, the cottages yielded to the small projectiles

. The besiegers feared Laugharne; Poyer and such troops as they could rely on would remove all provision to the castle, retire fortress and allow the townsmen to surrender

Sir

, -I have together with my Council of War renewed my propositions,

I thought fit to you with these alterations, which if submitted unto I shall make good. I have considered your condition and my own duty, and (without threatening) must tell you that if (for the sake of some) this offer be refused and thereby misery and ruin befall the poor soldiers and people with you, I know where to charge the blood you spil

I expect your answer within these two hours. In case this offer be refused, send no more to me about this subject

July 10 at 4 o'clock this afternoon, 1648.

I rest your servant,

The besieged took a night to think over Oliver's letter, and on the next day surrendered the town and castle on the following conditions :-

1. That Major-General Laugharne, Colonel Poyer, Colonel Humphrey Mathews, Captain William Bowen and David Poyer do surrender themselves to the mercy of the Parliament.
 2. That Sir Charles Kemeys, Sir Henry Stradling Lieutenant-Colonel Laugharne, Lieutenant-Colonel Brabason, Mr. Gamage, Major Butler, Major Francis Lewis, Major Mathews, Major Hamick Captain Roach, Captain Jones, Captain Hugh Bowen, Captain Thomas Watts and Lieutenant Young do within six weeks next following depart the kingdom, and not to return within two years from the time of their departure.
 3. That all officers and gentlemen not before named shall have free liberty to go to their several habitations, and there live quietly submitting to the authority of Parliament.
 - 4.. That all private soldiers shall have passes to go to their several houses without being stripped or having any violence done to them ; all the sick and wounded were to be carefully provided for till able to go home,
 5. That the townsmen shall be free from plunder and violence, and enjoy their liberties as heretofore they have done, having freedom to remove themselves and families whither they shall think fit &c.
 6. That the town and castle of Pembroke, with all the arms, ammunition and ordnance, together with the victuals and provisions for the garrison be forthwith delivered unto Lieutenant-General Cromwell, or such as he shall appoint, for the use of the Parliament.
- .Signed by
- Oliver Cromwell. David Poyer.

In a letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, written immediately after the surrender,

Oliver Cromwell explains the first clause in the articles of surrender:

“The persons excepted are such as have formerly served you in a very good cause; but being now apostatized I did rather make election of them than of those who had always been for the King judging their iniquity double, because they have sinned against so much light, and against so many evidences of Divine Providence, going along with and prospering a just cause, in the management of which they themselves had a share.”

Thus ended Pembroke siege. The defenders had fought with dogged desperation, and had they not been deserted by the Royalist party it seems possible Cromwell himself might have been baffled by their tactics. We can see Poyer standing on the old donjon looking away to the westward with despairing eyes, keeping watch in vain for the Royalist squadron that never came. Arnulph de Montgomery's stronghold was impregnable in the 17th century, as it had proved in the 12th; famine alone opened its gates, for Cromwell's shot and shell glanced from the old limestone walls like hailstones; in the town his projectiles did much damage, but proved impotent when applied to the castle masonry. Very many cannon balls fired from Royalist and 'Parliamentarian' guns have been collected in Pembroke, Tenby, Carew and Lamphey, and an interesting series of these projectiles will be found in the Tenby Local Museum. The weight of these shot is as follows: 321lb., 181lb., 91lb.; 61lb., 31lb., 21lb. They are all of solid cast iron,

Laws said that "There are preserved in Pembroke and at Lamphey Court some curious stone shot the size of eighteen pounders, though of course weighing much less; these were no doubt makeshifts when the ammunition ran short"

. The Pembroke specimens were found by Mr. Cobb within the castle walls; those at Lamphey were discovered on the top of the hill three-quarters of a mile from the Old Court, at a farm-house known as "Old Windsor," and are doubtless relics of one of the uprisings noted by Cromwell.

In the Tenby Museum will be found also a very curious gun (Both the breech and muzzle are lost. It seems to have carried a 9lb. shot, and is built up of iron pieces, banded together by eight rings. At the breech it has been strengthened by a flap, which was welded on to the gun. It is on an oak carriage nine feet four inches in length. Such was the ordnance used and the castles certainly beat the guns; very few, if any, of these were taken except by storm or famine.

. The castles having proved so formidable, Cromwell decided on their destruction. Roger Lort, John Lort and Thomas Barlow were formed into a committee for this purpose. Cromwell himself perhaps undertook the destruction of Pembroke, the roof of its vaulted Barbican tower has been split in by gunpowder, and this must have been accomplished subsequently to the surrender of the fortress

It would be curious to know what work the committee of demolition performed. Not very much at Haverfordwest or Pembroke; nothing at Carew or Narberth; the former being inhabited in 1689, the latter in 1676; or Picton, which never lost its roof. Manorbier was already a ruin. Perhaps Lamphey suffered. Tenby Castle was the principal victim; though it is by no means improbable the smaller fortifications such as Newport, Roche and Benton were more or less destroyed under this commission, the inhabitants finding that the demolition of the unoffending castles was cheaper than the raising of Pembroke and Haverfordwest.

It was probably on Sunday, July the 16th, that Oliver Cromwell invited the Rev. Peregrine Phillips, Vicar of Monkton, St. Mary's (Pembroke), and Cosheston, to preach before the officers under his command. Phillips must have been well known to most of them, for notwithstanding the inconveniences of the siege he preferred to reside in his parish of Monkton rather than in the comparatively peaceful Cosheston. Peregrine Phillips was the son of that Vicar of Amroth who declined to read the Book of Sports, and suffered accordingly; probably in consequence of the father's firmness the son found friends. Sir Hugh Owen had given him the preferment of Monkton; Roger Lort that of St. Mary's, Pembroke; and he obtained Cosheston through the interest of Sir John Meyrick. He had been chosen one of the committee to inquire into the conduct of ministers; but all this availed him nothing during the siege, for the hungry Parliamentary troopers searched his house so diligently that he was obliged to secrete his scanty stock of flour in the bolster of his bed. Yet Phillips stood to his post, and with him remained a certain plucky servant-maid who was in the habit of milking the parson's cow, caring nought for the storm of shot and shell which hurtled overhead. A gable end in the village of Monkton marked the site of Phillips' old vicarage.

By Monday, the 17th, Cromwell must have pretty well accomplished his work, the hostile troops were disbanded, the fortifications sentenced to destruction, and the prisoners despatched to their various destinations. He left Colonel Horton, the victor of St. Fagans and the captor of Tenby, in command of the district, with his (Horton's) regiment of horse, a troop of dragoons, and two companies out of Colonel Pride's and Colonel Deane's regiments, 1648 .August 13.

Colonel Thomas Horton To George Beavan.

You are to repair with the party of Captain Bowlton's dragoons to St. Davids in Pembrocksheere and with their assistance to bring from thence to Carmarthen 3000 weight of lead. You are to quarter where you think it most convenient, going and coming in the hundreds of Narbarth, Dewysland and Roose. And if the chief constables of the said hundreds be negligent in providing you horses for the carriage of the lead, you shall quarter your whole party upon that constable that you shall find faulty until he conforms to what is expected. And this shall be you: warrant for your thus doing. Haverfordwest Corporation MS. 261.

1648 December 13. Tenbye.

Colonel Thomas Horton To The Soldiers Under His Command .

Whereas I have been informed that divers soldiers both dragoons and foot under my command within this county of Pembrock have by disorderly carriage and misbehaviour in their quarters forced their landlords to quarter them in inns and alehouses, the dragoons at 3s. 6d. per diem and the foot at 1s. per diem, as well for the punishment of the said offence as the prevention of the same and others for the future I do declare that if any soldier or soldiers have or shall commit the said offence or any other contrary to the articles of war, upon complaint made unto the chief officer unto whose troop or company such soldier or soldiers do belong and proof thereof made by examination of witnesses upon oath or confession of the party before the next justice of the peace in the presence of the said chief officer and transmitted to the governor of Tenbye (whither the offender is by the said chief officer likewise to be sent in custody), the party offended shall have due reparation and the offender undergo the judgement of a court martial. And that where any inhabitant charged with quartering of soldiers shall not upon examination by the said chief officer be found to have fit accommodation to quarter any soldier or soldiers in his dwelling house, that then such inhabitant do agree with the soldier in the presence of the chief officer at such reasonable rates as that the soldier may be able to provide himself quarters and the landlords not exacted upon and oppressed by an unreasonable charge exceeding the pay of such soldiers.

Laugharne, Poyer and Powell were sent up to the Tower, from whence they seem to have been removed to Windsor Castle Their trial was postponed until the following spring, when Laugharne, Poyer and Powell were found guilty by a court-martial and sentenced to death. This seems to have been a somewhat unexpected conclusion. The exiled King (Charles I I.) threatened reprisals, and Poyer, who was evidently astonished, on April 16, 1649, presented a humble petition to Parliament which declared that "He was one of the first that appeared in armies in South Wales against the Common Enemy for the defence of his own and the people's best liberties ; and being Mayor of the towne of Pembrock and captayn of the trayned band did freely and of his own accord fortifie the Castle of Pembrock, which was then his own habitation" and kept the same against the King's forces, and did for the space of five years several other good services~ but that being wrongly proclaimed Traitor, he did, for his owne securitie and for the securifie of those who were with him and for no other end, keepe the said Castle, which was surrendered to Lieut. General Cromwell, upon articles of mercy, which could not be mercy in taking away his life."

But it was felt that public security demanded a victim. Laugharne, Poyer and Powell were bidden to cast lots for life. The actual drawing was done by a child. There were three lots. On two was written, " Life given of God," the third was a blank; this fell to Colonel Poyer, who was duly shot in the Piazza, Covent Garden, on April 21st 1649.

David Poyer's daughter married one Nash, a Swansea glass manufacturer, and by him became mother of a son Richard, afterwards known as Beau Nash, "King" of Bath.

General Laugharne in due time returned to his home

Powell too escaped and founded a family

Lieutenant-Colonel Laugharne passed over to Ireland, In the spring of 1650 he again fell into Oliver's hands at the taking of Cahir, and "was shot to death."

The fate of Colonel Humphrey Matthews gave rise to some discussion, He was released on paying composition, a decision Cromwell in no ways approved.

Sir Charles Kemeys of Cefn Mabley, besides his two years' exile, was fined

Colonel Thomas Stradling forfeited fined

.Miles Button escaped with a small fine

War effected a great change in West Wales. The district was exhausted; the towns of Pembroke and Tenby were so utterly ruined that henceforth they ceased to have any political influence The former remains a seventeenth century fossil, in much the same condition as on the morning John Poyer rode through its street to meet his doom in Covent garden. Tenby gradually became ruinous; but in course of time, thanks to tourism now enjoys some prosperity as a resort, but commercial and military Tenby has disappeared for ever

1839 Acc to Lewis

The livings of the three parishes of St Mary, St Michael and St Nicholas are consolidated into one discharged vicarage, rated in the kings books at £9 viz £4 for St Michael's and £5 for the living of Monkton of St Nicholas, St Mary's not being in charge; patron and impropiator, Sir John Owen, Bart.

The tithes of St Mary's parish have been commuted for £187 10s payable to the impropiator and £162 10s to the vicar; the tithes of St Michael for £162 10s payable to the impropiator and a similar sum to the vicar; and the tithes of Monkton for £300 to the impropiator and £175 to the vicar. Pembroke St Mary Parish of Pembroke

according to Tanner Notitia Monastica 1744 Hospital St Mary's Pembroke in existence in 1535 St Mary's late 12c or early 13c with two 13c windows still visible in south wall

Before the restoration the interior of the church was described as being filled with wretched dilapidated pens, miscalled pews and the walls daubed over with unsightly colour washes. Some of the windows were of the sash type.

1839 Acc to Lewis

The church dedicated to St Mary is an ancient and venerable structure, in the Norman style, situated near the centre of the town, and composed of a nave, chancel, and northern aisle, with a small chapel on the southern side: in the north aisle and in the chancel are doorways, now closed up, which communicated with additional buildings no longer standing.

1922 RCAM

The present building dates from the latter half of the 13th century and may have been erected simultaneously with the walls around the newly laid out town of Pembroke. But there may have existed an earlier church of St Mary, for it seems probable that the growing importance of the town as the principal port of departure for Ireland would soon require a rearrangement of the ecclesiastical facilities within the castle, and this might have been met by the building of a church affording increased accommodation and shelter from external foes by the shelter of the Gateway tower. In 1880 the then vicar told members of the Cambrian Archaeological Association that "the south wall of the nave would appear to be late Norman as under the plaster are two windows, one of which is round headed and the other is cut off by a later inserted window" (Arch Camb IV,xi,333). The north aisle, which has a plain vault, is divided from the nave by an arcade of four bays of plain pointed arches devoid of mouldings. All the windows are modern. The font is probably of the late Norman period. On the north side of the chancel arch is a much weathered elaborately carved stone panel 24 in by 36 in which may have been part of a late Decorated tomb. Visited 10th May 1922

Today you enter the Church through the modern porch erected in 1926 as a memorial to the Rev Hayward Phillips,

The South wall is one of the original walls of the Church. Under its plaster is hidden two Norman windows one of which is round headed but the top of the other was destroyed by the insertion of a later window. When the church was replastered in 1879 the architect Mr Pearson ordered that the windows be indicated and a line was drawn around the west one.

The doorway to what is known as the choir vestry is the original entrance to the church. On its outer side is some early English moulding similar to that over the entrance to Monkton Priory and to one of the doorways in St David's Cathedral. Above the doorway is a niche, which would have originally contained a statue of the Virgin Mary, but which now contains a tablet to a former benefactor of St Mary's Church.

The North Aisle - the arcade of pillars which separates the nave from the north aisle was made from the original wall of the Church in about 1350 when the tower was built. The north aisle with its pointed vaulting, so typical of Pembrokeshire church architecture of this period, has modern windows which feature St David, William Marshall and Henry Tudor.

The font is a square bowl supported by a cylindrical stem with cable moulding and is reputed to be Norman but records from the time of the restoration show that it is actually a modern copy of the one at Lamphey. There is no documentary evidence to support the claim that Henry VII was baptised here. At the east end of the North Aisle are the memorials to the Adams Family of Paterchurch and Holyland

One of these is especially interesting. It is a piece of carved alabaster it appears to have been deliberately defaced and from its weathered appearance discarded. In 1610 William Adams died aged 8 years 5 weeks and 2 days and the old panel was reused as a memorial to him and was set with its carved face hidden into the plaster of the wall. It was rediscovered at the 1879 restoration and is exhibited as it is now. I had thought that this might have come from a burial at Paterchurch - but the burial site was being used by the Adams family long after 1610

1731--St Marys register states --Jan ye 11 buried ye sonne ,Roger, of Mr Williams Adames in their own Burying Ground.

It is made of Buxton alabastine and dates from between 1475 and 1482 and was the side panels of a tomb. It would appear that the angels depicted were only carved in that form between those dates. The tomb must have been of a person of the rank somewhere between Baron and Earl or their widow and was presumably destroyed at the reformation.

The recess high on this east wall would have housed a galley similar to that which can still be seen at Manorbier. The blocked doorway can still be seen in the ringing chamber of the tower

The Lady Chapel, has an interesting 17c memorial It seems that the first lines of this fanciful verse refer to the fact that there was a thunderstorm coinciding with a high tide which brought flooding on the day of the funeral

The Pulpit was given to the church by Col M J Saurin

The modern Chancel arch replaces a narrow opening over which stood a rood screen and a loft. The corbelled structure over the organ probably supported another gallery there is a blocked doorway to this also in the ringing chamber..

Behind the Altar the Reredos depicting Christ in Majesty, is designed by J L Pearson who supervised the renovation work of 1879.

Above it the great east Window is one of the best examples of C E Kempe. There are another seven Kempe windows in the Church with his trademark (a Wheatsheaf) on them. There is also one in St John's Church Pembroke Dock.

On the north side of the altar is yet another blocked doorway, which led out to a lean-to building at the base of the tower which once served as a vestry. On the south side of the altar, above the niche which once held a piscina, is a small vaulted recess of unknown purpose. It could have been a reliquary but nobody is able to give a satisfactory explanation of its origin. In the sanctuary stands a beautiful carved chair representing St Peters denial

Above the organ rises the tower described by Victorian ecclesiologist Professor Freeman as "among the most remarkable towers of Pembrokeshire.... conspicuous for its massiveness, which gives it a more military effect than any of the others" It contains a ring of 8 bells, the earliest dating from 1763. The newer two were added in 1897 to commemorate Queen Victoria's Jubilee

Among the sacramental vessels is a chalice of great historical importance. It was presented to the parish in 1645 by Col. John Poyer, governor of the town and castle. He was one of the leaders of those who held the town and castle against Cromwell and died by firing squad in Covent Garden There is another modern one given by Sir Fredrick Meyrick and a replica of that found in Bishop de Carew's Tomb (1256?) given by Mr A G O Mathias

The reopening of the church took place on 1st May 1882 by the archdeacon of St David's after the nave had been re roofed and the seating was replaced between then and 1889. In 1889 funds were raised which with that already donated by Miss Bowling were used to install an organ. Miss Bowling also paid for the three lancet windows in the north aisle

Prior to the restoration displayed in the church were two charity boards.
they read :-

St Ann's Church

RCAM 840

Of this small chapel to the parish church of St Mary there remained in Fenton's day "scarce a memorial" (Tours 373) and at the present time those few vestiges have completely disappeared. It is therefore, pleasant to be able to identify the site with almost certainty by aid of the French plan of Pembroke, which shows the church in the year 1650, as existing, though perhaps deserted.

Pembroke St Michael's

[This Church is now closed and up for disposal]

St Michaels, which dates from the later 13c, there is a suggestion that the initial settlement of Pembroke begun by Arnulf de Montgomery in the 1090s was subsequently enlarged with an eastward extension of the earlier defences. This view is strengthened by the presence of two medieval market places within the borough, one by St Mary's Church which would correspond to the Norman commercial centre, and another at the eastern end of the peninsular near the East Gate which would have served the inhabitants of the larger late medieval town

The original church would have appeared to have been a cross church with a long nave and small transepts; drawings on maps would suggest that it has a centre tower. This was pulled down in 1835 and a new building erected on the original site described by Professor Babbington in 1880 as "the ugliest structure I have ever seen" the windows were of the sash type and parts of the North wall were original with the tower being retained at the North East angle which would indicate that the South side was completely rebuilt and the original Chancel removed.

Acc to Lewis "The Church dedicated to St Michael has been rebuilt almost from the ground, in the late English style of architecture, the expenses being defrayed by a parochial rate; it will accommodate about 1000 persons and the number of free sittings is 400".

This structure was pulled down in 1887 and the church as we see it today built.

Designed by Mr E H Lingen Barker of Hereford it was built by Mr Henry Edwards of Milford at a cost £1800. Bath stone was used for the arches, columns and pulpit. Only the base of the tower and parts of the north wall were recorded at the time as being of the original Church.

The Chancel stained Glass window was given by Mrs Bryant and cost £160 it was made by Cox and Sons London; she also gave the Eagle lectern.

The floor of the chancel is covered with ornamental encaustic tiles from Messrs Webb, Worcester. The organ was installed in 1888 made by Wade, previous to that, in the old Church, a harmonium had been used played by a Miss Aird who went to live in Ireland before the new Church was completed. The new organist was Mr T Jones.

The choir stalls and desks are made of pitch pine and the carving was done by Herridge of Cardiff. The roof is covered with slated from the quarry of Mr George L Griffiths in North Pembrokeshire

St Michaels mentioned as being in the possession of Pembroke Priory in 1291

In 1291 this church was assessed at £10 for tenths to the King, the sum payable being £1.—Taxatio. Vicaria Sancti Michaelis de Moncketon.—Vicaria ibidem ex collacione dicti prioris [William Waren Prior de Moncketon] unde David Vachan est vicarius habens parvam mansionem sine gleba et valet vicaria in al-tilegiis communibus annis £4. Inde decima 8s.—Valor Eccl.

On 12 June, 1886, a faculty was granted for the restoration of the parish church.

The vicarage of St. Michael was from 1770 till 5 Dec, 1872, united with the benefices of St. Mary and St. Nicholas, Pembroke, and was separated from those livings by an Order in Council on the latter date.

Acc/to the 1851 census of religious buildings

350 +100 scholars attended church in the morning and 350 in the evening

Collections averaged 14 shilling in 1883 and the meetings of the Temperance society every fortnight in the Sunday School room attracted an attendance of over 180.

1922 RCAM

Though both Speed's and the French plan of the town make it clear that there existed within the town walls in the year 1650 a church dedicated to St Michael, the present edifice belongs wholly to the early 19th century. It was restored in 1886.

1922 RCAM

According to Fenton (Tours 373) "St Michael's had a subordinate chapel, or as in a Ms now in my possession, I find it called a hospital, or hospitium, dedicated to St Mary Magdalene, a little to the eastward of the church, without the town walls; and like every other establishment of that sort placed near the roadside. The site is now known by the name of Marlan's chapel"

There are no remains now visible above the soil – Visited 10th May 1922

St Daniels Church – Booklet I wrote in 1992

Chapter 1 The Church of St Daniel's Pembroke

St Daniel's Could ring a knell
When Pembroke was a furzy dell

So says an old rhyme told me by a very old lady who heard it from her grandmother. I wonder how old that rhyme is, because though Pembroke is 900 years old, the Church of St Daniel, as it is known today, although the real name should be St Deiniol, could well be centuries earlier.

The lonely Church stands on the skyline to the south of Pembroke, with a tower and spire standing proud amidst the electricity pylons.

That the Church has dominated this skyline since before the Norman's is suggested by the description of the Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments which leads one to believe that this is the original Church of the Welsh District of Pembrokeshire.

In more recent times the spire of Church has been used by Lieutenant Colonel William Mudge and Captain Thomas Colby as one of the main inland trigonometric points for the first Ordnance Survey Map of the area, which was published on the 16th February 1818. The Church appears on all the early maps of the area (the earliest being 1580) as well as on the French artist's (or was it spy) drawing of the town and castle in 1650 but it would appear that he took poetic licence with regard to the exact position (RCAM p287).

The Church and the hill on which it stands have long been referred to by writers as St Daniel's and local legend has always credited the site as being that of the original hermitage of the Saint, a place of pilgrimage and the earliest Church in the district.

The present Church is a single chambered building 64.5 feet long by 16.5 ft wide and has the high pitched vaulted roof so often found in the earliest churches of Dyfed. The tower and spire are evidently later, possibly added on in the early 14 century and have been largely repaired as a result of being struck by lightning. It would seem to be one of a line of such church towers stretching along the spine of the Castlemartin peninsular constructed at about the same time as some of the strengthening of the Pembroke Castle fortifications.

In the north wall can be seen the traces of a low side window. This it is suggested, was pierced after the construction of St Mary's Church Pembroke, to enable the Mass bell of St Mary's down in the valley to be heard by the congregation of St Deniol's (RCAM visited 10th May 1922)

The present interior is very plain, with white washed walls rising in a curve to the apex of the roof. The present interior floor, of even blocks is lower than the ground outside and it is necessary to go down steps when entering the church. The only doorway is situated on the north side.

There is no artificial light or heating, and today most of the windows, which have been inserted at later dates than the original building, have been covered because of vandalism. The church therefore still, like it has been all its life probably, is lit by candles. The floor is very uneven, consisting of bricks many of which are loose and at the west end there is a low doorway leading into the tower. This tower had, at one time several floors and the holes where the timber joists entered the walls are still visible. It also has a fireplace. The church was restored in 1849, and again in 1890. The tower was struck by lightning in 1896 and needed repair but on inspecting the interior it is plainly evident because of the continuity of the stonework that it most certainly was never rebuilt and such repairs as there was could not have been major.

The one memorial plaque, in the church, is to Ernald Somerset Birkett, and reads:-

...in memory of Ernald Somerset Birkett 13 years Church Warden of St Mary's Parish his friends dedicate this tablet

During his wardenship the old choir stalls from St Mary's were removed to this church and Chancel renovated

C Hayward Vicar

Date Dec. 20 1910

Legend also has it that there was, at one time, a Holy Well near the Church but that the well and site were destroyed when there was a purge ordered, in July 1592, against all places within the county of Pembroke where in times past there have been pilgrimages, images or offerings. The order authorised that all using those places of pilgrimage should be apprehended and punished for their disobedience and lewd behaviour, the sites were to be defaced so that no memory remained of them.

[I went over the area with dowsing rods but the only reaction I got was inside the base of the church tower at the south east corner]

Chapter 2 Who was St Deiniol

St Deiniol it is believed , was the son of Dunawd fab Pabo Post Prydyn. Dunawd was, according to an early poem, a very brave warrior, who never retreated in battle and whose family originated from around the Clyde Forth area. They were a cadet branch of the royal line of Coel Hen.

By Deiniol's time the family had roots in north Wales and there appears to be some mystery about the Saint's connection with Pembrokeshire but one theory is that, like so many other young men of the time, he went to attend a school which had been founded in the Vale of Glamorgan by St Illtud around 490 AD.

St Illtud was described by St Samson, one of his pupils, as "of all Britons, best skilled in Holy Scripture, both the Old Testament and the New, as well as in every kind of learning; in divination he was well proven and he had fore-knowledge of the future". Gildas, also a pupil at the school, called him " the refined master of almost all Britain" both Illtud and Dyfrig used Caldy Island, off the Pembrokeshire coast near Tenby , as a place of retreat. Deiniol may well have followed their example in choosing a place in Pembrokeshire as a quiet place for prayer and meditation before embarking on his mission, setting up a hermitage on a hill to the south of where Pembroke now stands and spending some time there before travelling up the coast till he eventually arrived and established a church at a site where now stands his cathedral at Bangor

Legend says that he was ordained in 516AD and it is believed that he became Bishop of Bangor before 547 AD as he was given land for his Church by Maelgwn, king of Gwynedd who died as a result of the epidemic of Yellow Plague which swept through the country in that year._.

St Deiniol was present at the Synod of Brefi in 545/6 AD and is mentioned in the "Life of St David" by Rhigyfarch .

He was buried in 584 AD (according to Annales Cambriae) on Bardsey Island but the date of this chronicle is regarded by some as suspect and another date is given as 572 AD. His death could well have occurred earlier though with his remains being conveyed to the religious settlement on that island some time after.

Chapter 3 “Legenda novem lectionum de Sancto Daniele Episcopo Bangoriensi

Peniarth MS 225 written by Thomas Wiliems in 1602 contains the lections and collect for St Daniel's feast day (September 11th) There is a note that the copy was made in 1602 "ex libro manuscripto antiquo" It is believed that the text was actually used liturgically and as the copy was made at Trefriw in the diocese of Bangor, that the source was the breviary used at the cathedral.

(The National Library of Wales has recently purchased a service book (1993), published in Venice in 1494, with hand-written additions of prayers to St Deiniol plus the only known remains of the Dwyntwen mass. The date (according to Dr Enid Roberts) suggests the influence of Richard Kyffin Dean of Bangor and rector of Llanddwyn)

First Lesson

God who is wonderful in his saints and glorious in majesty, willing that his saints should be esteemed glorious and be worthily and laudably venerated by Christ's faithful people does not cease himself to adorn them in wonderful wise with miracles beyond count; among whom our Lord chose the most blessed Daniel, bishop and confessor, adorned with the grace of holiness and notable by his various miracles, as a pastor of his holy church; and (though) we are altogether unable to relate all the miracles which the same Saviour vouchsafed to work by the merits of the aforesaid Saint Daniel yet some of them we have considered should be made known to your devotion.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Second Lesson

So blessed Daniel, sprung from the noble stock of the Welsh, when he was of full age, having left his native region, desiring to lead the hermit and solitary life to which the better part is promised and, what is more, shall not be taken away, came to a certain mountain, which is now named "Daniel's Mount" near Pembroke in the diocese of Mynyw; considering that that place, because it was remote from the tumult of men was serviceable and suitable for gathering the fruits of divine contemplation, he determined to stay, if God permitted, on that same mountain serving his Lord without interruption.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Third Lesson

The lord of the place, receiving him kindly, granted him so much of his land as he judged would be necessary for him for his daily support, together with animals and servants useful for agriculture, but having been built as his home, in the place where now a church of wondrous beauty and size has been constructed to honour and in the name of the same saint who continued most devoutly to serve almighty God the Creator in fastings, in prayers and other works of piety.

But thou O Lord Have mercy upon us.

Fourth Lesson

In the process of time, the cathedral church of Bangor being vacant by the death of its bishop, those to whom in the said church the election or provision of a bishop pertained having met together, and the grace of the Holy Spirit having been invoked, it as divinely revealed that they should send at once to the Pembroke district, and should choose as bishop and pastor for their church a certain hermit, dwelling on a mountain on the southern side of Pembroke, and it was added that he was called Daniel.

But thou O Lord, have mercy upon us.

Fifth Lesson

They immediately sent messengers to the aforesaid district. When they came, the messengers found the hermit himself in that very place which we have already mentioned, and the messengers, having first greeted him asked him, " what is thy name?" He on his part answered humbly "I am called Daniel, but am no prophet". Then the messengers, rejoicing with great joy, related in order the reason of their journey and arrival. But he wondering to a degree beyond belief said, " How can this be, that you claim that I am chosen as bishop, when I am almost wholly unlearned, nor have I any knowledge of letters" They answered him and said "It is God's will that so it should be" He , therefore, overcome by their urging, and wishing to submit to the divine call, leaving all he possessed, followed them in the name of the Saviour until they came to the entrance of the city of Bangor.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Sixth Lesson

And straightway all the bells of the city were rung without human hand. But when they who were in the city heard the sound of the bells, having gone into the church and found no one ringing the bells they said one to another, " It is a miracle which the Lord has worked", and immediately , lo the messengers, together with Daniel, already stood at the portals of the church. Then the clergy of that church accompanying the same Daniel to the high altar of the church and singing most devoutly „Te Deum laudamus praised the mercy of the Saviour. And when St Daniel arose from his prayer, he was so filled with ecclesiastical knowledge of all learning that no one in Wales was then seen like to him in knowledge and culture.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Seventh Lesson

After the due intervals of time, having been duly advanced to all the minor and major orders, he is honourably consecrated bishop, and is enthroned to the greatest delight also of the people. So, adorned with the Episcopal mitre, he showed himself as loveable to God and to all men. But it would take too long to relate the miracles which the Lord vouchsafed to work through his merits, both while he lived and after his departure, for they were very many.

On a certain night, while this holy man was dwelling on the mountain of Pembroke, two evilly disposed men came thither to steal the oxen which had been lent to the holy man for ploughing his land, and, having seized the oxen they began to lead them away. The holy man however, hearing from his lodgings the noise of men and animals, saw through a window the thieves leading away the oxen, and , going out, he cried, "Wait, wait a little in the name of the lord". But they, when they heard his voice, ran the faster, and St Daniel, having made the sign of the cross towards the oxen, lest he who provided them should suffer loss through his praiseworthy act, straightway the thieves were turned into two stones on this very spot, like unto men standing unto this day. But the animals were turned back to their accustomed pastures.

But thou, O Lord have mercy upon us.

Eighth Lesson

Another time, however, when the holy man could not find animals with which to plough his land, behold there came forth from the wood of Pencoe, which was close by, two great stags to the place where the land needing to be ploughed was situated, and, bending their necks to the yoke, they drew the plough all day like tame beasts, and, when the day's work was done, they returned to the aforesaid wood.

But thou, O Lord have mercy upon us.

Ninth Lesson

Moreover, at a certain time the holy man set forth for Jerusalem on a devout pilgrimage. Having gone over the places of the Lord's Nativity and Passion, and having visited the sepulchre in which the Saviour's body had rested, he came to the River Jordan, consecrated by Christ's baptism, and he filled a certain vessel from that water, and brought it with him all the way to the top of the mountain near Pembroke, on which his dwelling place had been built, where there was a great scarcity of water. Having invoked the name of Christ, he thrust in his staff and poured forth the water which he had brought from the Holy Land upon the earth, and straightway the staff grew into a most beautiful tree, and a well of the sweetest water sprang up there, apt for the cure of various sicknesses, if taken as a drink.

Again a certain woman from the district of Caerw(Carew), in the diocese of Mynyw, was so swollen beyond measure that she could find no relief by any advice of physicians. At last, coming to the church of St Daniel, and afterwards to the aforementioned well, and imploring the saint's help, she drank of that water so as to regain health and, before leaving came to the entrance of the Church, and cast forth from her mouth, while many stood by and observed, three horrible worms, each with four feet, and the woman was made whole from that very hour.

Moreover, the wife of a certain man from the region of Oxford who had long been blind, having been admonished in dreams through St Daniel, indeed by divine revelation, when she had been brought to the said church of St Daniel, spent the night there in devout prayers, together with a certain blind chaplain and many others, and both of them received their sight that same night, through the merits of the same Confessor, by the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, with God the Father and the Holy Spirit, liveth and reigneth God world without end.

Amen.

But thou O Lord have mercy upon us.

Collect of the Same Saint

O God who didst will the blessed bishop Daniel to be pastor of thy church: mercifully grant, that we who put our trust in his benefits may, by his prayers, obtain the glory of eternal bliss.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord, who God the Father and the Holy Spirit. liveth and reigneth God world without end.

Amen

Chapter 4 History of the Church up to the 1700's

There is little recorded history of the Church for centuries after the founding of Pembroke by the Normans. No records appear in the Episcopal Registers of the Diocese of St David's, neither is it mentioned in the list of churches recorded by Giraldus Cambrensis nor on the list of Churches who made payment to Pembroke Priory in 1377 (see Appendix 1)

It was not seized as part of the Pembroke Priory possessions in 1414 although it seems to have been transferred with them to the Monastery of St Albans because there is, dated 1480, an entry in the Wallingford Registry (see Appendix 2) regarding that monastery ,which might refer to it if there was a clerical error, to the effect that the Abbot had granted to the Mayor and Burgesses of Tenby leave to nominate two chaplains in the parish church of Crowneweare, with the donation of the hermitage of St David's near Pembroke (There appears to be no record of a hermitage of St David's)

In 1484 king Richard III granted to the Mayor and Burgesses of Tenby, and their successors "the hermitage of St Daniel's, the lands, obligations and emoluments, the proceeds of which are to be applied for the relief of the poor. To be used for no other purpose than a hermitage" _

The Chapel is recorded in Valor. Eccl (1534) as being a free Chapel with John Griffiths as the cleric. (Libera Capella Sancti Danielis juxta Pembr. Libera capella ibidem ex donacione prioris Pembr unde Johannes Griffith clericus est magister et custos et habet ibidem unam parvan mansionem sive placeam et duas acras terre que valent per annum 8s Et valet in visitacione fractum at sororum ibidem annuatim secundum estimacionem al & c, 10s. Inde decima 12d).

There is also a record dated 1547 referring to John Griffiths

" The parish of Saynt Marie in Pembroke. There is within the said parish one messuage, one garden and iiij acres of land belonging to the fre chappell of Saynt Danyell, which was taken away from the same by one John Griffith, priest and now (in) the tenor (tenure) of Elynor Rowe. the value whereof by yere X s.

By 1551 (23 Dec.Late Chantries) the chapel and the land belonging to it, had been leased by the Crown to William Warren

From this time onward the Chapel remained in private hands, the patronage remaining local, a donative not requiring institution by the Bishop though in his nominal control.

The building must have, even after passing into private hands, been regarded as of some importance as it appears on the early maps and is referred to by writers of the period.

George Owen writing in 1603 mentions the Chapel

"In auncient tymes you shall fynde that the roofes of dyverse churches and Chapells were all vaulted over and that of great height, whereof dyverse are yet standinge as St Danyels chappell by Pembroke"._

It would appear however that the Church was little used for a century later Erasmus Saunders records

" Of the manner how our Churches are supplied and served:

and upon this head it is to be observed that there are some churches that are totally neglected, and that very rarely, if at all, have any Services performed in them, and which, if they are not converted to barns or stables, which is the case of many Churches in England as well as Wales, do only serve for the solitary Habitation of Owles and Jackdaws: such are St Daniel's, Castelhan, Kylvawyr, Mounon Cahpel Cohan and others in Pembrokeshire."

Chapter 5 A Non-Conformist Church

Soon after 1700 there appears to have been a great shortage of clergy residing in the area. Many are recorded as holding multiple livings and some did not even reside in the Diocese of St David's. At one time during this period the Vicar of St Mary's Pembroke was living in Stoke and the curate of Hodgeston, a Mr Hughes, was taking the services for that combined parish which at that time not only consisted of St Mary's but also St Michael's Pembroke, St Nicholas Monition which was partly a ruin, and St Daniel's.

The Rev. Howell Davies, who became Moderator of the Calvinists in Pembrokeshire, described as a meek and mild man but a very persuasive preacher, was, in 1742, using and restoring unused Churches and Chapels in Pembrokeshire.

In his book on the religious revival in South Wales_ W Gambol records

"Soon Davies had the grant of some parish churches and chapels in this county, though this not for any affection for the work of God but because Mr Davies served them gladly gratis"

St Daniel's became one of his chief preaching locations and he is also recorded as administering Communion there. When Davies Died, in 1770, on his tomb stone, at Prendergast, are inscribed the names of four of the churches that he restored. St Daniel's is recorded as being one of the four.

By 1768 Bacon's Liber Regis was describing St Daniel's as a Methodist Chapel.

John Wesley had visited and preached in Pembroke in 1763 but when he visited in 1764 and was invited by the Vicar of St Mary's to preach in that church, the Mayor objected and forbade Wesley to preach (something that he had no authority to do). Subsequently, according to Wesley's diaries, it would appear that Wesley had problems finding a place to preach in the town of Pembroke although he does not appear to have encountered such opposition in Haverfordwest.

In August 1768 Wesley records in his diaries

"1768 August 6th Saturday

"I went to Pembroke. We were here several times before we had any place in Haverfordwest, but we have reason to fear lest the first become last"

1768 August 7th Sunday

"I took a good deal of pains to compose the little misunderstandings which have much obstructed the work of God. At ten I read prayers, preached and administered the sacrament to a serious congregation at St Daniel's. And the next morning left the people full of good desires and in tolerable good humour with each other.

There must have still been problems for Wesley with regard to preaching in Pembroke for in 1772 (January 11th) the following notice appeared in the Bristol Journal

"The Rev John Wesley AM Chaplain to the Countess Dowager of Buchan is preferred to the perpetual advowson of St Daniel's near Pembroke, by John Barnes, Keeper of His Majesty's Stores."

The Gentlemen Magazine of the same date records among its list of ecclesiastical preferment's:-

"The Rev John Wesley AM: St Daniel's near Pembroke"

As the Church of St Daniel's was in private patronage it made it very difficult for those who objected to Wesley's preaching to stop him both preaching and holding communion services at St Daniel's.

He continued to hold services there right up until his last visit to the area in August 1790 when his diary records the following entry for Sunday 15th “St Daniel’s prayer, Acts XI, 36 meditation, Communion”.

The Church must have continued in use by his followers after Wesley’s death for Fenton writing in 1810_ describes the Church as:-

“a respectable building with stone tower and spire, yet long desecrated, and now become a Methodist conventicler” but it was no longer used by them in 1830.

In that year, although the Church was owned by Mr George Bowling, the lease was held by a Mr Joseph Prothero. He rented St Daniel’s Church to Rev B Thomas, and Mr David Jones for use as a Baptist meeting house at an annual rent of £3.

The first Service was held on Whit Monday 1831. The interior of the Church was described by the Rev William Walters on that day:-

“As one stood in the old fashioned pulpit, the Communion table was behind, and over it, on the centre, a large painting as an altar pieces. On either side were the tables of the law and belief. The congregation was generally good, gathered from the villages south west.”

A Baptist Church was constitutionally formed there on September 17th 1832 and Mr John Roberts was ordained minister, but fourteen years later the congregations had dwindled and services were discontinued.

The Church was still claimed by the Church of England and the Rev R C Roberts expressed surprise that the Baptists had been allowed to use one of the oldest places of worship in the county for divine services.

In 1849 St Daniel’s Chapel was purchased from Mr W Bowling and Mrs Bowling by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for £275.

Since that date it has mainly functioned as a mortuary chapel with the only regular service being on September 11th - St Deiniol’s Feast day.

Dreadful accident and loss of lives at Pembroke Dock.

The town of Pembroke was, on Monday evening last, the scene of one of the most alarming accidents which have occurred here for many years past. From the particulars which have been ascertained it appears that about six o'clock in the evening a party consisting of women and lads and children about 14 in number, were returning from a hay-field in Lamphey Lane in a waggonette drawn by one horse. The horse and vehicle were the property of Mrs Truscott of the White Hart Inn and when they had arrived nearly opposite the Dragon Hotel the belly band gave way and the horse began to kick. This so alarmed the women and children that they began to scream and y this means so frightened the animal that it took off at a furious pace down towards the Lion Hotel and from there up by the Old Castle. Here P.C. Davies (No 24) attempted to stop the animal but was unable to do so and also got much hurt in the attempt, the shaft having struck him in the side. From thence the animal continued its career over the steep and sinuous Westgate Hill and eventually struck the vehicle against the old parapet wall of the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel when both horse and vehicle got turned completely over.

In this terrible crash a young woman about 17 years of age named Dorcas Ann Truscott, a daughter of Mr W H Truscott of the " Red White and Blue" Inn Quay Pembroke was killed on the spot, while her younger sister, named Olwin Lavinia, age 14 years received a frightful scalp wound, sustained such other serious injuries that she is not expected to survive. Ann Moy, a widow , about 60 years of age - so dreadfully injured that her death is momentarily expected. A lad named John Haran (who was driving the horse at the time) and his sister - both seriously injured. A woman named Elizabeth Williams - much injured. Lettice James, a woman who jumped out before the vehicle was turned over, very seriously injured. The whole of the other occupants including an infant in arms, are more or less injured. Dr. H P Jones and Dr Reid were at once in attendance and rendered all the medical assistance they could

NB. The Truscotts came to the area in 1820's from Cornwall and had a reputation as smugglers -- one member of the family ages about 12 was shot by a Revenue man while escaping from a boat in Pennar Gut.

Dr Ried; when he died in the 1920's he was the last surviving medical officer of the Crimean War

Chapels

Baptists Mount Pleasant

The Baptists were the last of the four principal Nonconformist denominations who entered this ancient town for the purpose of establishing a religious cause, Among its pioneers were, Thomas Saunders, who was afterwards a deacon of the church for fifty years ; and George Brown who also served for a long period as deacon of the same Church. These, with a few other loyal Baptists, hired a small room adjoining the entrance to St. Michael's Church, and opened it for Divine service in April, 1831, G. Devereaux, (Pembroke Dock).acted as first minister. To him, the Church was greatly indebted for the untiring interest and fostering care which he exercised preaching to that little flock every Sunday afternoon, until his death in 1833. The gradually increasing congregation necessitated more extensive premises, and the building formerly used by the Wesleyans was secured. A Church, composed of twenty members was duly formed on April 1st, 1833, and Mr. Henry Williams, a member of Llangloftan Baptist Church, was ordained its first pastor. There was also at this time another Baptist Cause in St Daniel's Church but services were discontinued there in 1846

Services continued in the old Wesleyan Chapel until 1859, when due to the increase in congregations a new chapel capable of holding 320 members was built this proved to be inadequate and the present chapel was built in 1878 capable of holding 600 with 2 schoolrooms, class rooms and a vestry. The debt of £2500 was paid off by 1888

Independents Tabanacle Chapel

Original Cause began in 1691 but because of the neglect of the minister of Albany Haverfordwest after 1743 the congregations dwindled greatly but was revived again in the early 1800's believed that they originally met in the house behind York Tavern. A chapel was built in 1812 and in 1867. During the period 1802-1843 over 500 people were received as members but unfortunately the records are missing.

Primitive Methodists Castle Back.

Between 1823 and 1830 a society was formed which used a room fitted out as a preaching room at Castle Back. Records for this chapel exist from 1847 to 1902 (PCRO)

Calvanistic Methodist Westgate

The first chapel originally called Bethel was built in 1826 with the later Chapel being built in 1867. The cause owes its origins to the preaching of the founders of Methodism at St Daniels and the cause moved from there into the town before 1810. In 1845 there were 66 members.

Wesleyan Methodists Wesley Square Chapel

There was a movement here formed in 1763. John Wesley personally held the living and took services at St Daniel's and a chapel was erected in the town in 1790 with a second, much larger one being built in 1822.. Membership in 1818 was around 46. This chapel was finally closed for worship in 1982 and is now an antique shop although funds have recently been allocated to restore it.

Houses in the area

Alleston

In 1382 it was known as Aylwardiston, which developed into the present form. During the first half of the 17th century it was the home of the Webb family, and in 1640 was held by the brothers Thomas, Richard and Alexander Webb. The original owner was Sir John Carew of Crowcombe Court, Somerset, and in 1605 Edward Webb agreed to surrender a lease on the property to Sir John, but with the right to occupy it till 1608, to preserve deer in the park, to kill two bucks, and to leave '400 sheep with 40 other cattle' to Sir John. Thereafter it was owned by various families such as Davies and Poyer, and in 1904 by the Owens of Withybush, and let to farming tenants.

Bush

In Hasgurd Church, near Milford Haven, is the tomb of Katharine, daughter of Owen Barrett of Gellyswick, who married Dr. Rowland Meyrick J Bishop of Bangor, and died 1593, leaving four sons and two daughters, of whom the eldest, Sir Gilly Meyrick, Knt. (probably named after the ancestor who named Gellyswick), was a sufferer for his faithful adherence to the unfortunate Earl of Essex, Elizabeth's discarded favourite; they were boys together and firm friends through life, sharing the fate of the Scaffold on Tower Hill in 1601. It was from Sir Gilly that the Meyricks of Fleet, near Pembroke, were descended, who took so active a part in Cromwell's siege of that place in 1648; and also the Meyricks of Bush, near Pembroke, the later seat of the family. The original stock of the Meyrick family is of Bodorgan, Anglesey,

Thomas Meyrick of Bush, Sheriff in 1828, married Jane, great-granddaughter of Brown Willis, the antiquary. Their only daughter, Jane Sophia, married St. John Chinerton Charlton, Esq., of Apley Castle, Salop. Thomas, second son of St. John and Sophia, inherited Bush, and took the name of Meyrick; on his elder brother's death he inherited Apley also; he was created Baronet in 1880. On 8 January 1866 the Bush mansion burned down but most of the valuables and portraits were saved. The mansion was rebuilt in 1906. It later became part of the old Grammer school and then a nursing home. The site is said to be haunted by Judge John Meyrick who died in 1732

Golden. Pembroke St. Mary's.

North-east of the town, across the river from the town. From 1603 to 1825 the Cuny family were associated with Golden and for short periods lived at Lamphey, Welston, and Pembroke. The Cuns came from Staffordshire, the first to come to Pembroke being Walter Cuny, whose son and heir, Richard, signed his pedigree for Dwnn in 1613. Some eight generations of the family remained in the county for two and a quarter centuries; seemingly the last in the male line was the Reverend John Powell Cuny, rector of St. Brides who died unmarried in 1820-25. On Colby's map of 1831 are marked Golden Hill and adjacent Golden Farm.

Grove. Just south of Pembroke town.

In the late 17th century Grove became the seat of the Lloyds, descended from the ancient family of Lloyd of Morfil, Cilciffeth and Cilgelywen. After Thomas Lloyd married Frances daughter of Hugh Philipps of Eastington, he settled at Grove as his main seat. He was High Sheriff in 1700, and died not long afterwards, being succeeded by his son and heir, also named Thomas Lloyd. The second Thomas served as High Sheriff in 1709, and died in 1711. His widow Mary then married Morgan Davies of Cwm, Carms., and enjoyed Grove until Mary died in 1752, aged 70. Thomas Lloyd left daughters and co-heiresses, one of whom, Elizabeth Lloyd married in 1725 Sir William Owen, 4th Baronet of Orierton. Fenton wrote in 1811 "Grove as well as Morfil, in consequence of the late Sir William Owen becoming entitled to a share of this property by his marriage with one of the co-heiresses, and having purchased the shares of the others, form part of the vast possessions of Orierton."

Grove thus passed to the Owen family who abandoned it as a residence, and it became a farm. By 1786, Sir Hugh Owen, the then owner had let the property to three tenants.

Underdown.

Near Pembroke.

In the 16th century this was home of the Voyle family. In 1788 Captain Charles Tyler, R.N. lived here with his wife Margaret, daughter of Abraham Leach of Pembroke with their large family. He ended up being Admiral Sir Charles Tyler of Cotterell, Glamorganshire, and died in 1835. Colonel Owen Lowless was living here in 1977 but sold it in the following year to Mr. James Barrett who turned it into a private hotel.

1837 Poor Law Union

The Poor Law Union of which Pembroke was the head was formed on January 6th 1837 and comprised twenty nine parishes and townships including St Mary's and St Michael's Pembroke, Monkton, Angle Boshaston, Burton, Carew, Castlemartin, Cosheston, St Florence, Gumfreston, Hodgoston, Lamphey, Lawrenny, Llanstadwell, Manorbeer, Nash, Penally, St Petrox, Pwllcrochan, Redberth, Rhoscrowther, Rhosemarket, Stackpole Elidur, St Mary Tenby (in Liberty and out Liberty), St Twinnel's Upton and Warren. It was under the superintendence of thirty five guardians and the are contained a population of 19,671

Education

Grammar School

In 1690 Griffith Dawes "in consideration that a good grammar school was to be kept by some able person of the Protestant religion professed by the church of England in the town of Pembroke for ever thereafter for the education of youth and the encouragement of such schoolmaster" granted a rent charge of 20s a year on a certain house. On the same consideration Rev Morgan Davies (or Davids) of Cosheston gave money to produce 40s a year. Sir Hugh Owen gave 50s a year and the corporation gave the toll of corn. The school was held in the Shire Hall for 130 years approx. Pembroke grammar school ceased to exist in 1820 when the Shire Hall burned down

1839 according to Lewis

A grammar school founded here in 1690 has an endowment of £11 3 4d per annum arising from various bequests of rent charges by Sir Hugh Owen, Bart. Morgan Davies and Griffith Dawes, and from a sum in lieu of the corn -toll granted to the master of the corporation at an earlier period. No school is now kept as the Shire Hall in which it was held, was pulled down in 1820; but a master is still appointed by the mayor and council.

1847 Pembroke – State of Education in Wales

An account of the free grammar-school is given in C.C. R., p. 669. Under the present arrangement so small an endowment as £11. 3s.4d. is utterly useless. It might possibly applied with advantage either to increase the master's stipend in a primary school, or as an exhibition for a pupil-teacher. The borough extends into the parishes of St. Michael's on the east, St. Mary's on the north and Monkton or St. Nicholas on the south and west. Pater or Pembroke dock is made a .district out of St. Mary's parish.

At the time of my visit the only school of public institution in the borough of .Pembroke for the poor was the National school hereafter reported. A British school was being talked of, and a committee has been formed. At a public meeting, recently held, the sum of £2000 been promised to be paid by instalments of an equal amount during the ensue 5 years. In the address of the committee it is stated, as ascertained by a canvas from house to house in Pembroke and its immediate neighbourhood, that there were upwards of 500 children without even a nominal education. In these canvasses, however, children of all ages are included under 15, and Sunday-schools are not taken into account. The Rev. Mr. Davies, Independent minister of Golden, near Pembroke, considered that in and about Pembroke there was a general carelessness on the subject of education, and that, as regards religious knowledge, the people were inferior to those in the Welsh districts. 'The Sunday-schools are fewer, and worse attended. This inferiority mould particularly apply to that part of Pembroke and its vicinity which lies in Monkton parish to the south and west. The range of the good day-schools at Stackpool and Warren (cf. these parishes in Castlemartin hundred,) hardly extends as far as, this district: but the eastern side is, to some extent, within distance of the school at Lamphey, and the northern within that at Pater. The superiority of these day-schools compensates for the absence of Sunday-schools.

The condition of the population improves in proportion as they come within the influence of the dockyard. Pater exhibits all the symptoms of a thriving and active place. Besides the National school there, I found a large British schoolroom nearly completed. In the opinion of one of the promoters of the latter school, there was still a vast mass of children in Pater not receiving daily instruction. Supposing primary education to be established in Pater upon a sufficiently wide and satisfactory basis, the promotion offered by the dockyard school for apprentices is admirably calculated to maintain and raise its standard. It might well be worthwhile considering how far some local and officially recognised connection might be established between the two the prevalent and popular feeling, at the time of my visit, was, that apprenticeships were obtained by political interest. I had some conversation with the master of the Apprentices' school, apparently a most intelligent man. He said that it was difficult to realize, except by experience, the backwardness or rather utter absence of secular education in Wales. He found his own exertions, as head of a secondary school, in considerable measure crippled by it. The vocabulary and ideas of the great majority who came to him were limited to such as expressed nothing beyond a few religious notions and the immediate objects of the sphere in which they had moved. The style of the Scriptures, their only reading-book, did not enable them to read with intelligence the most ordinary work upon subject of common information. Such was the experience of a man who was coming into daily contact with what are rather the elite of the Welsh labouring classes in an English-speaking part of the country.

Union Workhouse School.

I visited this school on the 16th of December. The master had at one time been a soldier, and his whole regime and phraseology were of a military character. I was introduced to the school by Captain Leach, the Vice Chairman of the Board. As soon as the schoolmaster had been apprised of our object he tolled a great bell, and when the summons had been answered by the appearance of a boy or two in the yard, called out lustily, "Come, turn out there-fall in." This was very readily done. "To the right-face-march". Each boy in passing gave a military salute. One of the file had neither shoe nor stocking; scarcely any of them had stockings. There was a deep snow on the ground thawing at the time.

The schoolroom is well lighted and ventilated, boarded, and in excellent repair. Everything about it was very neat and clean. Along one side was a line of desks and opposite to them a stove with a good fire of culm. By the door there was a cupboard for books on the left hand and a small square table for the master on the right. He appeared a very respectable old man, kind and intelligent, with a good-natured sharpness of manner, such as children would soon understand and be kept alert by, without being cowed or frightened. He gave the order, "Fall in with your Testaments." I heard 19 children read to him the 14th chapter of St. Matthew. He paid great attention to them and corrected any mistakes made, except desert for desert, which he did not notice. He then put questions. He spoke clearly and distinctly. The children for the most part answered. The master then gave the children a word apiece to spell from the passage read; most of them spelt correctly. A boy pointed out to me the river Jordan, Jerusalem, and the Dead Sea (after a little puzzling) on the map of Palestine, which hung upon the walls.

The master then took the boys and gave them a lesson in arithmetic. They wrote down correctly in figures from his dictation three thousand four hundred and twenty-five, they added, rapidly and correctly. His best pupil then worked £ 61 14s. 2d. x 34 in a very clear and steady manner without making a mistake, under my inspection. Only 3 of the 19 children in the first class had been in any other day-school. The matron instructs the girls in sewing. I heard from Captain Leach that the old master takes great delight in drilling his boys, and that they are tolerably expert in manoeuvring. At the time of my visit the snow had choked up the boys' yard, and so spoilt his parade-ground. The effects of discipline appear to have been good both on master and pupils. I was much pleased with the school.

William Jones's School.

This school is kept in a back room of the master's dwelling house. It is in good repair, but ill lighted. The furniture consisted of one square table, three long desks seven benches, and two chairs, but no map or print of any description. The master appeared to be an intelligent man. Most of the scholars are tradesmen's mechanics', and (a few of them) labourers' children. Few were present owing to the snow. The sixth chapter of St. John's Gospel was read tolerably well, but the master said that he is not in the habit of questioning them on what they read.

In arithmetic they set down 600, 6,000, 60,000, 600,000, 6,000,600, and 600,600,600,
 $6 \times 6 = 36$; $8 \times 8 = 64$; $5 \times 6 = 30$; $7 \times 7 = 49$; $5 \times 12 = 60$; $5 \times 9 = 45$; $4 \times 12 = 48$;

The copy-books were tolerably well written.

Mrs. Streets School:

This school is held in the dame's kitchen, which is kept very clean, and the house and furniture are in good repair. The room contained three benches, five chairs, and four tables, with various articles for domestic use, but no cards, prints, nor maps of any kind. The mistress said that she had first set up a school to support her family in her husband's illness, and had kept it on ever since. Her scholars are mechanics' and tradesmen's children, but few of them were present owing to the snow.

Questions proposed by the mistress on the chapter read (the 2nd of St. Matthew) correct answers were given but did not know why Christians keep the first day of the week holy- Nothing~ beyond reading and sewing are taught in this school.

National School.

I visited this school on the 15th of December during a deep snow.

Until within the last 4 years it used to be held for boys and girls separately, under a master and mistress; 100 boys and an equal number of girls attended. By the falling off, however, of subscriptions, in 1842, the two schools had to be reduced to one.

The present master's wife receives £51. a-year for teaching the girls sewing.

The building contains the master's house and two large and commodious school-rooms. The upper one only is now used for a day-school; the lower one was formerly the girls' school-room. The girls' Sunday school is now held in it. I found only 10 children present. The master heard 6 of them read the 2nd chapter of Genesis, and questioned them from that chapter: they answered correctly. Spelling performed as a separate lesson. I heard him give them a sum in subtraction in class. The children worked the sum viva voce, each one performing a single step of the subtraction. He appeared to me to have a good method of teaching, and to avoid anything like slurring. The writing was fair. The out-buildings were fully sufficient and in tolerable repair. One part was said to belong to the boys and another to the girls, but there was no actual separation.

Mr. William Abram's School:

This school is kept in a room of the master's dwelling- a house, which is in tolerably good repair, except parts of the floor and walls. It contained 9 benches and 1 table, with some of the arithmetical tables of the Infant School Society hanging on the walls. They are in verse, and are sung occasionally by the scholars. The master was in school himself until he was 9 years of age, and learnt spelling and reading well. At this time he was afflicted with a fever which deprived him totally of the use of his eyes. Shortly afterwards he learnt the trade of weaving sedge-mats, by which trade, and by playing musical instruments at weddings and in public-houses, he got his livelihood. About 10 years ago some benevolent gentlemen bought for him the Elementary Book for the Blind, Liturgy for the Blind, the Psalms, and the Four Gospels (all published in Glasgow). He soon learnt to read by the embossed characters, and his neighbours recommended him to open a school, which is well attended. At first he taught the alphabet by the embossed characters to his pupils, but as soon as a sufficient number had learnt to spell and read, he made these act as monitors for the alphabet classes, and confined himself to the classes in spelling and reading. Spelling is taught simultaneously by him in this manner:-

he directs one of the best scholars to give out a word, which is spelt at first by one pupil, then he and all the rest spell it together and so on with a column or page, giving the meaning of the word also after it is spelt correctly. He appears to be a shrewd man, and possesses a retentive memory. His wife assists him in school. Most of his scholars are labourers' and mechanics' and (a few of them) tradesmen's children. The inclement state of the weather permitted very few to attend. The master said his object was to teach spelling and reading to his scholars, and that he does not ask them many questions on any subject. Before leaving the school the master read parts of the 7th and 8th chapters of St. John, very correctly. He could also turn to any chapter. He cannot write, and does not profess to teach anything beyond spelling and reading.

Mrs Thomas's School.

This school is kept in the ground-floor of a dwelling-house, which is in good repair.

The furniture consisted of one settle, six chairs, five benches, and five tables, and other articles for domestic use. The mistress teaches only reading, writing, and needle work.

Most of her scholars are labourers' children, and few only of them were present, owing to the inclement state of the weather. '

The 17th chapter of St. John's Gospel was read, but not well, except by one.

The mistress said they were not accustomed to be questioned on what they read. They could answer no questions on what they had read.

The copy-books were not well written.

Mr. George Wogan's School

A room on the first floor in the master's dwelling-house is the schoolroom. There was a fireplace there, but no fire.

The furniture consisted of two square tables, two chairs, six benches, many of them broken, and supported with stones. The master is an old sailor, and does not profess to teach anything beyond reading and writing. His scholars were labourers' children; I observed two of them without stockings, and one bare footed. The 15th chapter of St. Luke was read, exceedingly well by several,

The copy-books were ill written.

Church Sunday School.

On the 20th of December I visited the above school. It was held in the National schoolroom, and conducted chiefly by Miss Phillips, the Vicar's daughter and other ladies of Pembroke. There were present at the time of my visit 60 girls. One class was composed of girls from the ages of twelve to seventeen inclusive, and was reading the book of Job. They all read with ease, and the questions put by the teacher were readily answered. Another class was reading the 8th chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel—they all read very well.

Another class was reading the 13th chapter of St. John's Gospel: some of them could read very well. There were two other classes reading the Testament. Indeed, these could hardly be called reading-classes, for it was very little better than spelling. The teachers of both these classes told me that they did not question them much upon what they read, their object being chiefly to teach them to read, so as to be enabled to join the higher classes, to which they were promoted according to their proficiency.

I also observed a group of little girls reading the Third Class-book of the Sunday-school Union.

Wesleyan Sunday School.

-On the 20th of December I visited the above school. It was held in the chapel, which was a large and convenient building. The children attending the school were all under 15 years of age. The number present at the time of my visit was 26 males and 23 females, out of which 16 were reading elementary books. I went round the different reading-classes: all the children read very fairly. The superintendent told me that the reason of there being so small a number present was that a great many of them had gone to the funeral of one who had been a leading man in the chapel.

Haggars Cinema

Strange name for a cinema you might think but “Haggar” is a family name and the founder of the family fortunes was William Haggar born in 1851 in Dedham Vale in Essex. He was to become one of the pioneers of the British Film Industry and following an early apprenticeship as a ship-wright and already an accomplished amateur musician he fell in love with a young actress, Sarah Walton, married her in 1871, joined a company of strolling players and so embarked upon a theatrical career.

Sarah’s family had been theatricals as long as anyone could remember and she was reputed to be capable of playing any of the women’s parts in Shakespeare without rehearsal. She trained her new husband as a comic actor and during the years that followed they traveled throughout Great Britain playing in portable and permanent theatres, and, in their spare time, producing a family of eleven children, all of whom were reared to the stage.

They first came into Wales in 1890 via Chepstow and loading their theatre on to horse-drawn wagons they followed an itinerary through the coal valleys and down into the agricultural counties of West Wales, visiting Pembroke for the first time in 1893. The travelling theatre was a familiar feature of Victorian life and brought a welcome dash of excitement, colour and entertainment to the lives of the small towns and villages of the Principality with its repertoire of variety, song and the popular melodramas of the day such as, “Maria Marten and the Red Barn” “East Lynne”, “The Dumb Man of Manchester” and “The Maid of Cefn Ydfa”.

William Haggar became an accomplished photographer and supplemented his income by taking portraits and framing them. In 1896 when the theatre was standing near the new docks being built at Port Talbot he visited Cardiff to view an exhibition of moving pictures staged by the pioneer, Birt Acres. The experience galvanized Haggar into action, it was as though he instinctively sensed the future of this new invention. He purchased a projector and a small collection of films and after experimenting with this unfamiliar and dangerous equipment he built a small ground-booth christened, “The Windsor Castle Theatre” and attempted to bring this revolutionary form of entertainment to the public at large. The children formed a band to play outside and provided sound effects with a kettle drum but the venture was not an immediate success. The people would not come in, they had no idea what moving pictures were. In desperation Hagggar gave a free show and this ploy changed his fortunes; the crowds flocked in and at the end of business on his first night as he counted out £20.00 in pennies he looked up at his son and said sagely. "I knew there was money' in it".

Hagggar handed the live theatre over to his eldest son, William (Jr), and set out to make his living with his new Bioscope as it was called at the time. Business, however, was not as good as expected. In 1899 Wales was in the grip of a coal strike and times were hard for the people of the valleys. The competition was fierce, he had led the way but other showmen followed and set up their own shows. Furthermore, the actuality films he showed were crude, simple and repetitive; they were what the showmen called "oncercs", the public would pay to see them, but only once. Hagggar realised that something more sophisticated was required.

In 1900 he visited the offices of the Bromhead brothers of Gaumont in London and bought himself a camera and five hundred feet of film. He was about to embark on a new career as a film producer. He possessed certain unique assets: he was a skilled photographer, he owned props, costumes, scripts, and had a company of actors trained from the cradle; most important of all he had spent a lifetime in the theatre, he was a man of the people, a showman, he knew what the public wanted and he set out to give it to them.

His first film was of a train arriving at and leaving Burry Port Station and he followed this with several short films including a film of the Boer War shot in the Rhymney Valley; his version of a battle in the Russo-Japanese War, which was reputed to have been shown in Japan purporting to be genuine footage; a phantom ride taken on the Mumbles Railway in Swansea and a chase film "Patrick pinches Poultry". In the summer of 1901 he made a film of the old Welsh melodrama "The Maid of Cefn Ydfa" starring Will Hagggar Jr and his wife Jenny. It was shot on stage in seven short scenes and ran for fifteen minutes. This was one of the first fictional story films ever produced and it literally made William Hagggar 's fortune, on the first night it was shown at Swansea Fair it took £40.00, in the parlance of the industry it was "sensational". In 1902 at Maesteg Hagggar made a chase film, "The Poachers" which sold 350 copies and was shown throughout Europe and the United States. Critics now affirm the family's belief that this was the seminal "chase" film and was the precursor of the great Hollywood "chase" films which followed in the subsequent decades.

In 1904 in Pembroke Dock with his sons Walter and Jim and daughters Lily and Violet in the leading roles, William made the film "The life and Death of Charles Peace", the story of a Victorian desperado and now one of the oldest extant story films . Many of the Hagggar films were filmed in the Pembrokeshire countryside including a film of the landing of the French at Fishguard shot in Llangwm using the fisher-ladies as the women of Fishguard; a thriller "Message from the Sea" was filmed in Milford Haven; a crime drama filmed at St. Catherine's Bridge near Haverfordwest, a comedy at Neyland and "The Bathers Revenge" on the Western Cleddau. Between 1900 and 1912 Hagggar made sixty films including melodramas, comedies and series. His films were remarkable for their structure, action and the innovative quality of his camera work. He can quite legitimately be regarded as one of the founding fathers of the film industry.

These films brought prosperity to the Hagggar family and the early home built Bioscope was replaced by a purpose built organ front of French manufacture, resplendent in gold leaf with mechanical figures and illuminated by hundreds of coloured electric bulbs, these structures were the pride of the late Victorian steam fairs up until 1914.

The Hagggar family stood with their Bioscope outside the Wesleyan Chapel in Pembroke from 1901 to 1914. By then, however, the travelling Bioscope was already being replaced by permanent cinemas in all the larger towns and it was superseded by the industry it had pioneered. The Hagggar family were to establish theatres at Llanelli, Aberdare, Mountain Ash, Merthyr and later at Pembroke, Pembroke Dock, Fordingbridge and Lyndhurst in Hampshire, Hayle and Delabole in Cornwall, Winchcombe in Gloucester and Arundel in Surrey.

The first permanent cinema in Pembroke was situated on the North Quay in Ford's Yard opposite the castle. It was not a permanent structure but a grounded Bioscope belonging to Gideon Roberts and his wife Sarah nee Ford whose daughter Ada had married William Haggar's son Walter. They stayed there through 1914 and 1915 providing their own electricity with their portable steam traction engine. More permanent was the cinema established in the 1920's in the old Drill Hall and Assembly Rooms, later the site of Haggar's cinema by the Rees-Phillips family.

The Assembly Rooms had been built in the 1860's as a centre for the social activities of the town and during its life-time has served a variety of purposes including a drill-hall and shooting range for the 4th Battalion Welsh Regiment (volunteers), the headquarters of the British Legion whilst above was the ballroom and a masonic temple. The ballroom was an elegant structure, the dimensions of which were the same as the Pump Room in Bath with much moulded plaster-work, gold leaf, tall elegant pilasters crowned by coats of arms and vast ornate gold framed mirrors. It provided an appropriate venue for the social activities of the gentry who kept their town-houses in Pembroke and the aspiring middle class.

In the 1930's William Haggar (Jr), his wife Jenny Lindon and their family moved to Pembroke following the destruction by fire of their cinema in Pontardulais. They rented the ground floor of the Assembly Rooms from the Rees-Philips and established a cinema naming it in the family tradition "Haggars". William and Jenny had spent the best years of their lives on the stage and were beloved by audiences throughout Wales. It was inevitable that their cinema should also offer live theatre. They presented many of the melodramas which had been the stock in trade of their theatrical career and it was said that when they presented Haggar 's second version of the "Maid of Cefn Ydfa", which was silent, they would stand behind the screen and provide the dialogue to the spectral figures before them. At the end of the show the family would line up at the exit of the cinema and wish their patrons "Goodnight".

William Haggar (Jr) was a fine man and an impressive actor in the Victorian tradition, he possessed a resonant voice dressed immaculately in tie, tails, red lined cape, homburg and silver headed cane. He and his family contributed a great deal to the cultural life of Pembroke at the time and gave unstinting support to the amateur dramatic and operatic groups in the area.

On William's death in 1937 the cinema was run for a short time by his brother Walter and was then acquired by William Haggar's grandson Leonard in 1939. A young man, ambitious with a strong sense of the history and tradition of the family Leonard was able to purchase the property and set about its modernisation. He opened up the front, building a new entrance and canopy so that it now looked like a real cinema. The auditorium was redesigned and redecorated and the cinema was reopened promptly to be closed again, albeit temporarily, victim of the outbreak of war.

Leonard could not have restored the cinema at a more propitious time. Pembroke and Pembroke Dock had suffered grievously during the years of the depression following the closure of the Royal Naval Dockyard in 1926; the tourist industry was in its infancy and agriculture was in a depressed state. The war revived the military and naval pride of the area and with Milford Haven vital to the national effort in the Battle of the Atlantic the dockyards were once again vibrant with activity. The flying-boat squadrons were reinforced in Pembroke Dock, airfields were constructed throughout Pembrokeshire, troops were stationed in the Castle and the old Mill and servicemen of all arms and from every corner of the world were posted into the county. The centre of entertainment in Pembroke was Haggar 's with the latest Hollywood and British films, and on many Sundays a church or service concert, was staged, memorable occasions, which gave the opportunity to local people and servicemen to reveal their talent. The "lovers" seats in the back row were invariably booked by the Sunderland crews and their favourite film which they demanded and got was," Goofy

After the war "Haggars" prospered in what was to prove the hey-day of the cinema industry. The Ballroom was restored and became, once again, the centre of social life in Pembroke and a restaurant was opened. There are many older couples in the area now who in their salad days met at the Saturday night dance in the Ballroom and celebrated their wedding at Haggars.

As the years pass, however, public tastes changed and the coming of television heralded the decline of the cinema. "Haggars" lasted longer than most but eventually it had to succumb to market forces and the cinema was closed. The name lives on, however, and the building is still referred to as "Haggars" by those with memories. "Haggars" certainly played a part in the history of Pembroke in the 20th century and its connections with the family and William Haggar (Snr.) also link it directly to the history of the British Film Industry.

Burley Roger 1486, 10 November

Acts before the reverend father Hugh aforesaid in his manor of Lantfey of the diocese of St Davids had and begun on 10 November in the year as above and continued day by day in a Pembroke cause of an error or heretical pravity against one Sir Roger Burley of Ireland then present For which Sir Roger indeed the same reverend father - because Sir Roger himself as the said father asserted on the relation of faithfulmen had been and is notoriously and in manifold ways defamed with him and evidently and on probable conjectures suspected of and upon divers errors, opinions, and articles savoring of heresy met expressly contrary to the determination of holy mother church by himself Sir Roger held and publicly spoken and preached, as was said - peremptorily fixed, appointed, and assigned a day on Saturday next after the feast of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary next then following namely 9 December then next, to appear before the same reverend father in the chapel of the Blessed Virgin Mary situated within the said manor of Lantfey to answer upon such errors, opinions, and articles, as is aforesaid, then to be objected against him to the mere correction of his soul, of the mere office of the said reverend father and also on information, and further to do and receive in that behalf what shall be just, there being then present there Master Gely Richard Canon of Abergwilly college, and William, prior of Pill, with other discreet men besides who were there When indeed the Saturday abovesaid was come, the same Sir Roger the Irishman appeared for trial in person in chapel aforesaid before the said reverend father then sitting in judgment for a tribunal and thereupon the same Sir Roger when required made oath on the most holy gospels to the said reverend father in regard to speaking the truth and answering faithfully upon all points then to be objected against him and enquired of from him concerning and savouring of the matter of errors or heresy Against this Sir Roger the Irishman indeed, so sworn, for the mere correction of his soul the same reverend father of his office objected and articulated the articles underwritten Which articles indeed follower and are these,

First of all that the same Sir Roger in presence of one Master ap Ris John in the house of White Nicholas of Pembroke there being then present there the said Nicholas White and his wife White Katharine by name Tyler Thomas, of Tenby and Baret John with some others then present, publicly arguing with the said Master John said that he would and could make the Lord's body in the time of the mass for those present and for himself those bones would be bread alone Also that contrariwise he would at his pleasure sometimes make it as far as related to himself and not to those present Which articles indeed, together with other errors besides obstinately adhered to there in the presence of those afore written, he then confessed that he had said, which errors, truly, together with all errors against the Faith and definition of the Holy Roman church, in writing, before the reverend father aforesaid and his commissary there namely Master ap Owen, Lewis doctor of decrees and archdeacon of Cardigan, with all the others then called to this, he publicly abjured in form following-

In the name of God, Amen!

I, Sir Roger, chaplain, now of the diocese of St David's before you Hugh etc Thomase heresies and errors which of late before Master John ap Res and others then present I obstinately asserted and cherished in the house of Nicholas White at Pembroke etc I verily abjure and the said erroneous articles and all other articles whatsoever, erroneous and contrary to the holy Faith, and all heresies, here in these writings and expressly, I humbly and devoutly renounce, supplicating the reverend fatherhood to deign to impart unto me the benefit of absolution from every sentence of excommunication passed by the holy fathers against such wanderers, subjecting me to every correction and reformation whatsoever adequate to and of right required on account of the premises And him the said reverend father absolved in due form of law and enjoined on him a fitting penance in that behalf which he faithfully fulfilled publicly in the church of St Mary, Pembroke

“Dreadful accident and loss of lives at Pembroke Dock Pembroke 23 July 1866

The town of Pembroke was, on Monday evening last, the scene of one of the most alarming accidents which have occurred here for many years past From the particulars which have been ascertained it appears that about six o'clock in the evening a party consisting of women and lads and children about 14 in number, were returning from a hay-field in Lamphey Lane in a waggonette drawn by one horse The horse and vehicle were the Property of Mrs Truscott of the White Hart Inn and when they had arrived nearly opposite the Dragon Hotel the belly band gave way and the horse began to kick This so alarmed the women and children that they began to scream and by this means so frightened the animal that it took off at a furious pace down towards the Lion Hotel and from there up by the Old Castle Here PC Davies No 24 attempted to stop the animal but was unable to do so and also got much hurt in the attempt, the shaft having struck him in the side From thence the animal continued its career over the steep and sinuous Westgate Hill and eventually struck the vehicle against the old parapet wall of the Calvinistic methodist Chapel when both horse and vehicle got turned completely over

In this terrible crash a young woman about 17 years of age named Dorcas Ann Truscott, a daughter of Mr W H Truscott of the " Red White and Blue" Inn Quay Pembroke was killed on the spot, while her younger sister, named Olwin Lavinia, age 14 years received a frightful scalp wound, sustained such other serious injuries that she is not expected to survive Ann Moy, a widow , about 60 years of age - so dread fully injured that her death is momentarily expected A lad named John Haran who was driving the horse at the time and his sister - both seriously injured A woman named Elizabeth Williams - much injured Lettice James , a woman who jumped out before the vehicle was turned over, very seriously injured The whole of the other occupants including an infant in arms, are more or less injured Dr H P Jones and Dr Reid were at once in attendance and rendered all the medical assistance they could Extract from the Haverfordwest and Milford Telegraph newspaper July 25th 1866”

12 July 1919 The Albert Medal This very rare award was granted to Thomas Williams the Station Master at Pembroke The citation from Whitehall, Read, "The King has been pleased to award the Albert Medal to Mr Thomas Williams Station Master on the Great Western Railway at Pembroke, in recognition of his gallantry in saving life in March last The circumstances are as follows— 'On the 13th March, as a train was entering Pembroke Station, an elderly gentleman, Canon Bowen, of Pembroke, in stepping aside to avoid a luggage barrow, fell off the platform on to the rails The train was not more than thirty yards away from him when he fell, and was travelling fast The Stationmaster, who was close by, at once jumped down in front of the engine and just succeeded in rolling Canon Bowen off the track, and held him down alongside the rails until it was safe to allow him to get up although the brakes were applied it was found impossible to bring the train to a standstill, until the engine and two coaches had passed the spot where rescued and rescuer were lying Had it not been for Mr Williams presence of mind and courage Canon Bowen could hardly have escaped instant death' The award was published in the London Gazette of 18 July 1919 <http://www.pembrokeshire-war-Memorialcouk/indexhtm>

Pembroke Dock

In the forty years I have been researching the history of Pembrokeshire I have made many friends and without their help the Jottings would not have been possible. One very special friend who allowed me to copy many of the maps and early pictures and also provided much information was Mr Jimmy Meyrick Owen and I shall always remember his help and encouragement. John Hogg and I both spent hours talking about old Pembroke Dock and he obtained copies of old maps which he gave me. Vernon Scott not only helped me and advised me, he gave me copies of photographs and helped me with my spelling, format and grammar. John Worley with the Photographic Exhibition Great friends – what more can anyone say.

Thank you all

Basil H J Hughes 2013

Original spelling has not been altered as far as possible.

Pembroke Dock. Before 1814

Until 1875, what is now Pembroke Dock, consisted of two distinct areas -- the land to the north of the Barrack Hill which later was held by the Paterchurch family and the land to the south - East Pennar -- which had once been held by the Jestington family of Eastington. To the east was land held by the Meyricks.

I have been told that the Paterchurch family was an old Norman family who came with the Conqueror but there is no trace in the Battle Abbey roll

Prior to 1396, when the old Earldom of Pembroke, lapsed much of the Paterchurch land was actually the Manor of the Grange of Kyngeswode held by the Earl. What role the Paterchurches played is uncertain as they don't appear in any of the early roles as holding land from the Earl either by knights fee or more likely as tenants as were the Adams family, but they must have been a respected family as they appear as jurors in several important cases relating to land.

Giraldus Cambrensis in the late 1100's recorded a list of Churches in the area but St Patrick's church does not appear.

There are no records either that I could find of the name earlier than 1287 when a witness to a charter of Gilbert granted by a deed at Langum the farm called Russelssland to Philip the son of Roger and to Alice for their lives was David de St Patrick.

A David de Ville Patricii also appears as a juror on the inquisition as to the lands belonging to Joan de Valance Countess of Pembroke dated Sept 20 1307.

These records do not give any clue to where they actually lived nor is there a mention of a church.

On the 20th August 1324 there was an inquest on the death of Aymer de Valence who had held the county of Pembroke with all its appurtenances and which detailing his holdings in South Pembrokeshire.(IMP Edward II files 84 and 85)

These consisted of the Castle and Town Pembroke, the grange of Kyngeswode, the manor of St Florence, the commote of Castlemartin, the town of Tenby and also 25 and a half Knights fee's. The name de Patrick nor any variation appears neither on the jury nor on the list of land holders.

I am mystified by Patent Roll 27 Edward III Pt1 M27d (Cal p447) 1353 detailing a complaint of Thomas son of Richard Wryot regarding his holding of one Knights fee in Orieldoune and KilPatrikeston – is there any connection ? Is that the original spelling of Kilpason?

In 1362 we have the first record of the family holding land and using the name Paterchurch. David Paterchurch held with three co-parceners half a knights fee at Sageston and Williamston Harvill (half a knights fee could be about (acc to Owen) 600 acres of good land one quarter of that 150 acres and land was situated in Carew Parish well away from the Paterchurch itself?)

In the early eighteen hundreds there was no trace to be found of the present town. Acc to Kelly's Directory 1884 "there was originally a farm with a house and church, then designated "Paterchurch," There was a farmhouse, the old mansion in ruins, a partly completed fort but mostly fields and meadows with the occasional cottage and lime kiln on the shore.

The very early history

Romans

It was believed that the Romans never venture further west than Carmarthen as no tiles or brick, no Roman villas have been found but several large hoards of coins have been discovered in Pembrokeshire.

Recently however evidence that the Romans did venture further west than Carmarthen has been found. A Roman road linking Carmarthen with Llawhadden which carried on even further west just past Wiston was found. Parts were uncovered during the building of the Whitland bypass and a Roman fort site at Wiston.

The earliest remains that have been found in the area, that is now Pembroke Dock, are Roman coins

Coins of the reign of Claudius Gothicus (268 to 270 AD) and of Constantius II (337 to 361AD), now in the National Museum of Wales, were dug up in a garden in Military Road Pennar and other coins were reported to have been found in the same immediate area.

This could be an indication that the area was the site of a native fortified settlement. Mason has recorded the uncovering of the remains of a stone built road with a stone lined ditch by workmen clearing the site for South Pembrokeshire Hospital.

It can only be a guess as to how the coins came to Pennar.

Was there native fortified settlement on the headland which could have given early warning of danger to the Roman fleet, a native settlement who traded with the Romans, or did someone dropped their purse?

One thing we do know there was plenty of in South Pembrokeshire, was Saints but most of them wandered off to other places to spread their teachings, (were they seeking a more receptive audience)

One local saint who it is believed held land in the area was St Teilo According to The Landaff records he held land at Amroth and also Llanion. His mother is reputed to have had a settlement on Goldern Hill; one pronunciation of her name was Gawden

Pennar

[This was the first booklet I wrote and self published to raise funds for St Patrick's Church. I was told that the information was interesting but there were two spelling mistakes and several grammatical errors – despite that over two hundred copies sold within six weeks]

How old is Pennar?

When I first started to collect information on the area I was told that “Pennar does not go back very far, it is not as old as the Dockyard”. As I soon found out, Pennar is far older.

The name, Pennar, suggests, a Celtic origin Pen: chief, head, end or top; pentir – headland. If this is correct then the name predates the Norman influence in the area.

But man has lived in the area from earliest times; 11,000 years ago, when the climate was very cold and dry after the last Ice Age, hunting mammoths, reindeer and horses he lived in a cave just the other side of Pennar Gut. A man of the New Stone age also lived (and died) in the same cave. It was home to a Bronze Age carpenter and it was used by man up till Norman times and maybe later.

If there were any remains of very early civilisations on this side of the Pennar Gut they have long been destroyed by the farming and the military development of the area.

The earliest remains that have been found, as I have said, were are Roman.

According to Ptolemy the Celtic tribe who lived in the area at the time were the Demetae. A Bishop of St David's chairing a meeting of Archaeological Cambrensis in his welcoming speech was adamant that the Romans never came as far west as Pembrokeshire. He believed that they co-operated with the Romans because the Romans defeated the Demetae's traditional enemy, the Silures. The Romans therefore would have no need to make roads or erect forts in the area. He was mistaken.

After the Romans left, the area was still ruled by Kings whose ancestors came from Leinster in Ireland, the Romans seemed to have believed that the best person to keep the Irish away was another Irishman.

Just over a thousand years ago the land in this area belonged to Hywel Dda King of Wales. He had a court at Whitland and is remembered for ordering the Welsh Law to be written down, laws under which women had more rights than they do today.

In 948 AD Hywel Dda gave land in this area to his favourite grandson Jestyn ap Owain ap Hywel Dda. This grant of land included what is now known as Pennar. Jestyn lived on the site of Eastington Farm then called Jestynton and his family continued to live there and hold the land even after the arrival of the Normans until an heiress married a Norman. (Did this happen with Paterchurch, was the land originally held by a Welsh family like at Jestynton and a very early heiress married a Norman like Princess Nestor married Gerald de Windsor?)

Early Pennar

Although the Normans invaded England in 1066 they did not venture into Wales till 1093. William the Conqueror did make a pilgrimage (or was it a spying trip) to St David's, but, according to the Domesday book there appears to have been an agreement between William and Rhys ap Tewdwr, King of Deheubarth, of which this area was a part, that Rhys would retain his authority in his own Kingdom. Rhys' daughter Nesta was sent to the Norman court as surety for Rhys continued loyalty, where she conceived at least one child by the future Henry I.

Rhys died in 1093 opening the floodgates to the Norman conquest of the area and the Normans under the Montgomery's then set up the Marcher Lordship of Cardigan and Pembroke.

Gerald de Windsor was appointed Custodian of the Castle of Pembroke by Arnulph de Montgomery, but lost the post when Arnulph and his brother rebelled against the King and a knight named Saar was appointed.

Arnulph pleaded with the King for a pardon and was told that the King would pardon him when he appeared before him with his head in his lap, so Arnulph retired to France.

Gerald de Windsor, who had taken no active part in the rebellion, went to the King Henry's court where he married Rhys's daughter the beautiful Nesta, Princess of Wales. She owned Carew Castle and large estates in her own right. Nesta, who had several children by different fathers, is credited as being the ancestor of most of the major families of South Wales. Certainly many of the major leaders in the invasion of Ireland were descended from her and one of her grandsons was Giraldus Cambrensis.

Among the many Normans and Flemish who came to this area was the Perrot's. In 1183 Sir Stephen Perrot, who had been Custodian of Narberth Castle, but had lost it to the Welsh, married Elen, daughter and sole heiress of Merchion ap Rhys ap Rydderch ap Jestyn of Jestynton (Eastington). Through this marriage the Perrot's came to hold land in the area which included that of Pennar.

The Perrot's continued to live and hold the land in this area for many centuries. A Stephen Perrot is mentioned in Edward III's reign. His son John Perrot died on the 13th January 1349 and in his will it is mentioned that he held the lands of Pennar. The estate was inherited by Peter Perrot who married Alice daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Harold (the Perrot's seem to have had an eye for wealthy heiresses) thus vastly increasing their estates and from this time Haroldstone near Haverfordwest became the family home. Peter is mentioned in the Close Roll dated 1377.

Pennar is recorded as Estpenr in an Inquisition post mortem of 1363 and as Le Estpennr on 1379 and as East Penarth in the 16th century.

In 1531 Henry VIII confiscated Carew Castle after beheading Rice ap Griffiths the holder. He granted the governorship of the castle to Sir John Perrot "of Haroldstone and Jestynton". Sir John was the natural son of Henry VIII and Mary Berkeley (Lady of the Bedchamber) wife of Sir Thomas Perrot of Haroldstone. Sir Thomas it was who introduced pheasants to Pembrokeshire but "they preferred everyone else's estates to his". When Sir John died in the Tower among the list of his estates Pennar is mentioned as well as "Lanbeath". The land he held by inheritance was returned to Sir John's heirs and the Jestynton estates became the dowry of his daughter Anne when she married Sir John Phillips, Sheriff of Pembrokeshire in 1595.

In 1570s under the authority of Queen Elizabeth I, Christopher Saxon surveyed the whole of England and Wales. His map of Pembrokeshire is dated 1578 and East Pennar is marked on that Map as is also Paterchurch and Ferryhouse (Pembroke Ferry).

East Pennar and Paterchurch are also recorded, later in 1610, on the John Speede Map of Pembrokeshire.

George Owen writing in 1595 mentions the Oyster industry of Pennar.

“Pennar Mowth is the creeke that cometh up to Pembroke town, this being the greatest and largest creeke in all Milford, it passeth up into the land 3 myles. The Crowe is a hollow or shelf a pretty way within the entrance of Pennar Mouth and it is an oyster bed and on the Crowe groweth one of the best Oysters of all Milford being a bigg and sweet oyster, the poore people thereabouts are greatly relieved by the oysters there for upon lowe water the bed is drye and the people gather the oysters there without any dredge or other helpe of boate”.

The Jestynton estates which included Pennar were handed down to Hugh Phillips the third son of Sir John Phillips. Hugh's daughter and heiress Francis (also referred to as Abra) married Thomas Lloyd of Morvil and moved to Grove. Thomas Lloyd's son, also called Thomas Lloyd, by his second marriage (to Elizabeth Powell) was succeeded by an only daughter who on 12 December 1725 married William Owen MP of Landshipping (later Sir William Owen of Orielton). He acquired all the Lloyd estates including the land of Pennar and rebuilt the house at Orielton.

The register of Hearth tax, Pembroke Town, for 1670 shows that the land of Pennar was leased to a Jenkin Ferrier who must have been quite wealthy, the house was quite large (the old farmhouse) by the average of the times as recorded in the Hearth Tax because tax was payable on 4 hearths.

The Ferrier family were quite influential having connections around St Florence and also being related to the Colby family, they also took an active part in local affairs and in 1769 James Ferrier of Pennar was Mayor of Pembroke.

The Land tax register of 1786 shows that the tenant of Pennar was a Mrs Ferrior and that land tax of £2 10s 0d were payable on it. This compares with £1 1 0d for Paterchurch.

Benjamin Ferrier was the tenant in 1791 and another Ferrier of Pennar, Simon, died at the Battle of Waterloo leading his regiment, the 1st Lifeguards, in a charge for the eleventh time although already badly wounded.

Another pre 1814 Pennar family were the Prices. Thomas Price of East Pennar was Mayor of Pembroke in 1666/7. Morrice Price was listed in the hearth tax records in 1670 and there is a memorial on the outside of the west wall of the tower of St Florence Church to John and his wife Ann Price of Pennar. He died in February 1803 at the age of 102 she died in August of the same year and she was 104. Surely this must have been one of the longest marriages on record. Their son Richard was buried on 13 April 1842 he only reached the age of 99 and another Price, David kept the Dolphin Inn at Llanreath Point and had contact with the first boatload of people who came from Milford to mark out the site for the new Dockyard at Paterchurch in 1813, he reached the age of 96.

Many of the old cottages, not being built of very substantial materials, have disappeared over time. Apart from the hamlet at East Pennar there was also a cottage occupied by a man named Jacob Williams near what is known as Jacobs Pill and some in the middle of a field called Sycamore.

The “main” road into Pennar, before the construction of the Dockyard in 1814 was from Pembroke. Today it is only a narrow path. It starting on the north side of the Pembroke River at the Green, went past St. Anne's Chapel and when on to East Pennar Farmhouse (The Old Farmhouse, Ferry Rd) with branches of it along the way leading to Imble and Hill farms.

At East Pennar Farmhouse it passed through the farm buildings and the hamlet, through some fields to the west until it reached a cottage in the last field before Pennar Mouth then on to the Point itself. In the early 1800s this part of the path was still in existence although Farm Gates and stiles had been installed in the field boundaries. This was the road which was used by the Oyster Fishermen some of whom lived at East Pennar others at Pembroke. There was also a road leading southwards from Pennar Farm known as Watery Lane which lead onto the Pennar Gut at the Pennar Ridge. This Ridge enabled the river to be forded at low water allowing carts full of farm produce to cross easily.

A footpath over what is now Barrack Hill but was called Redland connected Pennar with Paterchurch farm.

Pennar After 1814:

But first what about events on the Continent?

Col. Samuel Ferrior of Pennar died at the battle of Waterloo [his regiment 1st Life Guards] and although wounded it is said he was leading his regiment in a charge for the eleventh time when killed. His son Col. Charles Ferrior died 13 June 1863. He had served in India for 28 years.

1814 The fortunes and development of Pennar from 1814 were closely linked to that of the Royal Dockyard at Paterchurch, later Pembroke Dock.

At first most of the labour force consisted of men transferred to the new yard from the old one at Milford who travelled up the Haven from Milford by boat and landed just inside Pennar Gut where the boats could float at all stages of the tide, left the boats there in the care of an old woman, Bessy Bradley who lived in the cottage by the Point and walked over the hill via Mr. David Prices public house "the Dolphin" and then to the Dockyard. Mr Price had a marvellous orchard and brewed his own beer but there was a suspicion that it was well watered as no fights ever took place because of it.

1816 the new Yard was expanding rapidly and more men were required. Work in the other major Royal Yards was slack and there was an immigration of large numbers of skilled tradesmen and their families, from the other Royal Dockyards, about 1816 necessitating a massive house building programme. Houses were erected as fast as possible many by the dockyard workers who worked on them after a day's work in the yard, but even so some were occupied before they were completed and many were of very poor standard.

1830 According to Mrs S. Peters the majority of the older houses in Pennar were built about 1846 but the Ordinance Survey Map of 1839 based on a survey of 1830 shows that houses were already in existence in Upper St. (now Castle St), Middle St (Grove St), Front St (Fleet St), Military Rd, and North St (Owen St).

1822 The South part of Barrack Hill, what is now Cross Park, part of Pennar Farm, Sykemore and Treowen were purchased from Sir John Owen in 1822 by the Admiralty (51 acres in extent).

1830 This they then exchanged for 13 acres of land owned by the Ordnance Department.

1967 The Barracks and the land attached to it were sold by the Ministry of Defence to the District Council and leased by them for a period of 60 years to the South Pembrokeshire Golf Club.

Old Military Rd.

Modernised Houses Owen St.

1870 Pennar became part of Pembroke Dock and, at that time, was a thriving community with shops, pubs, places of worship, several smallholdings and allotments. The Orielson Estate map shows that by that time most of the older houses in Pennar were in existence and the road connecting Military Rd. with Pennar Point, for which the Admiralty purchased two acres of land in 1862 from the Orielson Estate, was built although the road into Pennar was in a very bad state. In 1884 there were two bakers and grocers, Mr William Lifton of Military Rd. and Mr William Malley who also kept the sub post office, Mr William Phillips, jun. of Military Rd., Pennar was a coal merchant and general carrier, Mr William Phillips, Snr. was a beer retailer, while Mr David Nicholas kept the Royal Oak public house, Mr John Williams, the Kilwentage [3], Mr Robert Court Griffiths, the Commercial Inn and Mr Henry Banner, the Swan Inn.

1856/7 The Orielson Estate, of which Pennar was a part, had been purchased by Miss Jane Martha Jones of Cilwendeg with part of the compensation money for the sale of the Skerries Lighthouse in Anglesey. On her death this estate and the Cilwendeg Estate passed to her niece Margarette Sutton Saurin, wife of Mark Antony Saurin. Part of the estate included the ferry from Pennar to Bentlass and all the houses which were let, leasehold, in the main to dockyard workers although later some were leased to military personnel.

1926 The closing of the Yard in 1926 hit Pennar hard. Many of the skilled craftsmen left the area, unemployment was rife and there was less opportunity for the trade training of the young men of the area as well as the loss of the educational excellence of the Royal Dockyard School. Even before that time the reduction in employment had been so drastic that the Mayor had organised events such as half a mile of pennies and Fêtes and Galas to raise money for the unemployment

1928 Pennar school held jumble sales to raise money for the Boot fund and up until the mid 30s there were many cases of school girls of that school officially recognised by the Education Committee as suffering from malnutrition.

Free School milk came in 1935 and school dinners 1943.

1926 From 1926 with the arrival of the Royal Air Force the employment situation improved with ancillary work becoming available and an increase in the spending power because of the new base opening up. Many more houses were built to accommodate the Service personnel.

After the war and the closing down of RAF P/D, there was once again much unemployment.

Many of the old houses were in need of improvements, over 2000 had suffered bomb damage, many had no indoor facilities. (Mine first had a flush outdoor WC. connected to mains sewerage pipe laid through our backgarden in 1947 and an outside tap as the main water supply.) About that time there was a large estate built by the Council to ease the shortage of housing and later under the Housing Act of 1957 most of the old cottages of Lower Pennar were demolished, as well as some in Military Rd, and new Council houses built. Some of the surplus R.A.F houses in Stranraer Rd were purchased by the Council others were sold to private owners. The Orielson estate gradually sold the leases of the plots it owned, the last being sold in 1989 at an auction in St Patrick's Church Hall, and most of old houses throughout Pennar have now been modernised.

Industries of Pennar.

The main industries of Pennar were concentrated on agriculture and fisheries. An old description gives a picture of ,what is now, Barrack Hill golden with grain. When the sun is bright in the very early morning it is still possible to see where the old field boundaries used to be as well as some of the old paths.

Fishing.

1600's Oysters were an important export from the Haven by the 1600s when large quantities were sent either overland or in "barks to Bristow". Some of the finest oysters came from Pennar Gut.

1592 A typical cargo of 20,000 is recorded in the Port Books as going to Barnstaple. The trade continued right up until the 1850s when the beds seemed to die out possibly killed by river pollution from the industries and increased population of Pembroke and Pennar. Shipments went to Ireland, Bristol, Liverpool, Holland, and Lisbon.

1674 John Powell sent oysters to London as "thank you" to Sir Robert Clayton for his assistance in procuring the post of "Comptroller of the Customs in the Port of Milford Haven". Even as late as the nineteenth century, trade in oysters from Pennar was large, the Cambrian Register of 1818 records that the oysters from Pennarmouth were famous. Very large quantities were pickled and sent to Bristol and places further afield.

1719 The quantity and the quality attracted the attention of foreign fishermen; in 1719 the Deputy Vice Admiral for the County of Pembroke (William Lloyd) wrote forbidding them from fishing in the branches and in the Haven itself. The foreign ships were of "great burden" and "employed many other fishing boats to dredge for the same oysters whereby to lade there several ships therewith and the same to export out of His Majesty's dominion". An early example of factory ship fishing?

Quarrying.

There was extensive quarrying of limestone between Pennar and Pembroke. According to Morris in 1743 - "The Navigation up this river to Pembroke Town is much impeded by the rubbish of the Limestone quarries being thrown into the River; which ought to be remedied, or the Place will be stopped up in the Process of Time." "Within Pennarmouth a Dock might be made which would contain all the Vessels in England and which would be perhaps the greatest thing in the world of that kind"

The main requirement for limestone was for the manufacture of lime as fertiliser and mortar although some was used for building.

Farming.

Before 1812 the main farm in the area was situated near what is now Gilgal Terrace off Ferry Rd, the “old Farmhouse” which is several hundred years old. There was a cluster of buildings between there and the foreshore, and it was on what was then the track to Pembroke, across the fields passing the site of St Ann’s Chapel to the Green. The farm had its own limekiln at the end of what is now Fleet St. There was also supposed to be another small farm at the west end of what is now Military Rd. and a smallholding at the end of the continuance of the track past the old Farmhouse right by the Pennar Point.

1814 After 1814 houses were built on much of the farm land but many small holdings sprang into being. The Orielton estate leases show that many of the tenants of the houses leased areas of land to farm, much on annual tenancy. Quit notices were served on at least seven in 1861, among who were Aaron Longhurst, William Morgan, George Thomas Husband, Thomas Mabe, and James Glanville. Mr Samuel Jenkins of the Victoria Hotel is recorded as leasing 36 acres, part arable, and part permanent turf in 1857.

Shipbuilding.

There is very little information available before 1814. Many small ships and boats would be needed for the oyster industry and other fishing; these would have been on the foreshore, as required, by the users. Certainly there was shipbuilding in the Gut in the 1700s with records showing ships being built at Bentlass but the only major Shipbuilding Yard was that established on a site at Jacobs Pill in the late 1800s.

1874, the Milford Haven Shipbuilding and Engineering Co. Ltd (Jacobs Pill) leased land and properties from the Orielton Estate. This Company had a very impressive Board of Directors including Admiral Lord Clarence Paget as Chairman, Sir William Brett as Secretary, Mr E. Reed MP, E. Barry RA, J. T. Emmerson JP and J. Hall. One Ship built there was a corvette for the Japanese Navy, the Hei Yei launched in 1877, and another was the Acorn. The last work carried out at the yard was the building of a caisson for the Admiralty.

1885 The Company went into liquidation in 1885. As part of its liquidation settlement, the Company assigned to the Orielton Estate the foreshore rights in front of "Front St" Pennar which it had acquired from the Board of Trade.

Up till the 1880s the road connecting Pennar with Pembroke Dock was little more than a mud track a "bitter experience on dark damp nights" and down to Lower Pennar and the Ferry was described as "a double source of danger and disgrace".

Soon after a decent road was constructed with the main aim of conveying goods and manpower to the new Torpedo store at Pennar Point.

Pennar Military Torpedo Store and Magazine

1875 The Government constructed a Torpedo store and magazine close to the shore near Pennar Mouth in 1875. Torpedo trials and submarine mining experiments were carried out here. The site was also used to store all the equipment necessary to mine the Haven. This site was later utilised by the army.

The site of this Government Torpedo depot after the second World War became Pennar Park holiday camp - now defunct.

Llanreath Tank Farm

Llanreath Oil Storage Depot on Fire due to Enemy bombing 1940

With the change over from coal to oil as fuel for the fleet an Oil Storage depot was erected towards Pennar Point. This was bombed during the Second World War, with tragic loss of life. The remainder of the storage tanks were removed in the 1980s and the site has now being converted into an extension of the Golf Course.

Pennar Chapels and Churches.

Pennar was, until the 1840s, part of the Parish of St Mary's Pembroke. The nearest place of worship would have been, in earlier days, St Anne's Chapel, a small Chapel and place of pilgrimage on the old track from Pennar to Pembroke. It is marked on the Speede map of 1610 and on the French "spys" drawing of 1650. Alternatively the inhabitants of the area could go to Monkton Priory or St Mary's Church either along the track or by boat.

The earliest place of worship in the area although not in Pennar proper was Bethany Baptist Chapel built in 1818, which originally had its own graveyard although this was closed in 1824 allegedly because it was affecting the water supply of the town. The Chapel was lit by tallow candles which smoked and one record commented about the wicks having to be trimmed before the start of the Sermon. At the time the Meyricks who owned most of the land where the present town centre is built, were not in favour of non-conformist places of worship but the Owens who owned the land of the Pennar area allowed a chapel to be built on their land. This led to very early development of the Pennar, High St area.

Originally at the top of what is now Tregennis Hill was Bethany Square with large houses around it, the Caledonia Inn with a kilted Scotsman as its sign and the Cambrian. Most of this was demolished with the building of the Defensible barracks. In the early days of the town Bethany Square was one of the important places of the town where the people met and talked in the summer evenings

Gilgal Baptist Chapel Pennar

Early in the 1860's the Rev. W B Bliss, Minister of Bethel Baptist Church, Pembroke Dock and Mr. David Jones one of the Deacons felt that there was a need for a place of Worship in Pennar.

The old cowsheds of the Old Farmhouse Lower Pennar on the right hand side going down Ferry Lane were converted into schoolroom and chapel. It is the site of what is now Gilgal Terrace as the old building was later converted into dwellings by Mr. Scourfield. This original chapel and schoolroom was opened for Worship on April 27th 1862 and the first service was taken by the Rev. Bliss. A Sunday School was started on May 4th with Mr. David Jones as Superintendent, it started at 10am went on till noon, restarted at 1.45pm till 2.45pm and was followed by a "preaching service". Such was the demand that 60 names were enrolled on the first Sunday.

According to Findlay the Chapel would accommodate 200 to 300 people. The first few months were exceptionally busy with the first service on June 1st of the first Pastor, Rev. T D Mathias, He opened and conducted a day school which started on July 7th.

On the 19th October a Baptismal service was held when eight members were immersed "in the tide" 1862 The Church was officially formed on November 11th 1862 when Mr. David Jones, Mr. William Lewis, Mr. Thomas Powell, Mr. David Gay and Mr. Issac Jenkins were elected Deacons, and it was admitted to the Pembrokeshire Association in 1867.

1868 The Rev. Mathias resigned in June 1868 and over the next seventeen years, four ministers served the flock, Rev. James Williams for two years, Rev. Henry Evans for three years, he had been a shipwright in the Dockyard where he had held short religious services in the lunch break before taking up the Ministry full time. Then after a space of three years came Mr. William Casnodyn who then went as a pastor in Patagonia. He was followed by Mr. Elias Evans.

The old building had become too small for the congregation and was also in need of repair.

1885 When the Rev. T Pandy John became Pastor in 1885 the members decided that a new building was necessary. A site was leased in Nelson St where the present Chapel now stands, the foundation stone of the new Schoolroom was laid by Richard Cory of Cardiff in 1887.

1887 The present Chapel was opened in 1887 and was much larger than the old one being capable, according to the specifications, of seating 550 people. The cost was £950.

1893 Six years later the Rev. John left Pennar for Barry and was succeeded by the Rev. David Davies. At that time the Chapel was in debt due to the building costs and the Rev. Davies organised the first of the Eisteddfod's held in Pembroke Dock, the profit considerably reducing the Chapel debt.

1889 Unfortunately, because of ill health, he had to resign in 1899 and he died in Swansea on Sept 27th 1900.

1900 Rev. T Williams of Bangor College became the new pastor in 1900 and acted as Mayor's Chaplain in 1904-5 when Alderman W Phillips, one of the congregation, became Mayor of the Borough.

1912 At the end of 1912 moves were made to obtain a grant from the Carnegie Trust for an organ. Eventually these efforts were successful, and on June 4th, 1913, the instrument (from the Sweetland Organ Building Co., Bath) was dedicated, the guest organist for the ceremony being Mr. M. S. Maurice Popplestone, F.R.C.O.

1915 The Rev. T. Williams married a Church member, Miss Jessie Jonas, and they were both greatly missed when they left in September 1915, to take the Pastorate of Maesyrhelem and Pound Churches in Radnorshire. For many years Mrs. Williams had been a faithful Sunday School teacher, and she continued to support her husband most competently during the whole of his Ministry.

1916 The Rev. D. T. Davies, of Bethel, Loveston, became Pastor in 1916. He was extremely well liked by both young and older members, keenly interested in all spheres of Church life, and a great leader of the people during a very difficult period in the history of the Church, for his Ministry continued throughout the 1914-1918 War and its aftermath.

A number of young men fell in action, and their names, together with those of all the others who enlisted, are recorded on a memorial tablet in the Chapel.

1918 In 1918 another of the young men of the Church entered the Ministry. The Rev. Ernest Cole, became Pastor of Great Horwood Baptist Church. After many years of distinguished service in the Baptist cause, he became Pastor Emeritus of Penrallt Baptist Church, Bangor.

Later, during a nation-wide depression which led subsequently to the closure of H.M. Dockyard in 1926, many families left the town to seek employment elsewhere. Church records call attention to the unprecedented times which resulted in the depletion of both officers and congregation. Those remaining were asked to face the situation with courage. Church appointments had to be deferred as again and again still more families departed; the Minister's salary had also to be reduced.

1922 repairs to the building had to be neglected, and affairs were generally at a low ebb. Every effort was made to keep the spirit of the Church alive, and the Minutes of the Annual General Meeting held in January, 1922 reveal that the Church had engaged in Lawn Tennis activities which proved a highly satisfactory way of keeping the young people together.

1927 The Church suffered another crushing blow, however, in 1927, when after a long illness, the very much beloved Pastor passed away at the early age of 37 years. There is a tablet to his memory on the North Wall of the Church. His widow who had entered fully into the life of the Church, later became the wife of the Rev. Bleddyn Howells, Pastor of Broadhaven before moving to Melton Mowbray, but upon his death in 1949, she returned to Pembroke.

1927 There followed a short period of Ministry by a former Pastor, the Rev. T. P. John, who had retired from his Church in America. Still full of spirit, Mr. John worked to secure the freehold of the Church, and this was achieved for the sum of £43. New Trustees were appointed, Mr. J. Scourfield and Mr. J. Edwards being the only two of the original ones left.

Mr. John was, however, dogged by ill-health from the beginning of his second Ministry, which began on July 17th, 1927, and ended with his enforced retirement on May 27th, 1928. He passed away on July 9th, 1928, to the very great sorrow of the Church.

1928 Next came a period, June 1928 to February 7th, 1932, when no pastor was appointed, but services were conducted by lay preachers and visiting clergymen. The Rev. Glyn Davies of Puncteston, Evan Davies of Aberkenfig, J. Lamb of Milford Haven, W. P. Thomas of New Quay, and W. Jenkins of Roch, officiated at Baptismal Services.

1932 Early in 1932 the Church invited the Rev. Gus Thomas of Howey, to the Pastorate, and he opened his Ministry on the first Sunday in February.

Both before and after entering the Ministry, Mr. Thomas devoted a great deal of time and energy to the Christian Endeavour Movement, and it would be true to say that he was largely responsible for keeping the movement alive in the town during the 1914-1918 War, for he was no stranger to Pembroke Dock when he came to Gilgal. During the Great War, while serving with the R.A.M.C., he was stationed at Llanion Barracks and contributed much to the religious life of the town, 1935 In a statement delivered to a Church Meeting in 1935 by Mr. T. Masters, a senior Church Deacon the Church was declared to be in good heart, with no debt of any kind substantial sums in hand £22 in the Building Fund, over £40 in the Church Fund while three years' contribution to the Substantiation Fund had already been paid.

1939-45 Mr. Thomas was minister during the World War of 1939-45. Many young men, and women too, were away serving in the Armed Forces. some were directed to other areas on work of National importance while the civilian population suffered considerably from enemy bombing. Many families were evacuate. The Church members, however, played their full part in the many welfare and air-raid precaution activities in the town.

1940 During this time the Schoolroom was taken over by the Admiralty for the billeting of sailors who came as fire-fighters when Pennar Fuel Tanks were set on fire by enemy action.

1945 At the cessation of hostilities, persons who had served in the Forces, and had a connection with the Chapel, were given a sum of money from a Welcome Home Fund set up by the members.

1944 The Rev. Gus Thomas suffered a great deal of ill-health for a number of years and retired in 1944, though he continued to live at Rose Cottage, near the Chapel, until his death in 1961 The people of Pennar remember him especially for the quality of his sermons, his vigour, and his undaunted cheerfulness in times of adversity.

They remember, too the devoted service of Mrs. Thomas, whose charm and friendliness endeared her to all.

1948 the Church appointed the Rev. J. I. John, student at Cardiff Baptist College. He remained until June, 1951 when he accepted a call to the Mount Calvary Baptist Church, Swansea.

One of the features of his short Ministry was the publication of a Church Magazine which he personally edited. The Secretarial duties were carried out by Mr. J. Phillips.

During this time electricity was introduced into the Church and various improvements were carried out The Choir, depleted and finally abandoned through the period of depression and two World Wars, was resuscitated, and several recitals given.

The Church owes much to Mr. John, whose youthful enthusiasm and untiring efforts in every phase of Church work were an inspiration to his Officers and congregation.

1951 The Rev. Davies, of Llangwm, was next to be invited, and he began his Ministry on Oct 4th, 1951. He was already well known to the people of Pennar, having preached there on a number of occasions and officiated at Baptismal Service at times when there was no Pastor.

Mr. Davies, a man highly esteemed in Non-Conformist circles, had already ministered with distinction at several Churches in Pembrokeshire and Monmouthshire. After training at Myrddin College and the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, he became Pastor of Yncheston and Beulah, Little Newcastle, leaving later for Mount Pleasant, Pembroke, and thence to Hope, Cross Keys, where he also took up Y.M.C.A. work, achieving marked success among the troops. At the end of the war, he returned to Pembrokeshire as Pastor of Galilee, Llangwm.

At Gilgal, Mr. Davies was an indefatigable worker, his frequent visits to the sick and elderly being particularly appreciated. The great interest he has always taken in the teaching and training of the young has not lessened throughout the years, and in this, as in all he did, he had the unfailing support and able assistance of his wife, Gilgal greatly values the contribution she made to the life of the Church.

1953 Mr. Davies became President of the English Assembly of the Baptist Union in Wales and Monmouthshire, and in 1957 he held similar office in the Pembrokeshire Baptist Association, having previously served in an executive capacity with both bodies for many years, and preached on a number of occasions at their Meetings.

Mrs. Davies was President of the Women's International Day of Prayer Committee, and was for ten years the Secretary of the Pembrokeshire Branch of the Prayer Union of Ministers' and Missionaries' Wives, representing Pembrokeshire at the Annual Conferences, including one in Switzerland. She had on frequent occasions, occupied the pulpit of many Pembrokeshire Churches. Mr. and Mrs. Davies had also entered fully into the life of the town, and were members of the Old Peoples' Welfare Committee and of the Friends of the South Pembrokeshire Hospital Committee. During Mr. Davies' Pastorate, a new heating system had been installed in the Church, and plans for large scale repairs to the fabric of the building, and for extensive interior decorations were carried out by two contractors, members of Gilgal. Mr. T. Scourfield and Mr. A. Grieve.

Wesley Chapel Pennar.

1820 There had been an early Chapel (Ebenezer) near Bethany Corner . It was very small but had a gallery in which the choir sat. It was demolished at the building of the Barracks.

1860's In the late 1860's a site was leased from the Orielson Estate at the corner of Nelson St. and Gays Lane and in 1870 what was according to Findlay " a small plain building accommodating about 120" was erected.

1871 A Certificate of Registration was made out on 28th February 1871 signed by the Rev. Herbert Wesley Haime of Pembroke, the Wesleyan Methodist Minister. 1871. The Chapel was actually registered for Worship on 5th March 1871.

1893 the chapel was closed for renovation and reopened on the first Sunday in August when the Rev. Theodore Bishop was asked to conduct the reopening service. A schoolroom was built as part of these renovations. At that time some of the trustees were Mr. G W John, Mr. A Berry (who was also Chapel Steward), Mr. W Skelton, Mr. B Osmond, Mr. E John, Mr. W Haskley, Mr. C W Lawrence, Mr. W Smith, the Secretary was Mr. E Taylor and the Minister the Rev. R Bryant.

1897 (2nd September) it was agreed to build a house on the ground adjacent to the Chapel, and leased to the Trustees, for a Chapel Keeper. Permission had been given by the Orielson estate office in a letter dated 5th August 1897

A regular pattern of worship continued for many years but, with the closure of the Dockyard, attendance's dwindled and instead of having their own Minister, services were conducted by the Minister from Wesley Chapel, Meyrick St. Pembroke Dock. The trustees meetings were also held at Wesley Chapel, Meyrick St.

1933 it was decided to suspend Sunday evening services.

The property was still leasehold and the Trustees made inquiries as to the possibility of purchasing the freehold in 1935 but the future was looking bleak.

1936 On the 25th February 1936 a meeting was held at the Meyrick St. Chapel when Mr. J Price BA Chapel Superintendent "expressed with regret the closure of the Chapel" in Pennar and said that he hoped in the near future to have a service or more every month.

1937 By October 20th 1937 it had been agreed to close the Chapel , to surrender the lease for the Chapel and the house to the Orielson estate and to dispose of the contents. The Pulpit and Organ were sold to Waterston Chapel for £1 each.

St Patrick's Church.

1850's the Rev. George Edward McHugh (curate of the parish of Pembroke Dock) married the daughter of the Chief Constructor of the Dockyard, J I Fincham, son of the author of Fincham's book on Naval architecture. On his retirement he lived with his son in law and daughter. He died in a riding accident opposite the Pier Hotel Pembroke Dock and was buried in Cosheston Churchyard. They came to live, at first, on plot 547, what is now No.1 Military Rd, which was leased to St John's Church for £100, there Rev. McHugh used to hold a Sunday School and "cottage lectures". Mr William Cole played the harmonium at these meetings.

Findley indicates that the building was used as a Church as he says

1875 that Pennar District Church is a small plain building under the control of the Curate of Pembroke Dock capable of accommodating 100

1877 the Rev. G F Kelly, Vicar of Pembroke Dock, died and Rev. McHugh left the parish. The new Vicar, Rev. F G M Powell, because the numbers attending the "cottage lectures" and Sunday School were so great, felt there was a need for larger premises and, as a temporary expedience, had a wooden hut built in the house grounds at a cost of £193 3s 0d. On the opening of the wooden mission room Mr Reed of the Work's Department played the harmonium. There do not appear to have ever been any deeds for this building and a ground rent of 17s 6d per annum was paid to the occupant of No 1 Military Rd, Mrs Edwards.

This building served the purpose of both Church and Church Hall for many years.

1878 On the estate map of the Orielson Estate 1878 the plot is marked as a School.

In that year (September 19th) a fund was established called the "St Patrick's Church Pennar Building Fund," to raise the funds necessary to build a more substantial Church in limestone, the Rev. F.G.M. Powell was trustee, with the London and Provincial Bank Ltd, Pembroke Dock Branch. The account was opened with a draft of £50 from Mr. H Smith and £5 from Captain Parkeu was paid in on 30th September.

1879 The first services recorded as having taken place in the "Mission Building" were on July 10th 1879 when there was Holy Communion at 8.30 am with 20 communicants, the collection amounted to £1 13 7d. With The Rev. Powell celebrating assisted by the curate, Rev. A R Wilson. Morning Prayer was at 11am at which Archdeacon Lewis preached and the collection was £4 15s 0d. Litany and an Address to the Children followed at 3pm and at 7.30pm there was Evening Prayer at which, according to the Service Register there were 260 in the congregation. The first Baptisms were those of Walter Lee Clark (adult) and Ethel Elizabeth Facey on August 4th, Lilius Margaret Elizabeth Moore on 28th August, Albert James Noakeson Sept 7th, Mary Stephens (adult conditional) September 30th, William George Turner (adult) October 9th Martha Devonald December 12th, Minnie Mary Dimmock, Elizabeth Mary Philpin and William Henry Philpin , all on December 18th. The normal pattern of worship was, Sundays 8.30am Communion, 11am Matins and Litany, 6pm Evensong and on Thursday Evenings 7pm Evensong. The number of Communicants varied between 20 and 30 with 22 on Easter Day 1880.

1889/90 From the St John's accounts for 1889/ 90 it would appear that Pennar spent more on Communion wine (6s 0d) than they did on the Curates Fund (4s 6d).

The Rev. J Seymour Allen , who had succeeded the Rev. Powell as Vicar of Pembroke Dock was very determined that a Church should be built to serve the Pennar and Bufferland area.

Acc to Kelly's Directory 1884

Connected with St John's Church is a wooden mission building, at Pennar, with accommodation for 200, here services are carried out almost precisely as at the parish church : it is contemplated to build a new church of limestone here, towards which a fund has been started.

Pennar Mission Room

1895 The alter from the Pennar Mission room was removed and installed in the chapel at the old cemetery (Park St) renovated in 1895

A plot of land was eventually given by the War Office for a new Church on the condition that free seats were provided for Servants of the Crown, and after much fund-raising a start was made.

Pennar School Log records

"1894 May 2nd Commenced afternoon school at 1pm on Wednesday (May 1st) and dismissed at 3pm owing to the Foundation stone of Pennar New Church being laid."

The stone (made by John Phillips Bush St and costing £2 1 6d) was laid by Lady Catherine Allen. The architects were Nicholson and Son of Hereford, the cost of the plans (which originally called for a spire at the north west corner) were £94 14 6d.

The builders were Morgan and Davies of Pembroke at a cost of £2324 most of which was raised by the parishioners

The Church consists of a nave with narrow north and south aisles. The Chancel is continuous with the nave, there is no chancel arch but there is a truss on corbels. The organ Chamber is at the north east with a clergy vestry beyond. The Choir vestry is at the North west. There is a bell-cot with an unusual wheel arrangement at the west end. It is built of squared and random rubble masonry with limestone dressings exposed externally and plastered internally. The roofs are slated with diagonal boards internally coated with three coats of linseed oil put on hot. The floors are wood block. The porch is situated on the south side with the font just inside the entrance.

1895 On July 7th 1895 the last service was held in the "Mission Church" and the register closes with the note that " On July 11th St Patrick's New Church was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of Swansea and a new book was commenced" The collection at this service was £65 19s 6d.

1895 The Consecration celebrations were on quite a lavish scale, Luncheon was provided for 200 guests and 500 Order of Service sheets were printed although only 144 seats had been purchased. The Service pattern for the new Church was 11am Communion or Matins and Litany alternating, 6pm Evensong, with the number of Communicants varying between 30 and 50.

Christmas day 1895 saw 32 take Communion

1896 Easter Sunday 1896 there was a total of 139 (the collection was £2 11 8d)

1895 The Organ installed, which is still in use was the one which had been removed from St John's in 1890 stored in St John's Hall and then installed in St Patrick's, after a thorough renovation, by Springfield Wood Works, Huddersfield, at a cost of £30. it was repainted by J Henderson from Albion Square

1979 this organ was surveyed by Geo Ormond & Co. Ltd., Taunton, who said of it that "The organ was built by Volkes is approximately One Hundred and Sixty years old and is very dirty and worn. It has not been dismantled for many years, and thorough restoration should be considered to prevent further deterioration of this valuable Instrument". It still had the bellows and the handle to pump them but had a blower fitted. Mrs Betty Lomax nee Betty Davies played it for many years and her husband was sextant.

Above the Chancel steps are two carved heads, believed to represent Henry VII and his wife Elizabeth of York. These were carved by Mr. Chas. Henry Williams of 4 Charlton Place, He also did some of the carving in Monkton Priory, the pulpit in St John's Pembroke Dock and the South African War Memorial in Carmarthen.

1895 The first to be Baptised in the new Church were Florence Amy Saunders and Violet Constance Mabel Pheonix both on July 16th 1895.

1904 The Church grew rapidly with the number of Easter Communicants in 1904 being 143 (six more than the previous year) and the average number attending Sunday School being 165. The organist was Miss Bickford and Mr. B Owen of 13 Military Rd was the Sexton

1907 Mr. G Edmunds was the organist with Mr. Thomas of Swan Row as Sexton. The sidesmen were Messrs. Bowen, M Griffiths, L John, J Phillips, J Russan, W Venable, W Wilcox, T James, Easter Communicants totalled 147 and the average attendance at Sunday School was 163.

1910 On February 25th 1910 a new Alter was dedicated, it was presented to St Patrick's by the parishioners of Christchurch Swansea. The Vicar, Rev. D L Prosser (later Bishop Prosser) took the service, Lt. Buchanan read the lessons and Mr. H Russant conducted the choir.

1919 The account book for 1919 reveals that the Organist was Mr. Frank Grant-Jones and the Choir Master was Mr. G Russan, Sexton was Mr. Rogers, 3 Sycamore St., and the sidesmen were Messrs W J Ayres, J Harries, W James, F Morse who was also Treasurer, G Morse, M James, W Phillips, J Russan, James Thomas & G Woodley. Easter Communicants numbered 169, baptisms 28, the average in the Sunday School was 107 with 30 teachers, there was also a choir of 25.

1913 the old wooden hut originally used as the Mission Church and being used at that time as a Church Hall was getting a little worse for wear. The Rev. Prosser organised fund-raising for a new Hall and by 1923 the funds had risen to £1200 but to buy the land, build the school, the wall and the railings another £1000 was needed. In his Parochial News letter dated May 1st 1923 the Rev. Prosser (later Archbishop of Wales) called upon all the other Churches to help raise this money at a grand fete to be held in the Market House on July 18th and 19th. This raised £335 18s 11d .

1923 Money was also raised by the people of the area contributing a small sum regularly each week. The account book shows that the largest denomination per week was 6d but the average was 3d. The Church accounts dated 31st December 1923 show that there was still a shortfall of £568 but the money was raised and the new Hall built. The Priest in Charge of Pennar at the time was Rev. E O Phillips and the sidesmen were Messrs J Coldrick, W Davies, J Edden J Harries, T Hill, W James, J John, W R Morse, W Williams, D Harrington, F James, T J Noot, J Williams, C Williams, & J Russan. The organist was Miss Ethel John, choirmaster Mr. J Thomas, and Sexton Mr. Beazley High St. with Mrs Gay and Mrs James appointed as District Visitors to administer the Poor Relief Fund. Numbers in the choir had risen to 52 but the number attending Sunday School was only 95 and there were 220 Easter Communicants.

1924 The old wooden hut which has served Pennar as Church, Church Hall and Sunday School for over forty years, was sold to Mr. A Brown for £18 10s. in 1924. In the same year, the choir stalls were altered to accommodate a larger choir, St John's lent St Patrick's some pews, the organ blower's wages were increased to 8s 6d per quarter and the trees around the Church given by Thomas Meyrick were planted (there were originally two copper beech trees).

The Church Committee Minute book of that year also records the loan of a set of drums to Pennar Regatta and later on the fact that they were never returned.

1924 St Patrick's Church processional Cross and Missal Stand are of particular interest, designed by Mr. Coates Carter, architect for the Church Hall, and exhibited in a design exhibition, they were given to St Patrick's by him on 18th August 1924.

About this time the kneelers, the angels around the altar, and other items were given to St Patrick's on the closing down of the Dockyard Chapel.

1927 gas lighting was introduced while on the Church committee complaints were being made about the "hooligans" who had broken panes of glass in the windows of the new Church Hall.

The flag pole, now overtaken by the Beech tree, was erected in anticipation of the Coronation of Edward VIII.

Part of the grounds of the Church were laid out as a Tennis Court and there was a thriving tennis club and a badminton club using the Hall. The Hall was also used by the School as classrooms.

During the war it was used for civil defence classes and also played a part in providing shelter for the firemen fighting the tank fire blaze. Part of the room underneath the stage was reinforced as an air raid shelter.

1950's there was a Scout group based there, the dances held there are remembered by many, there was a unit of the Girls Friendly Society and this association with young people is carried on as today it is the headquarters of the St Patrick's Guides and Brownies as well as being used by other organisations in the Community.

Pennar Education

Until the creation of the Dockyard the only schools in the area would have been in Pembroke. A Grammar School was established there in 1690 and was housed in part of the old Town Hall (pulled down in 1820). It was a “free” school usually the schoolmasters were clerics and was described as “excellent” in the eighteenth century.

With the new influx of population in the early nineteenth century, there rose a demand for education. Several small private schools were set up including two by what is now Bethany Corner but which used to be Bethany Square.

In the street by the side of the Bethany Chapel, called now Bufferland Terrace, but once known as Barclays Row stood the house of Mr Barclay a well educated man, who had in his younger days given lectures on astronomy and natural philosophy in the principle towns of Great Britain. Here in the back room of his house in which the furniture consisted of three desks, one table, six benches, a small map of the world and a black board, which compared with many of the other schools of the area meant that it was very well equipped, he conducted a school for no more than twenty pupils, mainly the sons of farmers, tradesmen and mechanics. Of course only those whose parents were able to pay the fees could attend.

1847 The Inspectors (State of Education in Wales) report states “the manners of the lads were very rude and they amused themselves by mimicking their master”. Although the Inspector also stated that their reading ability was high and some of the copy books were exceedingly well written and besides the three “Rs” students also studied navigation and astronomy. Mr Barclay also ran a night school five evenings a week for adults at which the average attendance was twelve and the Inspectors report on the educational standard of one of the adults he taught was very favourable.

1847 The other school was held in the back room of the Public house (Caledonian), the furniture consisted of three tables, six chairs, five benches, and a sofa. The School Mistress was the daughter of the innkeeper. The pupils of this school were quite young, mainly the children of tradesmen, but they were able to read part of St Matthews Gospel and their copy books were quite well written considering their age.

1840s the National School closely followed by the British school were built in Pembroke Dock and again pupils who could afford to pay could attend those

In Pennar the free schools where small Sunday schools attached to and organised by the churches and chapels, the main schools were in Pembroke Dock.

1874 a new school was built for Pennar in Treowen Rd by the Borough of Pembroke School Board. It opened on January 5th and there were 29 pupils all of whom had to pay, which could be quite a drain on a poor families budget. The number of pupils soon averaged 70. Attendance was interrupted by pupils having to help earn money by helping in the potato fields, setting gardens, fetching water, (there was no piped water supply in those days and water for the weekly wash and drinking had to be carried from the wells or springs) picking blackberries, and collecting cinders (used for paths). Some children did not attend at all in the summer months, but in spite of all this the Inspector’s report was that those scholars present passed a good examination in the elementary subjects. The writing in the lower standards was particularly good. In 1889 the school, which had been mixed, became girls only, the boys having to go to Albany Square.

1891 The staff in 1891 consisted of the headmistress, one teacher and two pupil teachers; that year education became free, parents no longer had to pay fees.

1901 There were alteration and modifications to the Infants part of the school buildings which caused disruption to the classes.

1904 Headmistress of the Girls school was Mrs M J James assisted by Miss Ruby Gwyther, S E Young, E Jenkins, E Brown, and M Charles. Of the Infants school headmistress was Miss A Lloyd, assisted by Miss W Cullen and M Edwards.

1923 From the time of the building of St Patrick's Church Hall in 1923, till the closing of the opening of the new Junior School in 1970 the hall was utilised by the school as classrooms and as a Hall.

1949 The school remained a girl's school right up till 1949 when it became a Junior Mixed School with boys under 12 being transferred from the Coronation. The first male member of staff actually joined in 1948 the same year that the old gas lighting was replaced. The boys had to cross the road to go to the toilet by the "temporary" class room, the hut now used by Rudd as a Joiners workshop. Originally a cast iron urinal it was replaced in 1944 by a rendered brick urinal. (it backed onto a deep gully leading down to Jacob's Pill and there was a lot of speculation as to whether it drained into this gully rather than into a sewer. I know what we believed, anyway, the smell was terrible)

1956 the new Pennar Infants School was opened in Cross Park .

1959 first Headmaster of the Junior school was appointed.

1970 The Pennar Junior School finally moved out of the old premises in Treowen Rd and into the new ones in Owen St on January 16th 1970.

The old School buildings still retain an association with children as today part of them are used for a Playgroup and family centre.

1928 the Pennar school held jumble sales to raise money for the Boot fund and up until the mid 30's there were many cases of school girls of that school officially recognised by the Education Committee as suffering from malnutrition.

1935 Free School milk came in 1935

Pennar Disease and Disasters.

1850's Pennar from the 1850s seemed to have been hit by several epidemics of infectious diseases.

1853 Cholera which was so severe that a public letter was written on the subject by Lord Palmeston,

1857 Smallpox in 1857,

1866 Cholera struck again in August 1866 spreading throughout Pennar, but is alleged not out of the area because the people of Pennar sealed themselves off.

The first person to die was a man named Peter Morris age 48. The victims had to be buried within twelve hours and such was the rapid spread of the infection that on 29th August 1866 as well as Peter Morris, also buried were Emma Jones age 28, Margaret Griffiths 11 months, and I. Day age 29.

2nd September Thomas Charles Powell age 32 months, Seth John Stephens, age 12 months, and George Jenkins age 12 months were buried. The next day only one,

3rd September William Wilcox age 25 years

5th September Ann Preese age 40

6th September the death toll had again risen, Maria Morgan age 6 years, Anne Stephens age 26 years, and John Ormond age 28 months.

7th September Elizabeth Ormond buried .

8th of September was the worst day with five victims being buried, like all the others in Park St Cemetery by the Curate of Pembroke Dock, Rev. George Edward McHugh, they were Michael Birmingham age 5 years, Mary Williams, age 57, George Davies age 5 months, Elizabeth Price age 75 years and Mary May age 56 years.

10th September Ann Jones age 39, Stephen Morgan age 9 years, and Jane Preese age 59 were buried.

14th Ann Jones age 48 buried

15th John Jones age 72

16th Mary Ann Jones and Fanny Jones both age 14 years

17th Mary Ann Jones age 74 and Elizabeth Vault .

19th Thomas Mabe age 62 and Mary Griffiths age 23 the last two victims.

1867 Scarlet fever raged, it struck again in 1909.

1879/80 Typhoid with over twenty people being affected but fortunately all recovered

The Curate of the time records in the Church Magazine that the problem with the health in Pennar was, that, although these diseases were preventable and that warnings had been given both after the 1853 and the 1866 outbreak, "We would again call attention to the water supply, which is generally admitted to be the viaticum of typhoid fever, and which we hear is in a worse state than ever".

1875 Findley wrote in 1875 of the water supply to the town in general that "save that of the Government dwellings, occupying two or three small streets near the dockyard, and which are supplied from the reservoirs the water supply is furnished by wells in different parts of the town, and by tanks attached to most of the houses. This supply is believed to be adequate to the wants of the community (remarks made by members of the Town Council at a meeting to discuss the sufficiency of the water supply of Pembroke and Pembroke Dock) but it is fairly open to doubt whether it would be found equal to the demands of exceptional dry seasons, which may reasonably be expected, and for which it should be the object of the Town Council to provide".

1892 Smallpox was present, many children, and parents who could, went away, others were re-vaccinated.

With the turn of the century came measles and influenza, the latter was exceptionally severe in 1915 and 1919 when the Baptismal Register for St Patrick's Church records young babies being baptised by the Nurse.

1920s after the closure of the Dockyard, the area was hit with a diphtheria epidemic. The old offices of the Shipbuilding Company by Jacobs Pill being used as an isolation Hospital. After that time these scourges seem to have been less violent, probably because of better health care and an improved water supply.

There were two great disasters which affected the whole of Pennar and which are still talked about, the Ferry disaster of 1889, and 1940/41 with the Tank Fire of 1940 and the Blitz, but there were earlier disasters which caused great consternation.

1830's smuggling was rife as was wrecking in some parts of the county, The Preventative Officers were keen to catch a man called Truscott who they suspected of smuggling and tried to trap him. A quantity of tobacco had been smuggled in to South Cliffs and one of the Preventative Officers, posing as a customer had persuaded Truscott to deliver it to Bentlass. That night Truscott, his friends, the tobacco and Truscott's young son who had just been taken along for the trip were waiting in Pennar Gut near Bentlass, they were approached by a boat load of Preventative Officers, rowing with muffled oars, Mr Larkin in charge.

The Preventive Officer's boat was spotted by Truscott and he and his friends started rowing as fast as possible up river towards Pembroke. The preventive boat was rapidly overhauling them so the young boy jumped out of the boat and tried to swim towards Jacob's Pill.

According to his account at the trial, the mate of the preventative boat shouted three times for him to stop before shooting him in the back of the head and killing him. There was a tremendous outcry throughout Pennar and the whole area, with meetings at Bethany Square, Pembroke and Pembroke Dock. The Preventative Officers had to be escorted to and from Pembroke Town Hall where the trial was held, by Marines, The mate was found not guilty but for his own safety had to be moved from the area.

With the river so close to Pennar it is not surprising that many of the tragedies in the area should be linked to water.

1850 while playing with his friend, John George, Joe Jenkins ducked under water by Jenkins Pill and drowned, passengers on the ferry from Bentlass saw the commotion, the ferryman diverted to the site and a man called Truscott (a relative of the smuggler), a passenger on the ferry, repeatedly dived to try to rescue the boy but when he finally recovered him, the boy could not be revived.

It seems strange today to think that one hundred years ago, the ferry from Bentlass to Pembroke Dock was a major way for the farmer's wives to bring their produce to market at Pembroke Dock. It was also in constant use ferrying workers who lived that side of the water over to the Pennar side from where they would walk over the Barrack Hill to the Dockyard. The ferry was actually owned by the Orielson Estate but the ferryman at the time was a Mr John Jones who had been ferryman for about 35 years.

1889 That day February 8th 1889 he had taken a boat load of women over to Pennar in the morning, which were on their way to market at Pembroke Dock. He had a lad 15 year old lad helping him Henry Gullon from Bankers Row Pembroke (where the Moat House is now) It was late afternoon, getting dusk when the women returned to Pennar ridge, and there was a choppy sea with the tide ebbing against a strong wind. The boat was quite heavily laden with the nine people on board and all their shopping.

Part way across, according a witness, spray broke over the boat and one of the women stood up and moved over to the other side, then a wave struck the boat which started to sink leaving everyone in the icy cold rough water.

All nine on board drowned, they were John Jones, ferryman, Henry Gullon, his assistant, Maria Hird of West Grove, Mary Ann Griffiths, her servant, 13 year old Mary Davies of Bentlass, Mrs Nicholas of Newton and her daughter Hannah, Mrs Jane Harris and Mrs Melville Morris of Brownslade.

The inquest verdict on the ferryman was that the deceased and those with him met their death by the accidental upsetting of the boat.

1940 Some may today remember the second tragedy when on 19th August 1940 three German aircraft attacked the Admiralty fuel tanks at Pennar. Said to be the worst fire in Britain since the greatfire of London

Fighting the fire five firemen were killed and many more injured. Despite having been at war for nearly a year with a strong military presence the area was not prepared. Vernon Scott has described this event graphically in his book Inferno 1940. Pennar was heavily involved many houses were destroyed or damaged, both the School and the Church Hall where occupied by Firemen fighting the fires at the tanks despite the fact that if the Germans attacked either of those buildings there were no Air Raid Shelters at the time although part of the room underneath the stage at the Church hall was reinforced so as to provide some sort of shelter. In fact when the school classes did resume the senior pupils attended in the mornings and the juniors in the afternoon because of lack of Shelters, although a committee had attended the school to consider plans for shelters on September 25th 1939.

Despite several Air Raid alerts the shelters were not completed till February 1941

Another author W L Richards gives a very detailed description of these events in his book Pembrokeshire Under Fire.

There was a also an accident in the defensible barracks in which 19 servicemen were killed during group training on mine disposal.

The old Civil Defence Headquarters opposite Bethany Chapel was purchased by members of the 1st Pembroke Haven Scout Group parents committee and converted under the supervision of Don Brickle into a new headquarters for the Group.

Kyngswode

There are very few early records of land use in the area during the Middle ages unless land came into the direct control of the Crown. This is a small part of the Inquisition into the Estate of Aymer de Valance held on August 20 1324. He as Earl of Pembroke held all of South Pembrokeshire and much of the North although some parts of the estates were still held under the old Welsh laws. Because of the minority of heirs the records have survived for the grange of Kingswood during the early 14 century. From the extent of the land held by the manor it would seem that much of the land which is now Pembroke Dock was part of the manor. These records do not record any land being held by the Paterchurch family who, until the 1360's, are not recorded as holding land of the Earl, or as tenants of a land holder.

I am a “Yardie”. Every day, for a large proportion of my working life, I would walk or cycle along the Dockyard wall past a very old stone tower and through the Dockyard Gates. From a boy, when I explored the site of a ruined building and a plague graveyard, as an apprentice shipwright at Devonport when I worked in my spare time on the St Budoc Chapel site and then under, the supervision of Miss V. Ledger Keeper of Archaeology at Plymouth researched and worked on the Plymton Priory dig, historical research has always been my main interest. The St Budoc site we found was that of a pre Norman Celtic Christian Church with a graveyard. Deserted when a larger church was built in the 14c. Some of the buildings of the settlement had been incorporated into a battlemented farmhouse and there was also a huge tithe barn which had been used up to the 1950's as a store. The Paterchurch tower site and the early drawing by General Adams kept on reminding me of this site and also pre-Norman saints and their disappearing sites elsewhere. Rev George Noakes, when he visited St Patrick's Church Pennar, commented that he was surprised as in the whole of his diocese the modern church at Pennar was the only one dedicated to St Patrick and there was every possibility that St Patrick, like St David, Teilo, and Deniol had studied at Caldy Island. When told about the old name for part of the area as Pater church or Patrick's Church he speculated that there would have been an old Celtic Christian church on the site.

We know from the remains of a church found under Steynton Church dated by Laws as being coeval with the Ogram stone (5or 6 century) and the church found near Brownslade, that the early churches were very small. The Liturgy of St Deniol (St Daniel's Church Pembroke the tower of which shows evidence of wooden floors and fireplaces) An early manuscript believed to have been used in the Bangor area gives us an insight into the life of an early Saint and his settlement. The graveyard found near Brownslade records at least one hundred east west burials without coffins in graves whose sides were lined with stone. Only one had a stone cover and that one, besides the remains, contained a stone slab with a cross inside a circle scratched on it. (E Laws). Nearby is a much larger 14c church.

De Patrick's Church, the name of the early family means “of Patrick's Church” but although I can find no trace of them owning land there I am reminded of the tenants of Castlemartin and Llanphey who took the name of the area in which they lived So I ask myself if there was a Celtic Christian Church on the site giving the area the name, pre-Norman and certainly pre Dockyard. Also as far as I have been able to ascertain there was no real question about the site having been that of a church and it was always accepted as one with its own graveyard until the 1850's when the Dockyard wanted to expand. Yes the members of Arch Camb after they had been shown around the Dockyard and entertained royally stated it was domestic building but looking at their program for that day (Arch Camb 1851) would not have been able to really examine the building they just did not have time. The Dockyard was the town, they planned it, most of the leaders of the town owed their position to the Dockyard. St John's Church, the National School, the local Market all Dockyard supported and it was the main source of employment. Who was going to say a word against them.

Paterchurch tower and ruins sketch by Gen Adams 1811

In Monkton, when remains were found under the Church floor they were reburied in consecrated ground. In Pembroke Dock they were sacked up and reburied without any sort of service or prayer in unconsecrated ground although a marker was supposed to have marked the site I could not find it and was told by an old historian that the contractor had destroyed it when the gas works for the Dockyard was built. He also said that the contractor had no luck as his children drowned and the Dockyard was unlucky after 1852.

As regards the contractors children they died in 1831 before the new extension was built.

2013 5th July Acc/to Western Telegraph Newspaper Pembrokeshire County Council are putting Pater Church Tower a Grade 1 listed building up for sale

Acc. to Mrs Peters (History of Pembroke Dock 1905) The 1st Earl of Pembroke, Gilbert de Clare granted Pater Church of Patrick's Church to the Commandery of the Knights of St John, who were established at Slebech, They are credited with having built a church and outbuildings on the land for the purpose of holding missions for seamen.

I have research the records of the property of Slebech Commandery and the Knights of St John by J Rogers Rees Arch Camb 1897,98,99. in which he lists the donations to the Commandery from its foundation and could not find the donation she mentions. Roger de Clare made several donations c1158 but there does not appear any that could be linked to the immediate area.

The History of Pembroke Dock Web site has a copy of a map not dated but pre 1814 which shows the Paterchurch buildings and one marked as a chapel

In his booklet "The Parish of Pembroke Dock" Silas T Phillips (1898) recorded that when the Dockyard walls were built human remains in considerable quantities were unearthed. They had all been buried in regular order and were removed to a neighbouring field

He quoted from Archaeologia Cambrensis Vol. VI 1851 which also stated that David de Patrick Church had a residence here and that (maybe quoting Fenton)

"his daughter and sole heiress Ellen, about the 1st of Henry VI married John Adams of Buckspool, of whose posterity in the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary and Elizabeth served in Parliament for the town of Pembroke".

The Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments report Paterchurch

The Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments was set up in the early 1900's by Royal Warrant and included among its members:- Sir John Rees, Professor of Celtic Studies Oxford University; Edward Anwyl, Professor of Celtic Studies Aberystwyth; Robert Carr Bosanquet Professor of Classical Archaeology University of Liverpool; Robert Hughes President Cardiff Cymmrodorion Society; Griffith Hartwell Jones Doctor of Divinity Rector of Nutfield; William Edwin Llewellyn Morgan; Hon Lt Col; Evan Vincent-Evans, Sec. Honourable Society of Cymmrodorion; Henry Owen, Dr of Civil Law, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries; Sir Evan Vincent Evans; Lt Col. Joseph Alfred Bradney C.B.; Sir John Morris-Jones Master of Arts, Professor of Welsh, University North Wales.

They visited the Paterchurch site in May 1923 just before the closure of the Royal Dockyard.

I personally am not qualified to disagree with any of their findings (or local tradition) and so just attach their report.

The introduction to the their report (page li) states

Paterchurch

“It is gratifying to be able to recognise in a sadly debased ruin the tower of a church of which only the name has survived. It may not prove uninteresting to set forth briefly the manner of its recovery and identification.

In examining the collection of watercolours and pencil sketches of Mr Charles Norris, a resident of Tenby between the years 1790 -1840, for the purposes of the present volume, we came upon a charming sketch of the entrance to Milford Haven which embraced an view of the land now occupied by the royal dockyard of Pembroke. The only habitation then on the site was a small residence which appeared to consist of or to contain within its grounds a square tower of Pembrokeshire type. Apart from a brief reference in Fenton's Tour (p 274) 1810 in which he speaks of it as “a fort, a work left unfinished” and the inference from the place name, the Commissioners possessed no information of the previous existence of an antiquity here, but Mr Norris's sketch appeared to warrant further enquiries. The Lords of the Admiralty gave a cordial assent to our visiting the dockyard, and were so good as to furnish us with the following extract from their Departmental records:-

Extract from Admiralty Records

“In consequence of the passing of this Act 30 Geo. III, c. 5a, section 2a 26, of an application from the Hon. C. F. Grenville, on behalf of Sir William Hamilton for a lease of the land to dig stone, the property was ordered to be surveyed, this was done in November 1790. An enlarged plan of the ruins of the Paterchurch Mansion is given on the other side which together with the sketch copied from the original in the possession of the Adames' family made by Lt. General Adams about 15 years after the Survey, gives a fairly accurate idea of this house.

Skulls and other human bones have been dug up in the neighbourhood of the Tower which the uninitiated have taken as a decided proof that the tower was originally part of a church. One writer, referring to the discovery of skeletons says, " it evidently indicates that a Monastic establishment had at some early era existed there, the word Llanreath given to an adjoining hill, proving the fact; Llan meaning Church in the Welsh language."

A glance at the plan and at the parish register of St. Mary s Pembroke in which parish the property is situated places the question beyond doubt; the skeletons were unquestionably those of extinct Adam's' or Patrick churches, a number of whom must have been buried in the family churchyard situated either within or close to the building marked as ruins of a Chapel. The entry in the St. Mary's register in the year 1731 speaks for itself and is as follows:-(Indecipherable, supposed to be January) 11th Buried ye son Rogar of Mr. William Adams in their own Burying Ground.”

“With the exception of the name Paterchurch, the Knowledge and recollection of the church so styled seems to have past completely from the minds of men; it had vanished, and left not a wrack behind. The story of its re-discovery had been set forth in the introduction to the present volume, so that it is unnecessary to do more than to record its archaeological history and present appearance.

A little over a century ago Richard Fenton, in his tour through Pembrokeshire (p274)(1810) spoke of it thus:-

“Descend with the tide and leaving Lawrenny to the right, proceed down the haven (of Milford) as far as the fort, a work left unfinished, to excite a reproach that it ever was begun, and to remain a monument of the scandalous waste of public money The spot on which it stands is called Pater or Patrick Church and was purchased by the Crown for the above purpose, of the late Sir William Owen, being an inexhaustible bed of limestone, of which great hewn blocks the fort was built. Above the flat on which it stands, under a gentle rising are the remains of an ancient mansion, formally the residence of David de Patrickchurch, whose daughter and sole heiress, Elen, about the first (year) of Henry VI married John Adams esq of Buckspool, and brought him a large dowry, the whole of the peninsula from Cosheston to Pennarmouth."

Fenton's narrative does not make it clear if he mistook the tower which he mentions for the ruins of a small military structure, or whether he regarded it as a family mansion built after the style of a medieval peel castle, and he does not seem to have been sufficiently impressed by its appearance to pay a visit or to make enquiry respecting about it.

Architecturally, the present remains consist only of the tower of the church, and this has been subjected to such indifferent treatment that it is evident it owes its continued existence solely to the strength of its walls, and the uses to which its different floors could be turned as store rooms. It is at present so clothed with ivy that the stonework is completely hidden on all sides except one, on which can be traced the now closed entrance which led from the tower into the nave of the church. The tower is thus shown to have stood on the north side of the edifice. Nave and Chancel had probably no structural division, and it is not likely that there was a aisle or transeptal projection on either side. The roofing of the nave probably started immediately below the line of corbels which the photographs show to have extended above the doorway. The tower stairs occupy a turret which is placed at the north-eastern angle of the tower; the stairway opens from the interior of the tower. The ground storey is vaulted after the regular fashion of the Pembrokeshire church towers, and for rude ribs of masonry spring from different corners of the chamber to a central boss. Clumsy intermediate ribs have been added, doubtless to strengthen the floors when the tower was made into a store. The first and second storeys, also rudely vaulted were added at the same time and for the same reason. At some period after the church had ceased to be used as a sacred building, the tower archway was built up as will be noticed in our photograph of the sketch made by Mr Adams the then occupier in the year 1811. Upon the ground once occupied by the church itself, and around three sides of the tower, various premises connected with the work of the dockyard have been erected, but on the east and south-east the land has not been built upon. This spot is still known as the Cemetery, and it is authoritatively stated in the letter quoted below that burials have been met with during trenching operations. – Visited 27th May 1923.

Historically, the little church may be conjectured to have been connected with Monkton Priory, and to have followed the fortunes of that house. Monkton itself, being affiliated to the French house of Seez, was taken into the king's possession at every violation of the peace with France- the last occasion in the reign of Henry V- and its inappropriate churches would meet with the same fate. Placed at the entrance to the great haven of Milford, which was well known to French sailors, Paterchurch, as a position in enemy hands, would have been a a menace and a danger, so thjat it may have been desirable to suppress it altogether. At any rate, quite a century before the dissolution of the smaller monasteries, it had passed into the possession of a grantee named Adams, who probably was a newcomer in the county ((footnote) The first Adams to appear in the public records is Henry, who was sheriff of the county in 1587; but the Welsh genealogist, Lewis Dwnn, provides the family with a pedigree, which starts with a John Adams, who is said to have married Ellen, daughter and heir of David de Paterchurch, c1422.

It is possible that the small estate of Paterchurch passed into the family of Adams to the heiress of an earlier possessor, though the parties to and date of such marriage cannot be identified.

It is equally probable that the church and its endowments were purchased by a local landowner at the dissolution of Monkton Priory.

The family increased its prestige, but the only member who appears to have risen to local eminence was Sir Nicholas Adams, whose inquisition post mortem(Pub. Rec. Office: Chancery Series II, vol 446 no 63) certifies that he held the manor of Paterchurch.

At the annual meeting of the Cambrian Archaeological Association, at Tenby, in the year 1851, the following communication from Sir Thomas Pasley, Captain Superintendent of Pembroke dockyard, was read:-

“During the progress of the excavations in 1844, by workmen employed by Mr, Henderson, the contractor for the extension of the new boundary wall of the dockyard, number of skeletons were found deposited about three feet below the surface of a meadow; near Pater Church. These relics appear to have been buried without coffins, as no vestige of any, either wood or stone, could be discovered. On being exposed to view, they were found lying with their heads towards the east, surrounded with stones rudely placed on their edges, and arranged in a coffin-like form, but without a slab either underneath or above them. Twenty-eight skulls had already been found. One of the most perfect skeletons measured six feet four inches from the ankle-bone to the crown of the head. Many speculations were indulged in as to the origin of this cemetery, which was evidently of great antiquity; it is however not improbable that, from the tower still standing amongst the ruins in good preservation, it was the burial-ground attached to some monastic institution. It is to be regretted that neither history nor tradition throws any light on this interesting subject. All that can now be collected is that neither history nor tradition throws any light on this interesting subject. All that can now be collected is that the ruins of Pater or Patrick Church, were formally the residence of David de Patrickchurch whose daughter and sole heiress, Ellen, about the 1st of Henry VI married John Adams esq. of Buckspool and brought him a large dowry (the whole of the peninsula from Cosheston to Pennarmouth), several of whose posterity, in the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary and Elizabeth, served in Parliament for the town of Pembroke.”

The members of the Association visited Pater during the meeting, when it is said that “their attention being naturally directed first to antiquarian researches, they first examined the ancient tower which was unhesitatingly pronounced to be a domestic , and not an ecclesiastical building” (Arch Camb 1851 II, ii, 320 and 322).

(They had also visited Pembroke and therefore did not have much time at Pembroke Dockyard were they were entertained royally.)

A word as to the name. This has varied between Paterchurch and Patrick-church according , as it would appear, to the opinion that the patron of the earlier chapel was Patrick or Peter. The style Pater (pronounced Patter) is a possible derivation from Patrick”

NB I have checked the early Slebech records, the records of the inquest on the property of the Earl of Pembroke 1323 and of the property of Monkton 1377 at the second confiscation of the alien priory by Richard II but without trace.

About 1889 further burials were uncovered by the Works Department inside the yard but it was recorded that exposure to the atmosphere reduced the remains, with the exception of the teeth, to dust although there was a suggestion that some remains were stored in the tower pending disposal.

The discovery of the burials had gave rise to the conjecture that the tower was part of a religious building but this was discounted in 1852 when it was reported that the tower had a vaulted structure with heavy ribs and was domestic in character. Could this have been to prevent an outcry about the buildings, which, apart from the tower, were pulled down by the Admiralty soon after, even though the Admiralty records of the survey of 1790 actually state that there was a burial ground there and that the building was at that time marked on their map as ruins of a Chapel.

More bodies were unearthed in the extensions to the Dockyard in 1854. These were reburied on what is now the site of South Pembrokeshire Hospital and marked with a stone. It is not known what happened to the bones unearthed in the rebuilding of the 1890's except that it is believed that for a time they were stored in one of the rooms of the tower.

The tower, which stands within the old dockyard boundaries on the southern shore of Milford Haven, is approximately 35 feet high. The walls tapering from 4 feet to 2 feet 6 inches thick, and from the top there is a magnificent view to the west of much of the Haven. At the north-east corner of the tower within the walls there is a spiral staircase. Each floor of the tower is made up of one room accessed, from the spiral staircase. The first and second floors have a fireplace in one corner. The flues rise clockwise to two chimneys at roof level and which originally rose above the parapets. Above the stone vaulting of the second floor there is room for another wooden floor. This is very much like the interior of St Daniels Church where the tower has rooms and the remains of two fireplaces plus evidence that there were previously wooden floors. The rooms are quite well lit quite small, about eight feet by nine and a half but could obviously be lived in

Fortifications

Since the 16 century, there had been interest in fortifying the Haven and various plans had been proposed with the building of the two blockhouses at the mouth of the Haven in 1580 as the first practical scheme to be started. George Owen drew up plans in 1595 but these were not implemented.

In 1756 Lt Col. Bastide, Director of Engineers surveyed the area and advised that a series of forts be constructed around the Haven. One of the sites suggested was Paterchurch. These were modified due to the expense and after a further survey by Lt Col Justley Watson; three forts were agreed of which one was to be built at the site of Paterchurch.

In 1759 there was another survey of the area by Captains Herriot and Walker. It was proposed to be purchased for His Majesty's Service at Paterchurch point, land "for fortifying the Interior Part of Milford Haven, according to Colonel Skinners design

The original area of land required by the Board of Ordinance was 63 acres which included the garden, the orchard, a wooded area, the house and farm yard. This land had been acquired by Sir Arthur Owen who had purchased the whole Paterchurch estate of 230 acres from a group of people over the years 1716 to 1718 for £2518. There had been problems with the original purchase as there appear to have been conflicting claims of ownership. The Board of Ordinance purchased the required area from from Sir John Owen

The tower and ruins were originally outside the fenced in area of the Yard but were eventually incorporated into the dockyard and later the crumbling walls of the old ruined mansion were pulled down and the tower left standing. In 1832 a plan was made for the Department of Ordnance showing the ruins.

In the late nineteenth century there was a back wall, about three feet from the northern wall of the tower itself and which may have been joined on to the stone staircase. It is also similar in structure and appearance to the Old Rectory at Angle. The dimensions of the building and measurements suggest that the tower could have been on the north eastern corner of the house,

General Alexander Adams. may have been responsible for the addition of the oriole window on the south side of the first floor, illustrated in the 1923 Royal Commission Report. It is not shown in the in the water colour sketch of a similar view made by Charles Norris in 1812. It could however have been added later by Edward Laws, who was the occupier at the time of the tithe apportionment's in 1841.

Little is known about the origins of the Paterchurch estate before 1422 but it is alleged that in 1422 the estate of Paterchurch, said by Fenton to have stretched originally from Pennar Point to Cosheston came into the possession of John Adam(e)s of Buckspool through his marriage to Alson or Elen the daughter of David of Patrickchurch or Paterchurch. Little is known of the antecedents of David of Patrickchurch, though records of this family have been traced back as far as 1247.

(Henry Owen in his Old Pembroke Families 1902 p76 gives only a passing mention three times of the Paterchurch family but no details at all and only mentions the name of the Adam's family once)

Close Roll 49 Edward III m 3d (Cal pp286 7 8)

Record of proceedings before the council, and reciting the licence given by the king on 20 February in the forty third year of the reign, to John de Hastynge, then earl of Pembroke, to make a feoffment to particular persons to whom he would, and to their heirs of the castle and county of Pembroke, the castles and lordships of Tynby and Kilgarren and the commote of Oysterlowe in Wales, which are held in chief, and to such persons to have seisen of the premises and give the name to the said earl and to the heirs of his body, with remainder after his death for lack of such issue to the king and his heirs; also licence given by the king to the said earl to alien in fee simple to whatsoever persons he would all other his castles, lordships, manors, and lands, with the fees and advowsons which he had in demesne or in reversion in England or Wales, being held in chief, the manor of Asshle, co Norfolk, excepted and of such persons to take again such estate as he pleased, namely, to himself alone or jointly with other in fee simple, fee tail or for life, and to entail, give or grant the same to whom he pleased with remainders as he should appoint at his own will and pleasure; and reciting that by virtue of that licence the said earl by charter enfeoffed Walter Amyas, John Abraham, John Donn, John Prat, clerks, Ralph de Walsham and Thomas Criklade and their heirs, as well of the said castle and county of Pembroke, the castles and lordships of Tynby and Kilgarren and the commote of Oysterlowe as of all other his said castles, lordships, manors, lands, fees and advowsons held by him in chief in England and Wales which he had in demesne and in reversion, the manor of Asshle excepted, and also of all other his manors, lordships, lands, fees and advowsons in England and Wales not held in chief which he had in demesne or in reversion; reciting also that the said feoffees after demised to the said earl for a term of five years beginning 20 March 43 Edward III, as well the castle and county of Pembroke, the castle and lordship of Tynby and Kilgarren and commote of Oystrelowe, as other the castles, lordships, manors, lands, fees and advowsons aforesaid, the manor of Asshle excepted, and that within that term he (as John de Hastynge, earl of Pembroke, lord of Weisford and Bergeveny) made a surrender to them of his estate in the premises, a confirmation of their estate, and a quit claim with warranty to them, their heir and assigns (a French text follows), dated at his inn at London, 15 April, 46 Edward III; and further reciting that after upon his passage to Gascony the said earl caused a schedule to be written making mention of those feoffments, and specially requesting the said feoffees truly to perform certain his wills , and to dispose of his castles, lordships and lands according to the form of that schedule, causing the same to be sealed with one seal of his in form of a letter patent and closed up, sealing the same when closed, with the ring on his finger, and sending the same so closed and sealed up from the sea to the said feoffees; and reciting that now in the quinzaine of Michaelmas, 49 Edward III, the said earl being dead over sea, certain of the said feoffees, namely, the said Walter, John Donne, John Plat and Ralph de Walsham, came before the Council at Westminster and there delivered the said schedule closed as aforesaid, which was before the Council opened, and there viewed and understand (French text follows), whereby the said earl gave the said feoffees knowledge of his will, charging and requiring them, if he should die over sea before returning to England, of the issues of his said lands to levy and pay his debts, in case full execution of his will might not be by his executors made of his chattels, and then in case he should die without an heir of his body to amortise the manor of Tovenham to the church of St Paul, in order to keep his anniversary every year and to find twelve wax candles throughout the year, burning at reasonable times about his tomb, and if there should be any impediment wherefore the said manor might not be amortised, to sell the same and pay the money thereof arising to the profit of the said church and the "Chartehous" in London, for the purposes aforesaid, charging them also in case he should die without issue to enfeof the king of the castle and county of Pembroke, the castle and lordships of Tyneby and Kilgaren and the commote of Oisterlowe, and to give to his cousin, Sir William Beauchamp, and to his heirs for ever, all other the castle, manors, lands, etc., in England and Wales, which the said feoffees had by his feoffment, and the reversion of the castle, town and lordship of Bergev[eny], and of all the manors, lordships, lands, etc., held in dower by Dame Mary de Seint Pawl, in England and Wales, upon condition that he shall bear the whole arms of the said earl, and shall prevail with the king (face tant eidees nostre Seigneur le roi). That he may bear the name of earl of Pembroke to him and his heirs, and if he will no or may not do so, to make a feoffment and grant of the premises to his cousin, Sir William de Clynton, upon the same conditions, this schedule bearing the date in the same earl's inn in London, 5 May 1372; whereupon the said feoffees there professed that they ever were and are ready to their power truly to fulfil all the wills and conditions in that schedule contained and to do nought contrary to the earl's will; and the said William Beauchamp, after appearing in person before the Council in presence of the said feoffees, averred, in so far as the matter therein contained concerned him, that he was ready for himself and his heirs to perform the same according to the earl's will namely to bear the whole arms of the said earl and to make suit with the king and his heirs that he and his heirs should have, receive and bear the name of earl of Pembroke in case the said earl should die without issue, praying the king and council and the said feoffees to keep whole and unimpaired the estate and right of him the said William and of his heirs therein; but because the said earl dying over seas has an heir of his body, who is now within age as the council is assured, it is determined that the king shall have the wardship of the said castles, manors, lordships, lands, etc., until the lawful age of the said heir, saving to Anne, who was the wife of the said earl, her dower of the same.

, [enfeoffment was the deed by which a person was given land in exchange for a pledge of service. This mechanism was later used to avoid restrictions on the passage of title in land by a system in which a landowner would give land to one person for the use of another]

(My Own Thoughts - were the De Paterchurches in service to the Earls as landless retainers but living at Paterchurch which was being used as a look-out and was land apportioned to them at the time of this will.)

1790 According to Hon. C F Greville, who tried to lease the site to extract limestone "The house has neither roof, door nor windows; the wind and the thieves have been so diligent.

The building was used for the storage of corn belonging dockyard workers in 1818.

Much of the ruins were pulled down in 1854 and the tower left, one room of which was used as a pattern makers shop. Later a small outbuilding was re-roofed and used as a plumbers shop. (It was in this plumber's shop used by the Works dept. that I was shown pieces of bone, a tobacco tin containing old coins and harness buckles and broken knife blade all of which had "turned up" around the Paterchurch remains. When I said I thought they ought to be in a museum it was pointed out that the "bosses" would not like it.)

Up to 1844

Alongside of Pater Church was a two roomed cottage occupied by Ann Davies who it is said sold beer and biscuits.

After marrying into the Paterchurch family the Adams' established their main residence at Paterchurch, and remained there until the end of the seventeenth century Several members of the family were politically active in the area

1601 Adams Nicholas 1601 was also an MP for the Borough He had studied at Jesus College and was a barrister-in-law of the Middle Temple At the Inquisition Post Mortem, after Nicholas's death in 1628, it was said that Henry had seized in his demesne as of feoff and in one capital messuage called Paterchurch in the parish of St Mary's Pembroke and also owned other land in the county including Buckspool The estates that had been joined at the marriage of the Adams family and the Paterchurch family in 1422 where still in the family possession two hundred years later In 1628 the properties were calculated as providing an annual value of £34 9s 4d Approximately half of this sum came from the value of the "capital messuage of Paterchurch" and other property in the parish of St Mary's which had an annual value of £17 13s 8d Adams Nicholas was mayor of Pembroke in 1603, 1608, 1614 and 1627 and married Powell Elizabeth daughter of Powell Morgan He was no stranger to controversy as he was a strong supporter, in 1605, of Perrot Sir James of Haroldston against Canon Sir Thomas

Elizabeth and Nicholas had a son

1608 Adams William 1608 who was 20 years old when his father died in 1628 and he inherited the estates During the Civil War the estate was badly affected and suffered substantial losses It would appear that William Adams supported the Parliamentary side and tried to claim compensation for the damage to his property which included Paterchurch On August 19th 1646 he brought a petition to the House of Lords stating that "When the enemy (Royalists) were in the County, he voluntarily gave way for firing divers of his houses in the suburbs of Pembroke He was afterwards obliged to take refuge with his wife and child in Pembroke and the enemy fired his houses and corn and drove away all his cattle" There was a certificate attached from Laugharne Major General and Poyer, John attesting to his fidelity and great losses The petition was recommended to the House of Commons for compensation but it is not known how much compensation, if any was paid

1650 Adams William died about 1650 and the estates were inherited by his son

1670 Adams Nicholas The Property must have been rebuilt because it is known that Nicholas lived in it and paid on seven hearths Hearth Tax
The first wife of Nicholas Adams was Bowen Frances daughter of Bowen Rhys of Upton Castle and they had a son,

1655 Adams Rice or Rees c1655 born

1691 Adams David 1691 died before that date,

1691 Adams Frances 1691 was alive when her father died

After the death of his first wife, Frances, Nicholas married Lort Hester, daughter of Lort Sir Roger and they had a son Adams Roger

As a marriage settlement to provide for any children of the second marriage, Nicholas split the Buckspool and Holyland estates from Paterchurch. Thus after the death of Nicholas land that had been part of the Family estate since 1422 was divided (in 1628 whole estate was only worth £34 9s 4d annually, Paterchurch and St Mary's parish property £17 13s 8d annually)

1691 Adams Roger son of the second marriage, who inherited the Buckspool and Holyland estate was Commissioner of Subsidies in 1692 and in 1695-6 and Commissioner of Land Tax in 1705 He married Skyrme Jane daughter of Skyrme William of Llawhaden and was Mayor of Pembroke in 1695 He died in 1708

When Nicholas died his eldest son Adams Rice brought a Bill of Complaint against the Gwynnes, who were the guardians of his step brother Roger In this complaint he estimated that the whole estate, including Buckspool and Holyland as well as Paterchurch brought in a clear income of £200 per annum (but in 1628 only worth £34 9s 4d annually). Rice was experiencing financial problems, due in part to bad harvests but also because of the marriage settlement of his father, a considerable portion of the income of the old estate went to his stepbrother. He still occupied the Paterchurch estate but had been raising a series of short term loans using parts of the estate as security. The Paterchurch estate consisted of the tower, the house and other buildings including a farmhouse together with land around and some neighbouring properties.

1687 Adam Rice borrowed £650 from Meare, Margaret who was his tenant at East Llanion using the property at East Llanion, Imble, Furzy Close and Cuckoos Wood as security for a period of twenty years.

1689 Adam Rice borrowed another £200 from her for 72 acres around Paterchurch Margaret Meares died in 1690, her heir was Owen John and Rice borrowed more from him

1696 Adam Rice owed £350 on a £700 penalty bond which been given to cover some of the arrears and interest that were outstanding on the loans

1697 Adam Rice's debts totalled £1831 4s and he was indicted in the Court of Great Sessions He and his wife entered into an indenture of lease and release of 230 acres of the estate with Gwynne Richard for £2,100 on October 2nd 1697 and after the debts were paid off Rice received £268 16s The estate in the indenture consisted of -

“All that capital messuage tenement and lands with appurtenances commonly called and known by the name of Paterchurch and all of those closes fields and parcels of land commonly called and known by the several names of the Hill Yards The Great Park alias Great Cow Park the water park

1698 Adams Rice died at Paterchurch in June 1698 and in his will he anticipates at least £500 from the sale of the real estate He appeared to still own Imble(?), Cuckoos Wood John Daniell, West Lanion and/or Eastermost House Hobbs William and Ferry Hill Whelling Nicholas but he had used these lands as security. The amount he had borrowed was due to be repaid before November 1707 to Meare Margaret and Owen John. Gwynne Richard trustee of that part of the estate inherited by his stepbrother Adams Roger was supposed to pay off the debts using the funds from the sale of the 230 acres of land to redeem for Rice Adams. By the time of Adams Rice death in 1698, Gwynne Richard had not paid off the debts as agreed.

1701 Adams Elizabeth brought a writ against Lloyd Hugh and his wife Lloyd Joan in November 1701 for sitting and kneeling in a seat that went with the "demesne, messuage and lands called Llanion", in St Mary's Church Pembroke At the time the Lloyds were the tenants of the Property which was still part of the Paterchurch estate

1702 Gwynne Richard died in 1702 without paying off the debts and in 1718, £898 12s was paid to Owens, George, son of Owens, John, by Gwynne Thomas There was then an indenture passing the remainder of the estate of 230 acres (excluding East Llanion, Imble, Furzy Close and Cuckoos Wood etc) to Owen Sir Arthur

Old buildings and features in the area pre 1812

Paterchurch Farm situated on the North side of Barrack Hill then known as Patrick's Hill facing the Dockyard Gates on the north side of what is now Victoria Rd Paterchurch Farm was occupied in 1812 by Mr. Francis White whose family had occupied it from 1776

On the Top of Barrack Hill was a hedge running to Llanreath, separating the flat top from the sloping ground. Flat top was called Redwood

There was a cottage on the site of the Fortified Barracks occupied by a haulier called William Connick, Pennar (old) Farmhouse occupied by a Family called Price in 1667 then by 1670 the Ferriors.

Bierspool on old Maps Bayards Pool very old Farmhouse had a dovecote built of Limestone. Pre 1600 demolished 1970's

Nearby was the toll house built in the 1830's

Llanion House

The former house stood to the north of Pembroke near Biers Pool farm, and the inlet on the nearby coast called Lanion Pill. An early medieval Welsh manuscript records that at 'Llonyon yn Penvro' beehives and swarms of bees were kept, giving rise to the proverb 'o heid Llonyon'. Another manuscript compiled in 1600-19, mentions the family of Bennet, the last of whom was Hugh, There were diverse knightes, as is said, of the Benetts, and their mansion house was now a decayed house at Munston, and they were lords of Mirian, Bernards Pools in Landian alias Laniell (Lanion) near Pembroke and in diverse other places in Pembrokeshire.

The last of the Benetts had three daughters and heiresses: 'the one married James ap Eynon of Kenerth, of whom Mores ap Owen is descended and inherited about 50 pound rent by that descent; the other married Bowen of Roblinston who hath the manor of Llanien; and Lutterell is heire to another daughter, and all three have lands in Merriam'.

For some years Llanion formed part of the estate of the Meares family. George Meares gent was at Llanion in 1665 and five years later was assessed at four hearths. Edward Byam, an Antiquan merchant, finally settled at Llanion

The Holcombe family occupied Llanion for a few years in the period 1751-63. It then passed to the Meyrick's who lived there occasionally. In 1786 J. F. Meyrick, Esq., is described as owner-occupier of Lanion, and the land let to Thomas Kinaston. However, by the first decade of the next century it had fallen into decay. Fenton informs us in 1811. Lanion, a seat of John Meyrick Esq., till of late years almost constantly inhabited by a succession of different tenants, temporary residents in the county, but now unroofed and suffered to fall into decay, as Bush, his principal family residence lies so near in a situation much more commanding than the other, though in some respects inferior in point of beauty'. Rees, writing in 1815 describes it as 'now in ruins'.

The Parish of Pembroke Dock – Silas T Phillips 1898

Within high walls and surrounded by a belt of trees stood formerly the mansion of the family of the Meyrick family of Bush, Pembroke and Apley Castle Shropshire.

There is some reason for believing that the land at one time was a possession of the See of Llandaff and it may be that Llanion is but a corruption of Llan Ioan (John's Church). Perhaps successive Bishops of Llandaff felt it incumbent upon them to maintain a priest and chapel on this remote corner of the episcopal estate – no trace remains of a chapel if it ever existed.

1905 the author Mrs. Stuart Peters wrote, 'to the east of Bierspool may be seen the ruined walls of Llanion House, the original country seat of the Meyrick family. Lord Nelson was sometimes a guest at this old house, and it is said that once or twice he was accompanied there by Lady Hamilton.' --- It must have been very draughty as the house was in disrepair by this time and there is no actual record of either Nelson or Lady Hamilton visiting this side of the Haven.

1846 On June 5th 1846 an uncoffined skeleton was dug up in what was Llanion Park.

(Neither John Hogg [Lost in Time 2010] nor I could find a drawing of the house or a plan although we both searched. I did visit the site and see the remains of what I suspected was the House but they were very scanty)

The narrow footpath from Water St to Front St is a right of way for vehicles, being a continuation of the old parish road branching off from what is now King William St. The road originally led from the town across the site of the Railway Goods Yard (where a Lime Kiln once stood) coming out near the Gas works at the back of Mr. George Thomas's mineral water factory, then on to the lower road, the exit being a little to the west side of Bierspool Farm.

On the site of Mr. Elford's Sawmills formerly stood a thatched dwelling house known as Foreshore House

The Beginning

1812 A disagreement in 1812 over the exorbitant price being demanded for the Milford site resulted in the Navy Board seeking land for a dockyard elsewhere on the Milford Haven Waterway. Master shipwright Mr. William Stone, of Plymouth, gave a favourable report on land at Pater Church Point, part of which was already owned by the Government's Board of Ordnance. They agreed to sell the 20 acres four fields, for £3,000. The sale was completed on January 7th. 1813, and later a further 28 acres including a stream, were bought for £5,500. Acc/to Mrs Peters (see below I think this was the land sold by Mr Meyrick

1810 Mr. William Stone (Master Shipwright) surveyed the area and in October 1810 reported on the suitability of Paterchurch Point.

1813 March 10th Mr. Meyrick accepted £3000 for four fields to the east of and adjoining the Government Land. 20 acres approx.

1814 Jan 20th Ordnance Dept. surrendered 39 acres of land to the Admiralty

1814 April 28th The Admiralty purchased 20 acres and a stream of water from Mr. Meyrick for £5500 and took possession on June 7th

1822 The Admiralty purchased 37 acres 3 roods 29 perches of land from Mr. Meyrick. This land consisted of part of Paterchurch Farm and the Farmhouse tenanted by Mr. Francis White

1830 the Yard was extended, The Admiralty received 13 acres of land from the Ordnance Dept. and gave them the whole of the land purchased in 1822.

There were no roads into the area the main access being by sea although there was a track from the hamlet of Pennar running from the old Farm house up what is now Gay's lane straight across Military Rd and down the little lane directly opposite up King's Lane and from there it used to go , before the Defensible Barracks was built, across the Barrack Hill This track joined, at the old Farmhouse, the track which connected Pennar with Pembroke. There was also another track which linked the Pembroke with Pembroke Ferry and there was a track from that which ran past Beirspool, King William's Way, what is now the bottom of Water's St., then on to the bottom of Meyrick St., where there was a stream running down from the High St Ridge, along what is now Front St and then on the Paterchurch complex.

According to Mrs Peters and numerous other writers

The harbour at Milford Haven had been extolled by no less an authority than Admiral Lord Nelson himself. When negotiations to establish a Dockyard at nearby Milford Haven failed, the Navy looked elsewhere and purchased land at Paterchurch, with the ambition of building the only Royal Dockyard in Wales.

Nearly 50 acres of land was bought from the Meyrick estate for £8000 and work began apace, with a low paling fence run around the site and a frigate, Lapwing, being run ashore as offices.

So began an illustrious history of shipbuilding for the Royal Navy, with over 260 ships (including 4 Royal Yachts) constructed in 112 years. The development of permanent facilities in the yard, such as slipways, offices and workshops, continued alongside the building of housing for the workforce and by 1831 the town had a population of more than 3000. By the 1870s wooden ships had given way to Iron warships and slipways and workshops had to be extended to accommodate ships of up to 14 000 tons such as Repulse in 1892.

For well over a century the name of Pembroke Dock was synonymous with the Royal Navy. Ships built at the town's Royal Dockyard served in every corner of the world.

Yet, when Vice Admiral of the Blue, Lord Horatio Nelson, sailed up the Milford Haven Waterway in the summer of 1802, the area now occupied by the town was all green fields.

Nelson would have seen the Government battery at Pater Point, the old mansion of Paterchurch, a few farms and cottages and the roofless home of the Meyrick family at Llanion.

Within 12 years, however, all was to be transformed. After the negotiations by the Admiralty to buy the land at nearby Milford -where warships were already being built for His Majesty's Navy – broke down. A new site was selected and the move saw the birth of Pembroke Dock,

According to Findlay

“In 1812, a misunderstanding took place between the ' Government and the late Honourable R F Grenville proprietor of the land at Milford, where there was a dockyard. The consequence was that Mr. Stone the master shipwright, whose observant eye had discovered the advantageous situation of Pembroke Dock for a naval arsenal of the largest recommended it to the Government, who on surveys being made took advantage of the proposition, and, in 1814 planted the nucleus of the present splendid establishment”

He goes on to say

“Since that period, as its resources became more and more available, it has continually been extending its efficiency until arriving at its present momentous magnitude; and it not rivals, but in most instances exceeds all other maritime magazines that stud our sea-girt isle, in natural advantages, as well as in cheapness of shipbuilding It is said that King William IV., when visiting it in the position of Lord High Admiral, remarked many peculiar points of superiority, “it must become of the utmost advantage to the British nation””.

What do the actual documents say

“WE beg leave most humbly to recommend to Your Royal Highness that Your Royal Highness will be graciously pleased to establish, by Your Order in Council, the yard forming at Pater as a Royal dock yard”

1815 George, Prince of Wales, acting as Regent in place of his demented father, George III, gave the Royal Assent to this submission from the Navy Board and the Order in Council, signed on 31 October 1815, established not only a new royal dockyard but also a new naval town.

It was not a good time. Waterloo, fought on 18 June 1815, had ended the long French wars and ships by the hundred were returning home to pay off. The existing Royal Dockyards had now more than enough capacity to support the much-reduced peacetime Royal Navy.

Pater Yard, however, had existed de facto for some years and its first two ships were well advanced. The Navy Board had committed public funds to the county twice in a decade and was no doubt reluctant to abandon its investment. The Order in Council served to regularise what had begun as a wartime expedient down the harbour at Milford.

A Royal Dockyard on Milford Haven arose from the Navy Board salvaging work from a bankrupt contractor. During the long French wars the Royal Yards did not have the resources to build large numbers of new warships, maintain the expanded fleets and cope with repair of battle-damaged vessels. Battles could not be forecast, and repair work disrupted and delayed ship building and increased the costs.

The Navy Board therefore depended on private yards where new vessels could be built without interruption. During the Seven Years War two warships were built under contract at Neyland. Richard Chitty launched the frigate HMS Milford in 1759, and in 1765 Henry Bird and Roger Fisher launched the two-decked HMS Prince of Wales on the same site.

The Navy Board looked to Pembrokeshire again in the Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars, contracting with Messrs Harry and Joseph Jacob of London for new warships to be built on the foreshore at Milford. When they failed the Navy Board completed the ships, renting the site from year to year. As “timber and iron could be bought there cheaper and workmen obtained in abundance on lower terms than at any other place where ships are now generally built”.

The Board proposed to buy the site and establish a Royal dockyard there. A sale figure of £4,455 was agreed with Charles Francis Grenville and an Order in Council dated 11 October 1809 gave authority to buy the land

“May it please your Majesty”

“Whereas certain papers were referred by us to the Commissioners for revising the civil concerns of your Majesty's Navy, respecting the building of ships of war at Milford Haven, where a line of battleship, a frigate, and a sloop have already been built, and the said Commissioners having stated in the 15th report that timber and iron could be bought there cheaper, and workmen obtained in abundance on lower terms than any other place where ships are generally built, which has since been corroborated by comparing the expense of the " Milford," a 94-gun-ship recently launched there, with the expense of ships of the same class built in your Majesty's other Dockyards, we deemed it expedient instead of the uncertain tenure by which the building ground at Milford Haven have hitherto been held of Mr. Grenville from year to year, at a certain annual rent, that the same should be purchased and conveyed in trust by your Majesty to the Commissioners of the Navy, and with this view directed the Assistant to the Civil Architect and Engineer of the Navy to proceed to Milford and fix a valuation on the quantity of ground sufficient for the purposes of a Naval Dockyard, and this officer having reported that the sum of £4,455 is the full and proper value of the piece of ground in question, which sum the proprietor agrees to accept on condition of an Act of Parliament being procured, at the public expense, to enable him to convey the same by a good and sufficient title; we do humbly propose that your Majesty will be pleased to authorize us to complete the purchase of the said piece of ground, to be employed as a Dockyard for building your Majesty's ships, the same to be placed on the extraordinary estimate of the Navy, and we do further propose to your Majesty, that the regular establishment of the Dockyard at Milford Haven shall be as follows:

Mr. Barallier, builder, with a. salary of..	£600 a year,
A Clerk to the builder..	£120
Mr. Louis Chas. Barallier, assist. to builder.	£300
One Foreman	£200
Two Quarter-men, each	£140
One Storekeeper without a clerk	£300
One Porter	£ 60”

Grenville however had died on 23 April 1809. His brother, Robert Fulke Grenville, who succeeded him as a life tenant of the estate, refused to accept the price and, in consequence, an order was issued, directing the Navy Board, on 3rd August 1810, to suspend the improvements then going forward on the premises and on the 16th October 1812, finally to give up possession at Midsummer 1814.

1809 Shortly after the agreement of 1809, the Barriers returned to France Louise Barallier became Principal Naval Architect at Toulon. Although Britain was at war with France and they were

Frenchmen they had been the principal Architects at one of His Majesties Dockyards
Mr. William Stone who had come from the Plymouth Yard was appointed Master Shipwright in their place.

The Pater site was a good choice for a dockyard. It was one of the few places on the waterway where flat, land gave on to deep water and a good anchorage.

1814 The dockyard facilities were transferred over the following few years to Government land at Pater and the last personnel finally moved out in mid summer 1814 with the completion of HMS Rochfort.

1814 Jan 20th Ordnance Dept. surrendered 39 acres of land to the Admiralty and the first building slip and the excavation of a dry dock was put in hand.

1814 April 28th the Admiralty purchased 20 acres and a stream of water from Mr. Meyrick for £5500 and took possession on June 7th

1828 The Admiralty purchased 9 acres of Pater church Farm part of Barrack Hill from Mr. John Francis Meyrick.

1830 the Yard was extended, The Admiralty received 13 acres of land from the Ordnance Dept. and gave them the whole of the land purchased in 1822.

1814 By May 30th 1814 the whole of the establishment at Milford had been transferred to the Pater yard as it was called. As Many of the men lived in Milford a beacon was placed on Carr rocks to guide the workmen travelling by water.

The Dockyard was governed by its own officers, Quarter-men who really acted as watchmen helped to guard the establishment had wooden sheds erected for their accommodation.

They were assisted by a party of Royal Marines who were accommodated in an old ship the Dragon which had been hauled above high water for this purpose. It was also used as a Dockyard School for apprentices. The first schoolmaster appointed was a Mr. Good, but a Mr. Bonniwell had acted as Master before that.

1816 The first ships, Valorous & Ariadne were completed by early 1816, and housing for the Dockyard workers had began at Front Street. The Ariadne was the last command of Captain Frederick Marryat the author, who wrote Mr. Midshipman Easy and Peter Simple

Over the next 108 years, over 250 ships were to be built for the Navy - from sixth rates of 1816 to an oilier of 1922,

1823 In 1823 a police force was instituted to replace the caretakers who had been responsible for security in the yard. The initial force consisted of a naval lieutenant Lieutenant Weatherley RN., one inspector, two sergeants and twelve constables. The off-duty constables were expected to march with their Officer to Church every Sunday. The force was found to be insufficient and was reinforced by the addition of 500 Royal Marines from the Chatham Division complete with a Drum and Fife band that played every evening before last Post was sounded on the Market corner by Moore's the Chemist. The Marines were also employed in levelling and repairing the roads in the Dockyard.

1832 In 1832, when the Navy Board was succeeded by the Admiralty, the practise of appointing a Naval Captain to be Captain Superintendent of the Pembroke Dockyard was introduced

The fortunes and development of Pennar from 1814 were closely linked to that of the Royal Dockyard at Paterchurch, later Pembroke Dock. At first most of the labour force consisted of men transferred to the new yard from the old one at Milford who travelled up the Haven from Milford by boat and landed just inside Pennar Gut where the boats could float at all stages of the tide. They left the boats there in the care of an old woman, Bessy Bradley who lived in the cottage by the Point and walked over the hill via Mr. David Price's public house "the Dolphin" and then to the Dockyard. Mr. Price had a marvellous orchard and brewed his own beer but there was a suspicion that it was well watered as no fights ever took place because of it.

Their numbers were considerably augmented after 1815 by the transfer of the now surplus craftsmen from other Royal Yards. The town planned by the Admiralty and laid out on a chessboard pattern, was originally known as Pater. A proposal to call it Melville, after the First Lord of the Admiralty, received a cool reception, but, ironically it was the Admiralty which did change the town's name. All the goods sent to the new yard were addressed to Pembroke Dock the 'Dock' name stuck.

The founding fathers of Pater were thus largely, but not exclusively, new men. Most established men came from the West Country, shipwrights from 'Plymouth Dock' as Devonport was known until 1823. These Devonians and Comishmen - the Seccombes, Saunders, Tregennas, Willings, Trevennas (and later the Trewents and Treweeks) - although of Celtic stock, nevertheless constituted the most radically distinct influx into south Pembrokeshire since the arrival of the Flemings in the twelfth century. They and their descendants, with the people of Milford, created Pembroke Dock.

The Royal Navy in 1815 was by far the most expensive single commitment of central Government and the largest industrial organisation in the world. With its supporting dockyards the Navy embraced a wider range of specialist professional skills than any other industry. Some of the innovations had great influence throughout the industrial revolution. The block making plant developed at Portsmouth Dockyard at this time was the first example of a conveyor belt system for production.

Pembroke Dock developed as a specialist building yard but its limited facilities denied it the established status of the Home Port dockyards which were also major naval bases with victualling depots, rope works, block mills and other specialist facilities. Pembroke Dock had only one dry dock, no fitting-out basins and, apart from Hobbs' Point (completed in 1832 for the Irish packet service not the Navy) and the Carr Jetty (completed in the first decade of the twentieth century), no satisfactory alongside berths for fitting-out newly-built warships. Before the introduction of iron and steel, newly-launched wooden vessels were usually sent round to Plymouth, sometimes Portsmouth, under jury rig for their masts to be stepped, if they were to be commissioned, or to go into ordinary. Early steam paddle warships went round to Woolwich to be fitted with their machinery. Later in the century the large iron-hulled ships had to have their engines and boilers and later also their main armament installed at Pembroke, and be completed for sea, undertaking their initial sea trials from Milford Haven. The completion of newly-launched ships was often delayed until the berth at Hobbs' Point was vacated. However, it is remarkable, that the greatest battleships in the British Navy down to 1896 could be fitted out and completed alongside the tiny, tidal jetty at Hobbs' Point. It was an extraordinary feat of improvisation.

Pembroke and its champions campaigned ceaselessly for improved facilities. In mid-century the Haverfordwest and Milford Haven Telegraph believed that “the only thing required to make the Dockyard complete is the long talked of; sea wall from the Hard across to Hobbs' Point, thus locking in the Pill, and making it available for a steam factory, steam basin etc. for which its leeward situation.. so admirably fits it”, which works “would be a culminating point from which additional sources of prosperity would spring”. The steam basin never materialised.

1864 Even after the opening of the railway through to the Dockyard town in August 1864, Pembroke remained a frontier post. “Pembroke labours under the misfortune of being 300 miles from Whitehall. It is an outpost, and only visited occasionally” commiserated the United Service Gazette in 1859, whose writer moreover considered that ‘the increasing value and importance of Pembroke as a building yard, seems lost, in great measure on the authorities.”

Mrs Stuart Peters, recalled in 1905 the visit twenty years earlier of the 'Chief Constructor of the United States Navy' who, she said, reported that “Pembroke is the first shipbuilding yard in the world”. The visitor was Naval Constructor Philip Hichborn USN; he had written that “the best adapted of the British dockyards for building operations is Pembroke.. but having but one dock, no basins, and few shops and stores, is not a fitting out yard, and can only be rendered so at very great expense. Vessels built there usually go to Plymouth, Portsmouth or Chatham to complete.” Later historians of the town have likewise accepted uncritically this opinion.

Admiral Charles Penrose Fitzgerald, who was Captain Superintendent of the Dockyard from 1893-95, sometimes thought 'that the Admiralty forgot altogether that there was any such place as Pembroke Dockyard.. “our insignificant little Cinderella of a dockyard did not always get everything she asked for, especially if one of her big sisters was asking for the same thing at the same time”

Even when the long-awaited jetty was being built out over the Carr Rocks after the turn of the century to provide a more efficient - but still tidal alongside fitting-out facility, The Navy and Army Illustrated was unimpressed:

The Jetty which was constructed in 1881 was built for coaling ships and hoisting of machinery and boilers in to position. The sheer-legs were believed to be the largest ever constructed at the time and were capable of lifting over 100 tons they cost £110,000

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty paid their annual visits of inspection to Pembroke Dockyard but they seldom lingered. Artists of the Illustrated London News were attracted to west Wales to sketch the launchings of only the greatest vessels. Even into the twentieth century, as the Dockyard was approaching its centenary, visiting members of the Corps of Naval Constructors “never failed to suggest [to Assistant Constructor Arthur Nicholls] that Pembroke was the end of the world and the edge of civilisation”

Pembroke remained a Cinderella yard, a poor relation of the Home Port dockyards, and the desire for recognition, for confirmation of their worth, was a constant preoccupation of its people.

Some writers have given us vivid descriptions of the yard late 1800's description of the Royal Dockyard

“It occupies an area of eighty acres, surrounded by a high wall, flanked by two Martello towers. There are twelve building slips for vessels of all sizes. There is also a dry dock for repairing them, and enormous stacks of timber of various kinds oak, deal, and larch. The Nasmyth steam hammer and saw mill are particularly worth notice. As it is not a fitting dock, vessels when ready are towed round to Devonport, or Portsmouth to be finished. The dock is defended by a fort to the west, which mounts twenty four guns, and by two Martello towers which each mounts three. There are also large barracks on the hill above, and a hut encampment at Hobbs Point.

Up to 1864, £175,563 had been expended in fortifying Pembroke Dock

1875 An interesting description of the yard was published in 1875

The entrance to the yard is through a wide gateway near the centre of the south wall, on the right and left of which are the houses of the principal officers who reside within its precincts -- spacious and handsome buildings. The various offices connected with the several departments are imposing in appearance and neatly arranged. The Fire Engine House in the centre of the Yard is an extensive stone building, in which about twenty engines are kept in the most perfect order and ready for any emergency. It may be mentioned that the yard is plentifully supplied with water from the Government reservoirs by means of iron pipes; to these pipes fire -plugs are attached in all parts of it.

“workshops necessarily abound here: there are joiners, millwrights, blacksmiths, plumbers, coppersmiths, coopers, wheelwrights, painters, pattern-makers, and armour plating shops. But among the many we have enumerated, perhaps that of the blacksmiths will attract the greatest attention. Here, are about 200 busy hands all dimly seen working amid heated air smoke, and the glare of the numerous glowing fires of its forges- and on all sides is heard the din, clang and clash of hammers and machinery forging and manufacturing the various kinds of heavy iron work now so requisite in the present advanced state of shipbuilding. Here, also, are three immense steam hammers beneath whose ponderous heads ponderous masses of red hot iron are continually becoming subject to their will. Adjoining is the galvanising shop, where the process of galvanising all the small iron work to prevent it from rusting, is going on”.

"At the west side of the yard are the steam saw mills, worked by the aid of powerful machinery. The sawing room is well worthy of a visit.

To the south of these, where the open space is chiefly used for the stacking of wood, is a large square basin known as the 'pickling pond', in which the elm and pine timber is kept, to prevent it decaying before being used. Near the docks lie numberless armour plates, varying in thickness from two to fourteen inches, destined to cover the sides of those powerful ships of war, which are being constructed in the neighbouring sheds, the machinery for boring these plates for the rivets, and for shaping them to the turns of the ships' sides also exists here."

The description above does not mention the four big sheds in the eastern part of the yard each about 150 feet long for the shipwrights tool chests. Inside these, rising in terraces, were hundreds of boxes containing the tool kits of the shipwrights. Three gangs of shipwrights could be accommodated on each tier of the shed. The inspector's offices were built at the north end of each tier. The original joiner's shop was a lean building attached to the eastern wall of the yard

The dockyard estimates for the year 1875 are Salaries £11,355 (white collar); wages £103, 016 (blue collar).

A body of the Metropolitan Police exercise the functions pertaining to their office within the Dockyard: this force consists of 2 Inspectors, 3 Sergeants.

The Dockyard and the Town

Lewis in the Topographical Dictionary of Wales gives a picture of Pembroke Dock in 1838 “Pembroke-Dock, sometimes called Pater, or Paterchurch, is situated on the southern shore of Milford Haven, about two miles from the old town. It consists of several streets of neat and well-built houses, and is partially paved, but not lighted; there are numerous good shops for the supply of the population, several of which are branches from the larger establishments in the town of Pembroke. A handsome inclosed market-place was erected some time ago. The dock-yard forms an area of eighty acres, inclosed within a lofty wall of stone, and comprises a neat range of buildings for the transaction of the public business, houses for the principal officers of the establishment, and a fort for the defence of the place, mounting twenty-three long twenty-four pounders. There are thirteen slips for ship-building, some of them adapted for building first-rates; also a dock, which will contain the largest class ships, having an average depth of twenty-three feet. Among the other branches of the establishment are, a smithery; an extensive pond for the immersion of elm timber; and a steam-engine for pumping out the dock, which also drives a saw-mill, working two frames and a circular saw. Some of the finest ships in the navy have been launched here. Large barracks have recently been built under the superintendence of Capt. Farris, R.E.; they form an imperfect octagon, including an area of more than 6000 square yards, and are strongly fortified with bastions, a wide and deep ditch, and loops for small arms. Besides the government establishment there is a small private dock; and the Irish packet establishment has been some years removed from Milford to this place, with a view to which alteration a very fine jetty was constructed at Hobbs' Point, a few hundred yards to the east of the dockyard; new roads, also, were formed, connecting Hobbs' Point with the main road from Carmarthen, in a new line avoiding both Narberth and Haverfordwest, by which route the mail saves a distance of several miles. In connexion with the packet-station, a large hotel was built by government. The great South Wales railway will have a branch of nineteen miles and a half to Pembroke-Dock, the formation of which will tend greatly to the improvement of the whole district: some particulars of the line are given under the heads of Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire, and a fuller account under that of Glamorganshire. Within the last few years, the fortifications connected with the dockyard have been materially strengthened. About a mile to the east of the dockyard is Pembroke ferry, belonging to the crown, and held by Sir John Owen, Bart., who underlets it at an annual rent of £105: it forms the shortest and most usual line of communication between Haverfordwest and Pembroke, the distance between which places by the ferry is only ten miles, but by Narberth twenty-five; the fares are, a halfpenny for a foot-passenger, a penny for a man and horse, and a shilling per wheel for carriages. Steam-communication is maintained between Pembroke-Dock and Haverfordwest, Milford, Tenby, and Bristol”. Pembroke Dock became essentially an Admiralty rather than a naval town. The Commissioners of the Navy Board and, after 1832, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, influenced most aspects of public and private life outside the Dockyard walls. Within a few years of its foundation an Act of Parliament was passed “authorising the Commissioners of His Majesty's Navy to establish a Market at the Town of Pembroke Dock . . . and to make Regulations for paving, lighting, cleansing, and good Order of the said Town”. This was followed on 10 June 1825 with an Act enabling the Corporation of Pembroke to relinquish and convey to “the Commissioners of His Majesty's Navy the Right of Letting the Stalls, Sitings, and other Conveniences in the Market in the Town of Pembroke Dock, and the Right to the Rent, Tolls, and Fees thereof'

Findlay in 1875 gives a description of the market in his day

“The Market Place is a Government Building, erected in the year 1826 It stands at the south-east corner of the dockyard but outside its walls. It is a large and commodious structure, of quadrangular form, having four spacious entrances, with iron gates, facing north, south, east, and west, respectively: the east gate way, facing Pembroke Street, is the more popular approach. The interior contains numerous stalls for butchers, and vendors of goods of all descriptions. In the centre, above the weighing house, is a building used in connection with the Government Savings' Bank business, a branch of which is conducted here on Market Days.

The market is held upon Friday, but Tuesday is also nominally a market day. About noon on Friday the crowds that thither to conclude purchases make the scene at that time an animated one.”

Acc./to Kelly's Directory 1884

The Market place, situated in Pembroke street, was a government building, erected in 1826, but is now in hands of the Corporation. 'The market, which is held on; Friday, is well supplied with meat, fish, poultry, game, butter, cheese, fruit, vegetables and provisions generally

For some time after its construction the market building was used by the dockyard workmen to eat their dinner in the covered stalls. Short services were also held there by a Shipwright Henry Evans who was a Baptist local preacher, he later became minister of Gilgal Baptist Chapel Pennar. Unfortunately one day a man got locked in and in trying to get back to work climbed over the wall fell and broke both ankles. This led to closing down of this facility. After that, until Mrs Chatfield, persuaded the Admiralty and her husband, to convert one of the old saw pit sheds into a workman's dining-room with cooking facilities, a cook, tables and benches with also a reading room, a smoking room and a recreation room, the men had to eat out on Barrack Hill or on the pavement outside the gate.

1853 the Admiralty under the provisions of the act of George III 54 C 159 July 29th 1814 undertook the responsibility for the Conservation of the Haven

View down Pembroke St from Barrack Hill

1925 Exactly 100 years later, on the eve of the closure of the Yard, their Lordships still had a finger in every pie - almost literally. In June 1925 the Captain Superintendent was ordered by the Admiralty to inspect the bakeries of Mr. F. Rogers, Water Street, Pembroke Dock, and Mr. A. Farrow, Charles Street, Milford Haven, and to report on whether they were “a fit source for the supply of bread”

The Admiralty and its principal officers at Pembroke Dock filled the paternalist role carried out in other communities by the local landed gentry. The lead in founding the National School, for example, was taken by a committee which included Captain Samuel Jackson, the Captain Superintendent, William Edye, the Master Shipwright, and other Dockyard officers. The foundation stone was laid by Mrs Edye on 26 April 1843, the launching day of the first royal yacht, Victoria and Albert, and the school was opened on 24 June the following year.

The Navy also played a leading role in founding the first parish church. The land in Bush Street owned by Mr. Meyrick of Bush Estate was conveyed in August 1846 through Edward Laws, a principal officer in the Dockyard. The First Lord of the Admiralty, the Earl of Auckland, attended by a Marines guard of honour and accompanied by the Band of the 37th Regiment, laid the foundation stone of St. John's Church on Monday 21 September that year.

Likewise, in subscription lists for good causes throughout the nineteenth century the names of Captain Superintendents and Master Shipwrights, rather than the local nobility and gentry, usually headed the lists of contributors.

The Ships built at Pembroke Dock

Pembroke's greatest asset and the focus of her prosperity was her thirteen building slips, many more than in any other yard, and these made Pembroke Dockyard the nation's principal building yard for over a century. Nearly 250 warships and other vessels went down the ways at Pembroke in the 106 years which separated the launching of the little sister frigates HMS Ariadne and Valorous in 1816 and that of the fleet oilier Oleander in 1922.

The century of Pembroke shipbuilding witnessed the most profound developments in naval design and construction as sail gave way to steam, driving paddle-wheels and later screw propellers, and wood was overtaken by iron and steel. Successive generations of dockyardies had to learn new skills. Their range and complexity increased as the technical development of war ships advanced apace after the introduction of steam in the 1850s and of iron a decade later. Traditional shipwright expertise slowly gave way to the demands of metal. The rattle of the riveting machines and the fumes from the foundries finally overtook the thud of the adze and the sweet smell of freshly planed oak and pine.

Pembroke-built vessels ranged in consequence from the little cutters HMS Racer and HMS Starling launched together on 21 October 1829, the twenty fourth anniversary of the Battle of Trafalgar, to the colossal line-of-battleship HMS Howe, christened by Miss Harriet Ramsay on Wednesday evening, 7 March 1860, the last sailing three-decked built for the Royal Navy. She was twice the size of Nelson's Victory and, with a displacement of 6,577 tons, one of the two largest wooden steam battleships.

Almost every major ship that went down the ways at Pembroke Dock represented a significant advance in naval architecture or played some remarkable part in British imperial history. The first forty-five years saw the construction of nineteen first- and second-rates, ships which represented the culmination of the art of wooden shipbuilding. Among these was Sapping' Rodney, christened by Mrs Adams of Holyland on 18 June 1833, the first British two-decked to carry ninety guns or more. She was towed into action at Sevastopol in 1854 by the Pembroke-built paddler HMS Spiteful where her broadside of 1470 lb. was employed to effect. 'What a dose of pills for the enemies of Great Britain', exulted The Nautical Magazine. HMS Rodney was relieved as flagship on the China Station in 1869 and paid off at Portsmouth on 27 April 1870, the last wooden capital ship in active seagoing commission.

The Rodney was followed by Symmonds' outstandingly successful Vanguard of 1835, with her beam of fifty-seven feet the broadest ship in the Navy and the broadest ever built in Britain. She and the Rodney were fierce competitors in the Mediterranean where the ships were regarded as champions of two rival systems of naval architecture.

Pembroke Dockyard played a pioneering role in the development of early steam propulsion. The Tartarus of 1834 was the first of a series of paddle wheel steam vessels which included the famous Gorgon of 1837 and which culminated with the launching by “the lady of Colonel Ellis, Commandant of the Garrison”, on Wednesday, 30 April 1851, of HMS Valorous, the last paddle frigate ever built for the Royal Navy.

Throughout the 1850s the Yard produced the last of the Royal Navy's great wooden line of battleships. The three-decked HMS Duke of Wellington was launched as HMS Windsor Castle on 14 September 1852, the same day as the Iron Duke died at Walmer. Her name was changed in his honour a few days later. She and other big wooden liners of the decade were converted while building to carry steam, being ‘cut asunder’ on the slips and lengthened to make room for boilers and engines. The Duke of Wellington served as flagship in the Baltic during the Russian War. Besides building ships were also scrapped here.

When the “Triumph”, the first ship Nelson was appointed too, under his maternal uncle Captain Maurice Suckling was broken up in 1850, an immense quantity of mercury (quicksilver) was discovered between her frame timbers, evidently the remains of loot taken from Spanish merchant ships. Of course the Naval storekeeper claimed possession, but the Yardies had their share. The means for carrying the stuff away consisted chiefly of bottles, but, when these bottles were confiscated by Search at the gate, the bare pocket was used. The Dockyard workers silvered the backs of mirrors, using the mercury.

Pembroke's first ironclad was HMS Prince Consort, christened by “Miss Jones [of Pantglas], a Carmarthenshire lady”, on Thursday, 26 June 1862. She had been laid down as HMS Triumph, a wooden screw two-decked, but was completed as a wooden ironclad carrying 4.5-inch and 3-inch iron plates. She was followed by other interim ironclads, the Research, Zealous and Lord Clyde. The latter, with her Chatham-built sister ship the Lord Warden, were the largest and fastest steaming wooden ships, naval or mercantile, ever built. But because unseasoned timber had been used in building her at Pembroke, the hull of the Lord Clyde soon became rotten and, known as the Queen's Bad Bargain, she was sold out of the Service within ten years.

Pembroke, after Chatham, was the second of the Royal Yards to receive the plant required for iron hull construction. The first of the iron ships was HMS Penelope, a twin screw corvette launched in 1867. A year later, she was followed by HMS Inconstant which remained afloat for eighty-eight years, the last Pembroke-built warship in existence. With a speed under canvas of 13.5 knots and steaming at 16 knots she was the fastest ship in the world.

The despatch vessels HMS Iris, laid down on No 2 Slip in 1875, and HMS Mercury, laid down on the adjoining No 1 Slip the next year, were the first British warships built of steel and their marine engines made them the fastest fighting ships.

During the last two decades of the century Pembroke Yard launched a series of major capital ships, beginning with the turret ship HMS Edinburgh, launched by the Duchess of Edinburgh in March 1882, and followed by the Collingwood (1882), Howe (1885), Anson (1886), Nile (1888), Empress of India (1891) and Repulse (1892). The final, and by far the heaviest, battleship built in the Yard was the Majestic-class HMS Hannibal, 14,900 tons, launched on 28 April 1896.

Over the next ten years the yard produced a line of protected and armoured cruisers of ever increasing size. The Drake of 1901, which was commanded by Captain John Jellicoe from 1903-4 was the longest ship ever built at Pembroke. The last three armoured cruisers were the monsters HMS Duke of Edinburgh (1904), her half sister HMS Warrior (1905), and the Defence (1907). All three fought in the First Cruiser Squadron at Jutland and only the Duke survived.

Some Pembroke ships made their names in distant waters. The little Starling surveyed Hong Kong waters under Lieutenant Henry Kellett where they are commemorated in Kellett Island, the Headquarters of the Royal Hong Kong Yacht Club (long since joined to the waterfront) and in Starling Inlet in the New Territories.

On the Pacific coast of Canada, Fisgard Island and Duntze Head honour the frigate HMS Fisgard of 1819 (which itself recalls the French invasion of Fishguard in 1797), which served on the Pacific Station from 1842 to 1846, and her Captain, John Duntze. On the same chart Constance Cove recalls the visit there on 25 July 1848 of the fourth-rate HMS Constance of 1846 which was the first British warship ever to anchor at Esquimalt, now the Canadian Forces' main base on the Pacific coast.

Pembroke ships made their mark in both the Polar regions. The Alert of 1856 sailed with the Nares Expedition to the Arctic in 1875 and wintered at Floeberg Beach. North, then the highest latitude ever attained by man.

In Antarctica, the great 12,400-foot-high volcano, Mount Erebus, discovered by Sir James Clark Ross on 28 January 1841, was named after his ship, the bomb HMS Erebus of 1826. She sailed in 1845 with Sir John Franklin on his ill-fated expedition to survey the Northwest Passage and into history.

Many vessels from Pembroke Dockyard met violent ends. The fifth-rate HMS Thetis of 1817, carrying home a valuable consignment of gold, silver and plate from Rio de Janeiro, was wrecked on Cape Frion in Brazil in December 1830.

The big two-decked HMS Clarence, launched in July 1827 in the presence of Prince William Henry, Duke of Clarence, became a training ship on the Mersey where she was destroyed by fire in June 1884.

The following year she was replaced by the Pembroke-built three-decked HMS Royal William of 1833 which was re-named Clarence. She too was destroyed by fire on the Mersey in July 1899.

Fire also consumed that veteran of the Chinese opium wars, HMS Imogene of 1831, destroyed in the great blaze in Devonport Dockyard in September 1840.

Some ships met their ends in collisions at sea. The Amazon, one of the last timber-hulled sloops built for the Royal Navy, was lost within a year of her launching in May 1865. She was commissioned at Devonport in April 1866 and two months later, on 10 July, she collided off Start Point with the steamer Osprey and both vessels sank. All hands were saved.

The Pembroke-built light cruiser HMS Curacoa of 1917 lost all but twenty-six of her ship's company when she was cut in two in collision with the Cunarder Queen Mary off the Irish coast in October 1942.

The sea also took its toll of many early Pembroke-built sailing warships which went down the ways at Pembroke Dockyard. The Cherokee-class sloops fared worst. HMS Wizard of 1830 was lost on the Seal Bank off Berehaven in February 1859, the Skylark of 1826 was wrecked on the Isle of Wight in April 1845 and the Spey of 1827 was lost on Racoon Key in the Bahamas in November 1840.

Other Cherokees disappeared without trace. HMS Thais of 1829 was lost on passage from Falmouth to Halifax in December 1833 and the Camilla of 1847 in September 1860 off Japan.

The composite gun vessel HMS Gnat, christened by Miss Mirehouse of Angle in the dark on 26 November 1867, was wrecked within a year when she ran aground on Balabac Island in the China Seas on 15 November 1868.

Perhaps the most tragic loss was that of the training frigate HMS Atlanta which had been launched as the Juno at Pembroke Dock in 1844. She sailed from Bermuda for home on 1 February 1880 and foundered in the North Atlantic, taking with her 113 ship's company and 170 young seamen under training.

Pembroke Dockyard ships fought in most of Queen Victoria's little wars against recalcitrant emirs, rebellious native chiefs and omnipresent East Indian pirates. They also fought in the great wars of the twentieth century.

The first British warship sunk in the First World War was the light cruiser HMS Amphion of 1911, mined in the North Sea on 6 August 1914.

The great armoured cruiser HMS Drake, christened by Mrs Lort Phillips in spring 1901, and the light cruiser HMS Nottingham of 1913, were both torpedoed.

German gunfire at the Battle of Jutland in May 1916 claimed the last two armoured cruisers, the last two major warships built at the Yard, HMS Warrior of 1905 and the Defence of 1907. The Defence, flagship of Rear Admiral Sir Robert Arbuthnot in the First Cruiser Squadron, blew up with the loss of old Sir Robert, one of the Navy's fitness fanatics, and all 893 men on board. The Warrior was so badly damaged that she was abandoned and sank.

The final loss in the Great War occurred a few weeks before the Armistice. The little submarine L 10, launched in January 1918, was sunk off Texel in the following October.

The last vessel launched at Pembroke, the fleet oilier Oleander of 1922, was sunk in Harstead Bay on 8 June 1940 after having been damaged by German dive bombers during the Norwegian Campaign.

The Cost - Dockyard deaths and injuries

Naval histories record the battles and the glory but the high price of Admiralty was also paid in full by the men who built these great ships and by their families. The physical hazards of working in the dockyard were many and often fatal. The Important Case Book maintained by the Senior Medical Officer in accordance with Article 190 of Home Dockyard Regulation's records a long list of deaths and terrible injuries suffered by Dockyard workers. The terse clinical accounts compiled by Fleet Surgeons a century ago and the occasional moss-covered gravestone are often the only remaining evidence of tragedy. For them there were no drums and no trumpets sounded.

Industrial injuries increased in severity and frequency upon the introduction of iron and steel after 1860 with its associated foundries, forges and machine shops. Falls from staging on the building slips continued to claim lives and hernias were common. To these were now added burns, injuries with machinery and eye damage caused by flying metal during riveting. Almost every addition to the Navy List from Pembroke Dockyard was marked by a new gravestone in a south Pembrokeshire churchyard or a family cast into penury.

The Dockyard Surgery treated all injuries and serious cases were sent on board the old fourth-rate HMS Nankin, a veteran of the Second China War, which served as the dockyard hospital ship from 1866 to 1895 when facilities were provided on shore. The old Nankin was the end of the road for many.

1881 The case of Samuel Ellis Ball, a fifty-four-year-old shipwright, who lies in Plot G.126 just inside the gates of Llanion Cemetery, was not un-typical. On Thursday, 10 February 1881, Samuel was preparing the 465-ton composite gunboat HMS Cockchafer for launching. He fell from a stage at the stem of the ship into the bottom of the slip twenty-two feet below and was taken out to the Nankin in a semi-conscious state where Staff Surgeon Henry Dawson found head, back and chest injuries and a fractured right thigh. "He complained of great pain", the Surgeon told the inquest, "I attended him for ten days, when he died. The primary cause of death was concussion of the brain." The Cockchafer was launched at 9 am on Saturday, 19 February, by Miss Philips of Lawrenny Castle. The ship "took the water beautifully, the strains of the band mingling with the cheers of those assembled". Just offshore, Samuel Ball in HMS Nankin was still barely alive. He died four hours later at 1pm.

Even after the turn of the century life in the Yard could be a brutal business.

1901 John Lewis, aged fifty-six, Established Labourer No 595, was painting a bulkhead in the port engine room of the new cruiser HMS Drake on 30 January 1901 when he slipped and fell thirteen feet onto the engine bearers and then into the crank pit. He fractured his skull "and is now totally deaf. In addition he has lost his left eye which he states occurred when building HMS Shannon on 1st May 1875", wrote Fleet Surgeon Edward Luther. The latter concluded: "His capacity to contribute to his own support is totally destroyed and is likely to be permanent". Lewis was invalided on 16 April 1901.

The dreaded letters DD in red ink denoted the Royal Navy abbreviation for "Discharged Dead", the final epitaph of many.

1900 William Williams aged forty-five, Labourer No 1899, from Bush Street, had been greasing cogs in a machine in No 2 Fitters Shop on the morning of 21 May 1900 when he was caught in the machinery. He was taken to the Surgery with a fractured skull and his right hand amputated "all except his thumb". William Williams received his DD in red ink the following day.

His widow received £193 14s.11d. in compensation from the Admiralty. The following January the Admiralty informed the Captain Superintendent that in future coffins for workmen accidentally killed in the Dockyard were not to be provided at public expense and the Pembroke Dock and Pembroke Gazette reported, “have directed the Yard authorities to recover from the representatives of the late William Williams the cost of the coffin supplied”.

1870 The cost of coffins was a major outlay against which Dockyard workers had to make prudent provision. The Royal Dockyard Interment Society formed in about 1870 “to do away with collections in the Dockyard” collected weekly two pence subscriptions as an insurance against funeral costs. The scheme ‘has proved an inestimable boon to very many families”, reported the Society’s annual meeting in April 1893.

Shirking

Distance from the Dockyard as well as danger when they got there was a constant problem for the Dockyarders, most of whom lived in a widely dispersed area of south Pembrokeshire. This entailed long journeys by horse or boat for the fortunate but by foot for the many. As the paternal concern of the Admiralty included basic medical care it added to the professional duties of the Dockyard surgeon.

1841 This was recognised as early as 1841. An Order in Council dated 11 February, after emphasising that “the number of artificers and workmen has greatly increased [since 1815] and the duty of the Surgeon has become more onerous in consequence of many of the men being obliged to reside at a considerable distance from the yard”, proceeded to ask that the “exigency may be provided for by such small addition to the salary of the Surgeon as will enable him to keep a horse for the purpose of visiting his distant patients”. His salary was duly increased from £400 to £450 a year.

The Dockyard Surgeon was still doing his rounds on horseback at the beginning of this century. In his memoirs, Rear Admiral T.T. Jeans, then a young doctor at Pembroke Dockyard, recalls that houses in Pembroke Dock were so scarce “that many had to live in the villages in the neighbourhood, some as far as seven miles”. He considered that “the long tramp to work and home, day after day, winter and summer, a tragedy in itself, was absolutely incompatible with a satisfactory day’s work in between”. The doctor’s concern was, however, tempered by the tale he tells of a parson’s wife living in one of these remoter villages who, sympathising one day with the wife of a workman who had so far to go to his work, received the unexpected and illuminating reply: “Well, Mum, he do rest all day”.

It was part of Surgeon Jeans’ duties to ride around the country to visit Dockyarders who had reported sick. During the spring and at ‘potato’ time this had its lighter moments: he commented As I rode up a lane towards a cottage, (I would see) over the hedge, the poor “sick” man hoeing his ground. He would hear the horse’s hoof, look up, and catch sight of me then dash for his cottage and his bed, where after listening to a long-winded account of his ailments from his wife and hearing the thump of his boots on the floor overhead, I would find him in bed probably fully-dressed but minus those boots.

1880 Admiral of the Fleet, Lord Chatfield, who spent his early years at Pembroke Dockyard in the 1880s where his father was Captain Superintendent, recalled how his mother “initiated the soup kitchen in the Dockyard for the men to have hot soup in the dinner hour”. The Pembroke Dock and Tenby Gazette reported that hundreds of the “employees live too far away to allow them to go home in the short dinner time granted and as a consequence they have to be content with cold lunch in the middle of the day”. The soup kitchen was funded by nominal contributions from the men and from the proceeds of concerts organised by Mrs Chatfield. Over the three years of her husband’s appointment fifty-seven gallons of soup were issued daily to 300 grateful men, a total of 17,000 gallons to 90,000 'diners'. Each man received one and a half pints of soup a day at a cost of three pence a week.

There is nothing to suggest that Pembroke men were any slower than their colleagues in other royal Yards in seeing off Their Lordships. Indeed, Surgeon Jeans was of the opinion that the well-known "dockyard crawl" was more apparent in Pembroke Dockyard than in any of the other three great dockyards, and that even the Dockyard shire horses adapted themselves to it:

A couple of these splendidly conditioned animals might be seen drawing, painfully and slowly, a small empty lorry, but at the first sound of the dinner bell, the drivers would slip off their harness and away they would go, helter skelter across the pieces of waste land, jumping the low chain railings in between, frisking like colts, each trying to get to the harness shed and his feed before the others. "I often went out into the Yard simply to watch this horse play - and some sign of active vitality" he said.

1898 Captain Burges Watson, Captain Superintendent just before the turn of the century, was convinced that his workforce was idle and his suspicions reached dramatic climax on 15 July 1898, when he assembled every Dockyard officer from Chief Constructor down to the humblest charge-man in the Dockyard Schoolroom. He reported that he had found a hutch in a timber stack, roofed with corrugated iron, and equipped with towels, water and pillows and in which, it seemed, men had been going to skulk, sleep and - worse still - perhaps smoke, for weeks or months previously. The Dockyard Police had later found three men in there and he had discharged them. A few days earlier he had been on board the cruiser HMS Dromedary when, at five minutes to noon, he had distinctly heard the sound of a bell, not the official bell, but a hammer striking on a shackle, and immediately afterwards nearly all hands ceased working. There were other examples of shirking. He had come ashore at the landing stage one night in plain clothes and noted that there was no sound of activity on board the Royal Yacht Victoria and Albert where the night shift was on overtime but that when he got near "a perfect din" was set up.

Of course, this all caused a great uproar in the local newspaper with complaints that 2,200 men should not be tarred with the same brush as three errant skulkers.

The workforce was a close-knit community which any senior naval officer found almost impossible to penetrate. Surgeon Jeans observed that the workmen through inter-marriage over long years had become so closely inter-related that "it was no uncommon thing to find a gang of riggers or shipwrights whose foremen and timekeepers were the fathers or uncles or brothers of most of the gang". (I trained as a shipwright and this was still the case in the early 1950's at Devonport where nearly all the men in the South Yard Boathouse came from the same village) They must have led the Captain Superintendents a merry dance.

Launching

1844 Launching days were the highlights of the Pembroke calendar throughout the history of the Dockyard. Their importance varied with the size of the ship which in turn determined the rank of the lady chosen to perform the christening. "These events are to hundreds the "sunny spots" in their chequered existence", commented the Pembrokeshire Herald in its report of the launching in 1844 of the two-decked HMS Centurion by Mrs Cockburn of Rhoscrowther.

1816 The Yard was customarily opened to the public on launching days and the latter occasions attracted crowds of visitors and welcome extra trade in the town. The first launchings were on 10 February 1816 before 'an impressive concourse of spectators assembled to witness the novel event'. The sixth-rates HMS Ariadne and Valorous, built together on that first improvised slip, stem to stem, went afloat, one bows first and the other, more conventionally; stem first, "a circumstance which created considerable interest at the time".

1852 The launch of the great three-decked HMS Windsor Castle in 1852 was typical. According to one report: "From an early hour on Tuesday morning conveyances of every description commenced swarming into Pater . . . and every description of passage boat from Carmarthen, Tenby, Haverfordwest and Milford and other places, lent their aid in conveying to the scene some of the thousands who, throughout the day, thronged the neighbourhood of the Dockyard".

1879 At the other end of the scale the little flat iron gunboats HMS Tickler and Griper, launched on Monday, 15 September 1879, were christened by two little girls, Miss E.J. Warren, daughter of the new Chief Constructor, and Miss H.M.F. Powell, the six-year-old daughter of Pembroke Dock's second Vicar and former naval officer, the Rev. F.G.M. Powell, of St John's Church. "Each young lady", ran one press report, "was presented with an elegantly polished mahogany boxes lined with blue velvet, containing a burnished miniature steel axe, with which each young lady used to sever the cords suspending the weights over the dog-shores."

The launching process was a complicated engineering undertaking and was not always a success. The launch of the ninety-gun screw two-decked HMS Caesar in the summer of 1853 took seventeen days round-the-clock effort. Lady Georgiana Balfour, daughter of the Earl of Cawdor, christened the 2,767 tons ship on Thursday, 21 July, but the vessel stopped after sliding only half her length down the slip. "Nothing could equal our consternation", wrote Captain Sir Thomas Pasley, the Captain Superintendent, in his diary, "No one could guess the cause." When the tide ebbed the ship's bilge-ways and stem were found embedded in the mud with fifty-six feet of the hull suspended without support over the ground-ways.

The operation mounted over the next seventeen days to free the ship became an epic and was fully reported in the Pembrokeshire Herald. On the following day "all the casks of the town were borrowed and it was gratifying to see the alacrity with which these were furnished by publicans and others - the former in some instances actually emptying both beer and porter into tubs and vats". The tide rose more quickly than expected next day, Sunday, and the Dockyard bell was rung and "the [Dockyard] Battalion drums sent through the town - beating to quarters, and messengers on horseback and foot sent off in all directions". Improvisations failed and it took specially-built camels lashed beneath her counter at low water on Friday, 5 August, to move her. Across the weekend the ship moved forty-eight feet. Then, at 6.10 on Sunday evening, two hours before high water, she started to move. The Battalion drums again "paraded the town, the church and chapels etc. were soon deserted. Sir Thomas Pasley recorded: "And at length she came and marvellous was the excitement and loud and long were the cheers of our men who, poor fellows, have worked as hard as men could work".

The cause was long debated. One tradition held that a local witch, excluded from attending the launching, put a curse on the Caesar. Another that the Dockyard was cursed because of the destruction of Paterchurch graveyard. More likely there was insufficient tallow between the sole of the ways and the launching slip while the sliding surfaces had been planed too smoothly.

The launching of minor vessels, too, could prove disastrous on the day. The little 238-ton screw gunboats HMS Janus and Drake were built on the same slip sharing one set of bilge-ways. They were christened at 5.30 pm. on Saturday, 8 March 1856, by Mrs Mathias of Lamphey Court, wife of the High Sheriff, from staging erected on the side of the slip between the two vessels. Both hulls moved off together, Drake leading. As the Janus passed she demolished the platform and Mrs Mathias and her children were “whirled out of their place” and “hurled with frightful violence” into the slip. In the confusion “the gallant little vessels went off without a single cheer or other symptom of approbation”. Miss Mathias, with a broken collar bone, “was for some time insensible”, but they all survived. A week later Mrs Mathias, “being deeply sensible” of the workmen's help in rescuing her family “from the confusion and entanglement into which they were cast”, rewarded them each with ten shillings.

1900 Much more calamitous was the accident to the new royal yacht Victoria and Albert in the winter of 1900, an event which seriously damaged the professional reputation of Pembroke Dockyard and ruined the career of the ship's designer, the Director of Naval Construction, Sir William White.

The 380-foot steel yacht was laid down in December 1897 as a replacement for the veteran paddle yacht of the same name which had been built at Pembroke Dockyard nearly fifty years earlier. The new vessel, the last ship to be launched from Pembroke Yard in Queen Victoria's reign, was launched by the Duchess of York (later Queen Mary) on 9 May 1899.

After her engines and boilers had been installed and her masts stepped under the sheer-legs at Hobbs' Point, the berth had to be vacated for fitting out the new cruiser HMS Spartiate. As there was no other jetty (Pembroke's limitations again!), the yacht was put into dry dock for completion. This was not an unusual proceeding but it led to disaster.

The completed yacht was to be floated out of the dock at dawn on 3 January 1900. As the dock flooded the ship slipped to starboard off her blocks aft with a list of eight degrees to port. “The Marine guard immediately sounded the bugle call” and all ports and scuttles were closed.

The caisson could not be secured at high tide allowing much of the water to escape, leaving the ship unsupported, despite the efforts of the Dockyard fire brigade pumps. Sir William White, summoned from London, arrived at 2 am on “the bleak dock-side and saw the beautiful thing heeled over with naphtha flares burning all round, a host of men climbing over her and shouting angrily”. He felt the hostility in the air but was generous in his praise of the emergency measures which had been taken. “It is not possible for me to over state the value of the prompt and skilful action of the Dockyard officers”, he wrote, “to which we owe the rescue of the vessel from a dangerous position.”

The yacht was safe and watertight with damage limited to an 8-inch dent running over twenty-five feet amidships. She was ballasted with 200 tons of water and 105 tons of pig iron before the next tide, when she was floated out with a ten degree list and taken to a buoy where, on 4 January, Sir William conducted stability tests using a team of 475 men rushing from side to side.

There was a subsequent furore in Press and Parliament. An enquiry presided over by Mr. G.J. Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty, reported on 29 April. The accident was due “not to a single error or miscalculation in the general design but to an excess in weight and equipment [771 tons] distributed over a number of items”. In short, the ship was top heavy.

Sir William was formally censured by the Admiralty and retired a broken man.

Captain Superintendent

The hierarchy of the Royal Dockyards was as strictly determined as the Royal Navy which they served. At the head was the Commissioner or, after the absorption of the Navy Board by the Admiralty in 1832, the Superintendent - a rear admiral in the major yards but a captain at Pembroke Dockyard. He commanded in all respects: "Commissioner - head of the yard - great man - remarkably great man", was the accurate description by Arthur Jingle in Pickwick Papers of the Commissioner at Chatham where Dickens' father was employed. These sea officers had no shipbuilding knowledge and there was often tension between them and their civilian Master Shipwrights, later Chief Constructors, who had spent a lifetime in the trade. These senior captains, however, knew about handling men.

Pembroke had thirty-five Captain Superintendents between 1832 and 1926 who were borne on the ships' books of the successive guardships at Pembroke which they formally commanded. Among those early Captain Superintendents were:-

Captain Chas Bullen who was the first, he fought at Trafalgar
Cumby who is buried in Park St Cemetery and also fought at Trafalgar

Samuel Jackson

Sir Watkyn O Pell who had a wooden leg and would ride a horse around the yard and up on the hill so that he could see what was going on. It is said that the horse was so well trained that he could ride it up the gangways on to the ships.

Sir Thomas Sabine Pasley,

he was very involved with the early days of the National School

(Biography written about him and his time at Pembroke Dock by Lawrence Phillips)

I shall always look back on Pembroke Yard as the most comfortable and satisfactory epoch of my life", he wrote) in his diary. His daughter, Louisa, recalled: "Pembroke Dockyard was . . . a paradise to the Captain Superintendent. No telephone disturbed his equanimity or harassed his clerks. The railway did not approach within 40 miles at the date of his taking up the appointment though it had advanced to only ten miles when his time expired." Old Sir Thomas, racked by money worries, was cheered by the Dockyard workers and sailors from the guard ship HMS Saturn when he left in the Prospero steamer on 5 June 1854: "At last the Yard was cleared", he wrote, 'and the last sound of Pembroke Dockyard that I shall ever hear died away. But the recollection will never die from my memory. I was quite over- come and felt it all very deeply . . . God bless them all!"

The reign was terminated by AFO (Admiralty Fleet Order) 1477 dated 4 June 1926:
"As Pembroke Dockyard will be reduced to a care and maintenance basis by 31st May, it has been decided that the appointment of Captain Superintendent is to terminate on that date"

The last one Leonard Donaldson, wrote to his staff: "I wish you all every good luck and trust that the Yard may before long be used for some useful purpose and bring some help to the Town and District".

The Decline of Pembroke Dockyard

The decline of Pembroke Dockyard began soon after the turn of the century. This was not evident to the men then employed. The armoured cruiser HMS Defence, launched in 1907, was the last major warship built at the Yard. Thereafter only light cruisers - averaging one a year - and a handful of submarines occupied a few of the slips which throughout the Great War were concerned with war repair work.

The future United States President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, visited Pembroke Dockyard in July 1918 when he was Assistant Secretary of the (US) Navy. He "thought Pembroke was "an old, small affair somewhat like our Portsmouth Navy Yard””. In a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniel, Roosevelt reported: “It has been expanded since the War from 1,000 to nearly 4,000 employees, and does mostly repair work to patrol vessels etc., and is also building four submarines. I was particularly interested to see over 500 women employed in various capacities, some of them even acting as moulders' helpers in the foundry, and all of them doing excellent work.”

It was somewhat prophetic of future developments in the harbour that the very last vessel launched at Pembroke should have been an oil tanker.

1922 The Royal Fleet Auxiliary Oleander, named by Mrs Dutton, wife of the Captain Superintendent, went down the ways on Wednesday evening, 3 May 1922. As she entered the water “a loud cheer was raised by all present”. It must have been a pale shadow of the great launching days the Dockyard had seen. She was brought alongside the Carr Jetty, that first class fitting-out jetty - the lack of which had hindered fitting-out operations for half a century - but which ,had come too late.

The home dockyards were all now seriously under-employed. The machinery and boilers for the Oleander were made at Devonport, Portsmouth and Chatham, “the work having been distributed for the purpose of keeping workmen in the several engineering departments at those dockyards in employment”.

The following month the Dockyard suffered a terminal injury with the burning down of the mould loft. Various newspapers reported the tragic event. “Practically the whole population of the town came to witness what was, in many respects, a wonderful spectacle.” A north-westerly breeze fanned the fire “which consumed, not only the constructive centre of the Yard, but its archives and collections of ship models and figureheads”. The best efforts of the Metropolitan Police, ship's company of the light cruiser HMS Cleopatra in refit, and two companies of the York and Lancaster Regiment, were in vain.”

“The serious fire would have been regretted at any time, but happening just now, when the future of the Yard is in doubt, it can only be regarded as a first class calamity. The towns of Pembroke Dock, Pembroke and Neyland, with many adjacent villages, are entirely dependent on the Government Dockyard, and the heavy reduction of workmen employed, ranging from 4,000 to a matter of 1,700, has materially contributed to the attenuated resources of the whole district.”

The long and vigorous campaign to save Pembroke Dockyard has been ably documented elsewhere. “ A petition to Prime minister Stanley Baldwin stressed the lack of alternative employment and the economic consequences. The town would be denuded of wage earners with the transfer of 400 established men and the discharge of 800 hired workers for whom there was no other work; trade would be paralysed and there would be bankruptcy and ruin for traders; homes would be broken up and family ties severed.”

The decision, however, was irreversible. The Navy simply had too many dockyards and the Admiralty had to keep a fleet together with much-reduced funds. Pembroke and Rosyth had to go. The choice was laid out starkly by the First Sea Lord, Admiral of the Fleet Earl Beatty, in his speech at The Lord Mayor's Banquet on 9 November 1925: “Whether these Yards are necessary for naval purposes, the Admiralty is the only competent judge. As to whether they are necessary for political or social reasons is for the Government to decide. The fact is, that so far as the upkeep of the Fleet is concerned, they are entirely redundant.”

Pembroke Dock is now 'almost entirely a town of unemployed and pensioners', commented the Telegraph Almanac in 1927. The direct consequence of State policy was thus to destroy a town: between 1921 and 1931 some 3,500 people, a quarter of the town's inhabitants migrated. Most of these were the skilled tradesmen. In 1937 over half of the insured population of the borough were unemployed. It is apparent that in its heyday things had been very different.

Growth had continued fast down to the close of the nineteenth century, the Pembrokeshire Herald of 20 January 1899 observing: "prospects for the future of the Yard are bright".

It pointed out that very recently there had been only about fifty joiners in the Yard, whereas at the present time the number was 200. If we turn to the total numbers employed, then we discover that on 1 May 1860 some 1,356 worked there, a number which grew to between 2,200 and 2,500 by 1898-1899. Wages were high compared with those of other workers: thus the average weekly wage of skilled labourers in the Yard in September 1899 was 24s. whereas the annual average weekly wage in 1898 for those Pembrokeshire farm labourers who were married and provided their own food was 15s. 10d.

There is no mistaking the calamity of 1926 for Pembroke Dock inhabitants. But a good many employed in the Dockyard lived in Pembroke, Neyland, and in outlying villages. Many from the country districts having been formerly employed as farm labourers. Some of the Dock yard mechanics and artisans living in these outlying rural villages rented smallholdings, a reminder once again that Pembrokeshire workers employed in industrial undertakings often had links with the land. These neighbouring towns and villages also suffered in 1926. Local farming, too, was adversely affected through the loss of demand for its produce from dockyard workers and their families.

On 4 April 1956 the hulk of the old iron screw frigate, HMS Inconstant, which Lady Muriel Campbell had "gracefully and dexterously" launched at Pembroke Dockyard on a Thursday afternoon in 1868, arrived at a Belgian port for breaking-up. She was the last Pembroke-built ship afloat. On 29 June that year, Admiral Leonard Andrew Boyd Donaldson, the last Captain-Superintendent of Pembroke Dockyard, died aged eighty-one in a Portsmouth hospital. The last ship and the last sailor had gone to their haven under the hill just thirty years after the closure of His Majesty's Royal Yard at Pembroke Dock.

Pembroke Dockyard Today

Today almost nothing remains of those former glories. The building slips have almost all disappeared beneath new developments. A few surviving Dockyard offices, priceless examples of the stonemason's art, are slowly crumbling. The old Dockyard Chapel has been stripped of its memorial window to the lost Atalanta, its oak pews were taken away by the Royal Air Force and its famous bell, captured from the Spaniards, gone without trace.

(The bell was taken from the Spanish second-rate Fenix captured during Rodney's Moonlight Battle on 16th January 1780. The ship was commissioned into the Royal Navy as HMS Gibraltar and was broken up in Pembroke Dockyard in November 1836 when, presumably, her bell was mounted in the recently completed Dockyard Chapel.)

At Pembroke Dock, the Royal Navy still occupied a part of the old Royal Dockyard, HM Mooring and Marine Salvage Depot and was, until recently under the command of a Resident Naval Officer, who also had the title of Queen's Harbour Master. It has since been civilianised.

The depot was a major employer in the area .In 1975 170 people work there - and was the base for a fleet of Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service vessels, the largest of which was the salvage ship Garganey.

Their 'patch' extends from the Isle of Man to Land's End including the Bristol Channel, and in that area, as part of the Naval salvage organisation, they would be the first to be involved in a Government salvage operation. This includes the recovery from the sea of crashed aircraft.

They are also responsible for the laying and maintenance of all Government mooring and navigation buoys in their area, a mighty task as under each buoy is a complex system of large anchors and chains weighing up to 200 tons. All this has to be lifted, inspected and components changed, at regular intervals.

The RMAS vessels also play a key role in operations on the Royal Aircraft Establishment's guided missile range off Aberporth, where HM ships are frequent visitors for trials.

A Legend – The Haunting of H.M.S. 'Asp'

In the year 1850 a Captain Alldridge was given command of H.M.S. Asp, but he never realised how much concern that particular command was to cause him in the future. During a few convivial parties with his seafaring friends, they told him she was said to be a haunted vessel. The Captain, who was not a superstitious man laughed heartily, but from the day he took command he felt there was something strange about the ship.

He had been many years at sea and had heard all the unaccounted noises that always seem to be in a ship at night, the creaks and groaning of its timbers.

He had never heard noises like this ship made, but before long he became quite used to the sounds and paid no further attention to them.

He lay asleep in his ship one night while it was at anchor at Milford Haven, South Wales. He must have been asleep for some time when he was awakened by his Quarter-Master.

' Please to come on deck, sir. The look-out man has been to fetch me and he seems in a terribly shocked condition,' he said. The Captain was not at all pleased about being awakened, but he got up and made his way to the main deck. There he found his look-out man almost incoherent with terror. He insisted he had seen a woman standing on the paddle box pointing towards heaven with her forefinger. She was dressed in white.

' I am going to die for sure tonight,' he said hysterically. The Captain angrily commanded the man to assume his watch on deck and not to be so silly or he would be flogged in the morning.

He ordered the Quarter-Master to see that his command was obeyed. He added that he was not to be disturbed any more during the night about any sightings of the supernatural, or there would be trouble.

For a while, the look-out man tried his best to carry on, but he was overcome by a kind of fit and had to be carried below by his mates.

An entry in the Ships log reads " 3rd December 1852 Seaman Ferris has been charged with deserting lookout duty. During a summary hearing it was alleged that the figure of a woman appeared on the aft deck beckoning and pointing below deck. On medical evidence the accused was found to be sober but emotionally disturbed"

This was not the end of the haunting. The woman appeared to other members of the crew, and, just as on the first occasion, she silently pointed heavenwards.

Some of the sailors were terribly frightened when they saw this woman, but did not dare to say anything about it in case the Captain had them flogged. The others shrugged it off as imagination or too much rum.

During the time the ship was anchored in Haverfordwest River, one Sunday morning the Captain attended church. The sailors had all gone ashore to visit Lawrenny, a village nearby, in the hope of finding congenial female company. The only crew member left on board to keep an eye on things was the ship's steward, a very prosaic kind of man. He was just coming down the companion ladder, thinking of nothing in particular, when a husky voice spoke to him

He was so frightened when he heard this disembodied voice that he fell down the companion way ladder, injuring himself slightly

When the captain came on board the steward told him the disembodied voice which had spoken to him. The captain was angry at first but the man who had a ghastly look on his face begged for his immediate discharge from the Navy. The captain thinking that in this state the steward was useless granted his request, at which the man rushed off to collect his belongings while the captain signed his discharge papers.

The steward did not want to spend another night on H.M.S. Asp, and left as soon as he received his discharge.

News that the ship was alleged to be haunted reached the village of Lawrenny. Among those who got to hear about the haunting was the local vicar, who had a great interest in the supernatural. He called on the Captain and asked to speak to some of the crew members. The Captain was not very keen to grant permission as he was getting rather tired of the ghost and it was upsetting the men, but he did not want to seem discourteous, so he granted the Vicar permission to visit the ship and talk to the crew.

After interviewing the sailors, the Vicar said he was sure there was a ghost on board, but the Captain refused to let him carry out any form of exorcism, telling him that if the Captain was not afraid of the ghost, then surely the sailors were not either.

The ghost certainly caused the Captain much inconvenience during the years he commanded the Asp.

Several of his men who had told him the same story about seeing the ghost asked for their discharge. He had to let them have their discharge because if he did not so great was their terror that they ran away.

The strange thing was that each man told the same story of seeing a woman dressed in white pointing upwards to heaven. She appeared in many parts of the ship, and at all hours of the day. The Captain remained sceptical about any ghost being on the ship, until one night when he began to change his mind. He was awakened by a sensation of a hand being placed on his leg above the bedclothes. The touch was icy cold even through the thick woollen blankets, and the cabin had become very cold.

He rang loudly for the Quarter-Master in case someone had been playing a joke, but there was no sign of anything anywhere. This incident happened a few times, but the Captain was a brave man and he did not bother very much. At last something happened to really disturb him. He awoke to find a hand smoothing his forehead. He said afterwards that every hair on his head stood up in fright and he leapt out of bed, but there was no one around. Now the Captain, too, was not very happy about the ghost, but he was afraid to tell any of his contemporaries in case they laughed at him.

In 1857 the ghost left H.M.S. Asp, never to return. The ship had been taken during the autumn of that year to Pembroke Dock for repairs. On the second night after the ship had docked, a sentry swore he saw a figure climb onto the paddle-box of the ship. He noticed it was the figure of a woman, pointing upwards, which then stepped on shore and made straight for him. He was not aware that he had seen the ship's phantom. To him it was just a female figure that had no business on the ship. Pointing his musket, he shouted, 'Who goes there?' The figure took not the slightest notice and continued to advance. It walked straight through the barrel of the musket, which the man dropped in terror as he ran to the guardhouse. The sentry standing next to him stayed at his post, although he had seen the whole eerie happening. He was made of sterner stuff than his comrade. He fired his musket to attract the attention of his Guard Commander. A third sentry, who was on guard some distance away from the other two, had an even worse experience than either of them. He saw the figure of a woman dressed in white walk past him and make its way towards the ruins of Pater Old Church across from the dockyard.

The apparition walked into the disused churchyard, and the sentry, who had climbed the wall, saw exactly what happened. The figure climbed on to an old grave, and, standing in the centre, pointed a finger towards heaven. Slowly, slowly, with arms upraised, it sank into the grave, passing through the black gravestone, vanishing from the sentry's sight.

The Guard Commander was told by the sentries what they had seen, and although it seemed unbelievable, he wrote a report of the incident. The ghost never haunted H.M.S. Asp again and the strange noises of the night ceased.

The once sceptical Captain Alldridge became very anxious to find out whom the woman had been when she was alive, and eventually found that H.M.S. Asp had once been engaged on mail packet duties between Port Patrick and Donaghadee.

After one journey a stewardess whose duty it was to check all the cabins immediately the passengers had left the ship, was on her rounds. She went into a cabin and saw a beautiful, dark-haired girl lying on a berth. She thought the young lady had been asleep and not realised the ship had berthed, as she appeared to be wearing a long white night-dress.

The stewardess went to wake her, when to her horror found that the girl's throat had been cut and she was a horrifying sight covered in blood.

No one ever found out who the girl was, nor was the murderer ever found.

The macabre discovery by the stewardess was talked about all over Britain and Ireland at the time, and then everyone eventually forgot about it.

Captain Alldridge told the Admiralty about the haunting of H.M.S. Asp, and of the tragedy he had unearthed after a great deal of enquiry.

H.M.S. Asp was thoroughly searched, but nothing was found to be amiss. She was then refitted throughout.

She was handed back to Captain Alldridge, and during the whole of his command of her that followed there was no disturbing happening of any kind, and the strange noises ceased.

He sometimes wondered whether the cruelly murdered woman's ghost had left her grave near Pembroke Dock and journeyed on the Asp in the hope of bringing her murderer to justice, but had eventually given up in despair.

Pembroke Dock Town

Early Days

When the early dwelling-houses were built in the town, tanks were attached for the collection of rain-water. In addition to these tanks, there were wells of spring water for the use of the public. One was the Fountain Well, at the top of South Park Street. For many years this well was uncovered, and therefore dangerous. Mr. Seccombe father of the Mr. William Seccombe, made a collection amongst the townspeople, and had it built over. The Fortland Well was situated at the lower end of the boundary wall of the Hut Encampment. The water had its source in a spring distance above the wall. Near this spot was the old road which led to Pembroke Ferry, but it is now enclosed and the present one substituted. The water was obtained through a tap fixed in the wall. The military authorities have within recent years appropriated the supply, and it has been cut off from the public, although, for a long period the people had claimed it as their own right. The Rock Well, a natural spring flowing out of the rocks near the New Pier, was much used, as also were the Cambrian well, on the hill between Lower and Middle Prospect Place, and the well which was on the east side of Tregenna's Hill or Bellvue.

With regard to the Water supply from the well at Bellvue there was a problem. The newly built Bethany Chapel at the summit of the hill had enclosed land for a graveyard. This graveyard caused contamination of the water supply to the well. Orders were given by the Dockyard medical authorities to close the graveyard.

With the exception of a few wells in private gardens, these were the only sources the majority of the people had for the supply of this most essential necessary of life. Two or three of the streets near the Dockyard were supplied with water from the Government reservoirs. These reservoirs were built with earth taken from the Barrack Hill after it came into the possession of the Government, when they excavated and levelled a portion of it in connection with the Defensible Barracks.

For many years the water question was a grievous one; at one time the town practically suffered from a water famine, and whenever there was a spell of dry weather it was very scarce.

The Mr. James Williams, J.P., of London Road, agitated for a long while to have this state of things remedied, and was successful in getting a supply of water by means of a tunnel bored in the eastern side of the hill, near Prospect Place, through which the springs were tapped. The water was then conveyed into large covered-in reservoirs.

Some time after this Councillor W. Davies, J.P. of Princes Street, who was then Chairman of the Water Committee, greatly interested himself in getting hydrants placed in convenient parts of the streets, supplied with water conveyed by pipes from the above-mentioned reservoirs. This water is pumped to a high level, and brought by pipes to the town and to the Dockyard, and also to the garrison.

The town was never been systematically drained, because the work, which was begun in 1900, proved to be difficult and very costly. It was, however, hoped it will be completed, and all the connections made, in less than two years. The estimated cost of the drainage scheme and the waterworks combined £54,516.

In fact my house in Pennar did not have a flush toilet till 1947. This was constructed in the back yard and the only water supply was a cold water tap outside the back door.

Amongst the improvements of the town was the Jetty, constructed to the west of the Dockyard, on the principal portion of a dangerous mass of rocks known as the Carrs unfortunately near the end of the Dockyard's life. The Jetty was built for the purpose of coaling ships and the hoisting of boilers and machinery into position on the ships. The sheer legs erected for this purpose are reckoned to be among the largest ever constructed, and are capable of lifting over 100 tons. The cost of the Jetty was £110,000.

In King William Street there is a large yard, formerly used in connection with a business carried on by the late firm of Messrs. Jones and Johns Government contractors. This firm built barracks at Dublin, Devizes and Cardiff, also the early brick huts at the Hut Encampment and did work at different times on all the forts at Milford Haven. They, too, erected the cottages at Llanion and many of the houses in London Road. With regard to other industries the building trade during the period employing a great number of men and boys. The principal builders were Mr. Charles Young, Mr. David John, and Mr. John Scourfield.

Free Masons

Amongst the number of volunteers who in the year 1824 came to Pembroke Dock, in response to the invitation from the Admiralty were three Freemasons from Devonport, Mr. William Hutchings, grandfather of Mr. James Hutchings, J.P., of Bush Street, and also of Mr. Horatio Johns Assistant Constructor in H.M. Dockyard; Mr. William Cook; and Mr. John Chapple. These three met at Mr. Hutchings' house in Market Street, with the object of establishing a lodge of the Ancient Order of Freemasons in the town. It is a matter of uncertainty whether the lodge was started at Mr. William Hutchings' house or not. It is thought more likely that it was formed at the Porter Stores, at the top of Tregenna's Hill, kept by Mr. Jones, father-in-law of the late Alderman Samuel Jenkins, for it is recorded that the fraternity regularly met at these stores. Mr. Jones removed afterwards to the Victoria Hotel, and there the brotherhood met for many years.

The lodge, which bears the name of the Loyal Welsh Lodge of Wales, was numbered in its earliest days 79. In 1832 the number was changed to 525, and still later (in 1863) to 378. The charter for the lodge was granted by H.R.H. the late Duke of Sussex on October 1, 1824. The first meeting of the lodge was held on September 24, 1824, with eleven members. The first Worshipful Master was Dr. Thomas, JP. of Officers' Row. He continued in office from 1824 to 1826, and upon his vacating this honourable position was presented with a beautiful gold medal from the brethren. It cost £10, and was enclosed in a velvet lined case with a crystal glass cover.

Mr. John Chapple occupied the chair of office in 1826 and 1827. In 1830 Mr. William Hutchings worthily filled this important post, and during his time of office was most assiduous in the cause, and was thoroughly conversant with the rites of the order. It often fell to his lot to instruct the brethren in the inauguration of new lodges, which in those days of inconvenient travelling made the carrying out of such duties no sinecure.

Mr. William Cook succeeded Mr. William Hutchings as Worshipful Master.

The lodge was removed in later years from the Victoria Hotel to the house of Mr. Webb, shoemaker, Meyrick Street North; from thence it was transferred to the Royal Edinburgh Hotel. It was removed from there to Meyrick Street North, to what are known as the Masonic Buildings, which are chambers over the shop premises owned by Mr. Mathias, of Dimond House.

After so many removals, the Freemasons decided to build a permanent place wherein to hold their lodge meetings. A suitable site was chosen in Bush Street West, and on Wednesday, May 20, 1902, the foundation and corner stones of a new Masonic Hall were laid. The weather on the day was propitious, and the Freemasons marched in procession from the schoolroom of St. John's Church, where a special lodge was opened, to the site of the new building, headed by the Volunteer Band. The line of route was decorated by flags suspended from many windows; and, clothed in full regalia; the members of the Order presented an imposing appearance.

After prayer and the singing of an anthem, the laying of the chief stone was proceeded with. Previous to its being placed in position, some papers and documents were laid in a prepared cavity. These were a copy of the Pembroke Dock Gazette, a list of the officers and building committee of the Loyal Welsh Lodge, the by-laws of the Provincial Grand Lodge and of the Loyal Welsh Lodge; and a programme of the day's proceedings. A plate was placed then to cover over the cavity, and the stone was laid by the Rev. David Bowen, of Monkton, Deputy Provincial Grand Master, Past G.C., of England, according to the rites of Freemasonry.

A corner-stone was laid to the right of the foundation-stone by Colonel Meyrick, C.B., and one further on, to the west of the building, by Lord Kensington, D.S.O. An address was then given by the Rev. David Bowen, and after two hymns and the National Anthem had been sung, the Freemasons again formed in processional order, and returned to St. John's Schoolroom to conclude the business of the day.

On Tuesday, January 24, 1905, the new Masonic Hall was formally opened by Mr. H. G. Truscott, G.M. 1904. In honour of the occasion the Freemasons presented Mr. Truscott with a handsome gold jewel in a velvet-lined case, inscribed as follows: 'Presented to Brother H. G. Truscott by the Brethren of the Loyal Welsh Lodge, No.378, Jan.24,1905'.

At a lodge held on the same day, Mr. Levi Phillips was installed as Worshipful Master for the coming year of office (1905) by the retiring Master, Mr. H. G. Truscott.

The Architects who designed the new Masonic Hall were Messrs. G. Morgan and Sons, of Carmarthen, and the contractor who carried out the work was Mr. Charles Young, of Gwyther Street. The estimated cost is £1,500.

Special mention should be made of the roll of the Masters in the lodge-room, which is a complete record from 1824. The back of the frame bears this statement in illuminated lettering:

LOYAL WELSH LODGE 378 of FREEMASONS.

This frame was presented to the above Lodge by Bro. B. Mules, J.W.

It is made from the following historically connected woods:

The bases are from an old lintel brought from one of the old temples in Palestine: the pillars and arch are part of an old beam from the Cathedral of St. David's; the small frame on the top of the arch is from a portion of H. M. S. Bellerophon, which conveyed Napoleon I. to England, and contains the likeness of the first Master of the Lodge, the late P. M. Doctor Thomas.

The two metallic steps are part of the Atlantic cable which conveyed that truly masonic message from her Majesty the Queen to President Lincoln of America 'Glory to God on high, peace on earth and goodwill towards men'

Independent Order of Rechabites Friendly Society

The Independent Order of Rechabites Friendly Society was introduced into Pembroke Dock as an outcome of a series of temperance meetings held here in the early forties. The first meeting of the institution was held on October 12, 1842, in the house of a Mr. Gribbell, at the corner of Commercial Row, now occupied by Mr. Tucker, hairdresser and tobacconist. The members were there duly initiated as members of the Rechabite Order, Tent No.890. The Tent is a branch of the Salford Unity of Rechabites. It was decided that the newly formed Tent should be named the 'Superb'. The name was suggested by the launch of a vessel so called from the Dockyard about the same time; subsequent events have proved that the title was a happy and appropriate one. The Superb Tent, No.890, I.O.R.S.U. continued meeting at Mr. Gribbell's house for nearly two years; but as its members increased, the place became too small to accommodate them, so they removed to Mr. Tregenna's schoolroom in Pembroke Road. Here they held their meetings for four years, but again became straitened for room, and the Tent was removed to the Temperance Hall, which had not long been built, where for over half a century it has grown in members and funds. The removal of the Superb Tent to its new quarters at the Temperance Hall was marked by an attempt to do something for the youth of the town by the formation of a juvenile benefit society, similarly constituted in all respects, save in the matter of age and subscription, to the senior Tent. The venture proved successful, and the Juvenile Superb Tent was opened at the Temperance Hall, in October, 1848, on the anniversary of the Adult Tent. Members flowed into the Juvenile Tent so rapidly that in 1851 it was found necessary to divide the Tent into two sections, junior and senior, but both forming one society. At the age of sixteen years the members desirous of joining the Adult Tent are transferred to it from the Juvenile Tent. It is gratifying to know that this takes place in nearly every case. In 1887 the Superb Tent was registered under the Friendly Societies Act of Parliament. The number of its members at the present day is about 400; the Juvenile Tent has about half this number. On October 25, 1902, the Superb Tent of the Independent Order of Rechabites celebrated its diamond jubilee, when a special service was held at the parish church of St. John's, and the late Very Rev. Dean of St. David's, Dean Howell, preached an eloquent and appropriate sermon. In connection with this celebration a most imposing procession marched through the town. A social evening was held afterwards at the Temperance Hall.

Temperance Hall

About the year 1845 a great temperance orator named Scott came to Pembroke Dock, and through his earnest and eloquent speeches many joined the ranks of total abstainers. The late Mr. Tregenna, Mr. Davies and Mr. Lewis, who were at that time great workers in the temperance cause, united with others in promoting a movement whereby a special building should be erected for the furtherance of the cause. Accordingly, a site was secured for the purpose, and the Temperance Hall was built in 1845-1846. Mr. John Hall an Inspector of shipwrights held the lease of the land and advanced the money needed for the carrying out of the work. It is recorded that in or about 1868 Mr. William Griffiths of Park Street, took a new lease on the land for 99 years at £3 per annum, paid off the mortgage, and bequeathed the Hall to the Temperance Society. After the death of Mr. Griffiths, a tablet was placed in the Hall. It read as follows:-

This Tablet is erected by the Temperance Society as a token of their esteem for William Griffiths, late lessee of this Hall, and in remembrance of his zeal in the Temperance Cause.

The Temperance Hall was primarily intended for temperance meetings only, but it was however, afterwards used for various purposes. Since it was first built it had been lengthened, and has had anterooms added to it, and has been otherwise improved; but it was still inadequate to the needs of the population. It was damaged by enemy action during the Second World War and demolished in 1956. In 1948 the trustee's of the building agreed to give the site and the damaged building to the council without charge and the Council with the aid of War Damage Compensation from the Government were able to build a new Hall on the site. This Hall was named the Pater Hall and was opened by the Mayor Alderman William Nevin on December 11th 1957

The various temperance societies have done splendid work in the town. Among others who devoted almost their lives to the cause, a special reference must be made to the late Mr. Henry Road, who was untiring in assisting every effort put forth for temperance.

Lodges in the early town

1872 The Pembroke Dock Independent Order of Good Templars, Lodge No.57, started on September 12, 1872, at the Temperance Hall.

1873 The Bond of Friendship Lodge was formed in the schoolroom of Meyrick Street Congregational Chapel. It was broken up for a short time; an attempt to re-establish it was made in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Queen Street East, but it lasted for only a brief period.

1902 The lodge of the Good Templars known as Victoria the Good was opened in February, 1902, by the late Barrack-Sergeant Wilde, who was a Crimean veteran, and who also went through the Indian Mutiny.

1837 On January 29 in the first year of the reign of Queen Victoria there was an Oddfellows Lodge, named in honour of Her late Majesty the Loyal Victoria Lodge, opened at the Victoria Hotel. It is said that the large rooms at the back of this hotel were built for the purpose of holding such meetings.

The first Noble Grand, and subsequently Grand Master, was Dr. J. Sumpter, who lost his life by accidentally falling into the trench of the Defensible Barracks. The Loyal Victoria is the older lodge of Oddfellows, No.1822.

1844 On Christmas Eve, 1844, the Loyal Prince Albert Lodge of Oddfellows No.3836, held the first meeting at the Rose and Crown Inn. Mr. Johnson, of Queen Street, was present on the occasion, with seven other members.

Dr. Thomas, J.P., was the first Noble Grand. It is note-worthy that Dr. Thomas took a prominent part in nearly every institution in his day; as it has been quaintly said by an old inhabitant who knew him, 'Dr. Thomas was the front marcher in most everything'. The Grand Master of the district when the Prince Albert Lodge was first opened was Mr Samuel Jenkins.

The first of the funds, £10, were placed in the Savings Bank by Dr. Thomas, April, 1845. Fifty years after the society was founded, it numbered 140 members.

1844 the Ancient Order of Druids was represented in this locality, but the society soon broke up. Mr. W. D. Iveney, C.C., was a member of this Order, and there was in existence in the town an old certificate that belonged to Mr. William Pagett, of Pembroke, which states that he was initiated into the mystical rites of this old British Order on April 29, 1844.

Mr. Robert Lanning, once Town Clerk of the borough, and Dr. James Bryant, of Pembroke, held leading positions in this institution.

1845 The Ancient Order of Foresters started about 1845 under the name of the Court Star of Pater. The courts were first held at the old Foresters' Inn in King Street, but were afterwards removed to the Royal William Inn in Pembroke Street, now known as the White Hart.

1840's In the late forties there were a few members of a purely Welsh society called Ivorites, who held meetings at an inn which once flourished in Queen Street East, called the Royal George.

In 1854 the Ivorites became amalgamated with another court of Foresters named Court Victoria. About the same time also flourished, the Ancient Order of Shepherds, which was a sort of inner court of the Foresters; that is to say, one could not be a Shepherd unless he were a Forester first.

Mechanics Institute

1850 The Mechanics' Institute had its beginning in a small way. Two Dockyard officers, named respectively Mr. Abethel and Mr. Chevalier, assisted by a committee, started it in 1850 in the interests of the young men of the town to enable them to obtain a practical education with a view to their obtaining posts in the Royal Dockyard. It was held first in a room of a house in Lewis Street belonging to the late Mr. Thomas Dunbar Harris. Mr Harris was appointed Librarian, which position he held for up-wards of thirty-two years. Upon his retirement in September, 1882, he was presented with an illuminated address and a purse of gold on behalf of the members of the Mechanics' Institute. The new venture which was started flourished well, and with the increase of members the room in Lewis Street became too small to hold them; consequently it was decided at a meeting in January, 1862 to erect a more commodious building. A committee was formed to further the matter, and Mr. (later Sir Thomas) Meyrick granted the site of the building in Dimond Street for a term of ninety- nine years at the nominal rent of half a crown per annum. Many prominent ladies and gentlemen took up the matter heartily. A subscription list was opened to raise £700, the sum necessary for carrying out the work. On June 7th, 1862, the foundation stone of the present Mechanics' Institute was laid by Mrs. Ramsay, who afterwards became Lady Dalhousie. To assist the funds of the new building, a grand bazaar was held in the town in June, 1863, of which the late Countess Cawdor, the Lady Frederick Kerr, and Lady Meyrick were patronesses.

Since the Institute was first erected many improvements had been made, and much more money expended on the building. It had a good circulating library, with an opportunity given of changing books four times in the week. There is a billiard-room on the premises, also a large reading-room, open from 9.a.m. to 10.p.m. daily, where papers and magazines were freely provided. The subscription necessary to become a member was small - six shillings per year - and could be paid weekly or monthly. It is impossible to say what an immense benefit this institution is to the town, particularly to the younger portion of its inhabitants. Mr. John Llewellyn was the Librarian.

In the 1970's a friend Jimmy Meyrick Owen a local solicitor commented many times that he still enjoyed playing billiards there but there were only two or three who used the place. Parts were let off as offices to various organisations.

Banks and Building Societies

1863 the Pembrokeshire Permanent Benefit Building Society was started by Mr. Henry Trevena, of Laws Street South. Previous to this society there had been three others in the town, but the methods by which they were each carried on proved unsatisfactory as in these societies the monthly takings were put up by auction, and the highest bidder obtained the money, so it is very easy to see that such methods were sure to have proved means of discontent.

The first meeting of the new society was held on January 13, 1863, in the late Mr. W. J. Davies's auction-room, Queen Street East, when sixteen members were present; and on February 20, 1863, the Pembrokeshire Permanent Building Society was launched. The meetings afterwards were held at the Temperance Hall for many years, until the Building Society Office, opened July 1, 1892, was erected in Bush Street West. The members of this society up to December, 1904, numbered 1797, and the income for that year amounted to about £32,000.

The first secretary was Mr. John Mumford; next came Mr. W. Mathias, and after him Mr. John Butler. Upon his death the secretarial duties were taken over by Mr. Joseph Snoddy, a.

The next president was Mr. Richard Cornish, of Gwyther Street North. Upon the death of the Mr. D. Hughes Brown, solicitor, which occurred in January, 1905, Mr. F. W. Merriman was appointed his successor legal adviser, 1860's Some time in the early sixties there was a bank in Commercial Row, managed by the late Mr. James McLean. It was called the Milford Haven Bank, and was the first to be established in the town. Afterwards it was the South Wales Bank, and finally became a branch of the London and Provincial Bank, had premises at the north-west corner of Dimond Street. Mr. Richard Harwood was manager of this bank for many years. The followed by Mr. H.M. Rice.

The National and Provincial Bank also has a branch in the town. It was opened in Bush Street, next door to Cambria House. Thence it was transferred to Meyrick Street North - first of all into the premises occupied by Walters' Bank, which existed there for a short time, and then into a new building. The manager was Mr. Richard Thomas.

Other organisations

1843 the Ladies' Association of the British and Foreign Bible Society was formed; the prime mover in the work was a lady named Mrs. Taylor, wife of Captain Joshua Taylor, R.N. She lived at Llanreath, and the committee meetings for many years were held at her house. After this lady left the town, she was succeeded as secretary by Miss. Morris, of Laws Street North. The president of the Ladies' Association was Lady Meyrick, and the treasurer was Mrs. William Robinson, of Church Street.

1860's Some gentlemen of the town established the Pembroke Dock auxiliary of the Bible Society, with Mr. John Walter, a gentleman endowed with much Christian activity, as first secretary. The Rev. William Evans, , was secretary for a time; Mr. Joseph Merriman was afterwards appointed as such, and kept the secretarial books for no less than twenty-five years to be followed by Mr. A. Mackintosh.

1860's the Pembroke Dock Society for the Relief of Distress was established. Previous to this a small number of charitably disposed people had started what was known as the Culm Society, which, as its name shows, was formed to provide fuel for the poor in the winter. The relief society is said to have originated in the following way: One cold and stormy winter's night. Mr. William Dawkins, of Albion House, met Mr. John Walter, of the Dockyard, in the street; during their conversation they decided that the Culm Society was inadequate for the needs of the poor people, and that something should be done in the way of assisting them also with food. The outcome of this was the forming of the Society for the Relief of Distress, which is the oldest charitable institution in the town. The first meeting of the Society for the Relief of Distress was held in Mr. W. J. Davies's sale room in Queen Street East. The first president of the society was Mr. Meyrick of Bush. The first chairman of committee was Mr. W. Mason, J.P., of London Road. Its first secretary was Mr. John Walter, the other secretaries were Messrs. George Theobald Davies, F.A.E. Potts, C. W. Lawrence and J. Lawrence. Mr. F. W. Merriman, solicitor, took over the duties in 1904. Other members included Mr. Richard Harwood, formerly manager of the London and Provincial Bank, Mr. Isaac Smedley, J.P. Mr William Lawrence, and Alderman McColl, J.P., C.C.

During the Coronation celebrations, the society distributed special relief, together with portraits of their Majesties King Edward and Queen Alexandra, as a remembrance of the auspicious occasion.

1868 March 26,, a Vestry Meeting was convened at St.John's Church for the purpose of determining whether a Burial Board should be provided for St.John's parish. It was decided that this should be done. Dr.Fitzroy Kelly was in the chair on the occasion. The first business meeting of the Board was held in the Vestry room of the church on April 1, 1860. The first clerk of the Burial Board was the Mr. W. G. Phillips, (Gazette Office). he was appointed to the position on April 10, 1869. The first members elected were Captain Cocks and Messrs. J. Morgan, Cornelius Williams William Dawkins, William H. Lewis, James Howell and R. Bonniwell. The solicitor was Mr. G. Whitley Dunn. The architect was Mr. K. W. Ladd, at one time Borough Surveyor. Mr. Cornelius Williams for many years was clerk of the Burial Board; upon his death he was succeeded in this office by his son, Mr. A. Williams of Commercial Row.

1882, June 21 The Pembroke Dock and Milford Haven Chamber of Commerce, originally called the Chamber of Trade, was established with the object of promoting the trade of the town. The first president was Mr J.H. Teasdale, who held the office from 1882 to 1884. The first secretary was Mr. T. G. Hancock. After he vacated this office, it was filled by the late Mr. David Jenkins Then Mr. F. W. Merriman, solicitor. Since the Chamber of Commerce has been established, it was instrumental in bringing forward many benefits to this district. Amongst other things may be mentioned the Jetty, which undoubtedly was the outcome of an agitation on the part of its members for the building of a dry-dock. The naval authorities thought that a jetty was more necessary than the dock hence its erection. Some credit also must be given to the Chamber of Commerce for the stone barracks that built to take the place of the old wooden huts. The weekly half-holiday, which was a boon to the young people of the town, and the Wednesday half-day excursions to Tenby, also owe their origin to this institution. To it, too, must be attributed the better postal service, the reduction of railway rates, and many other matters which affecting the trade and prosperity of the town.

There is two political clubs in the town.

1886 The Conservative Club was formed in the Masonic rooms, Royal Edinburgh Hotel, 1894 Lord Cross, K.G., formally opened the Conservative Club, Bush Street which was built on the site of the old joint-stock shop.

1887 The Liberal Club was opened at the corner of Pembroke Street, facing Albion Square - Conchar's Corner. There was no public ceremony on the occasion, but the premises were declared open by Isaac Smedley, Esq., J.P.

1888 April The Pembroke Dock Co-operative Society was started at the corner of Bush Street in the house later occupied by Mr. John Grieve. During the time the society occupied these premises, a fire broke out there and destroyed a considerable quantity of stock; but owing to the valuable help rendered by the Connaught Rangers, who brought their hose, and obtained water from the tanks adjoining the neighbouring houses, the fire was soon subdued.

1892 July 16, the foundation-stone of the new buildings in Albion Square was laid by Mrs.W.J.Brown, wife of the president of the society at that time. The architect of these buildings was Mr.H.Cartwright Reid, C.E.

1889 Pembroke Dock Police-Station was built in Charlton Place. Before this place was erected, the house in Albion Square later occupied by Mr.Henderson, painter, for many years did duty as the station for the force.

1893 the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes was formed, under the Grand Surrey Banner, at the Pier Hotel.

1894 it was transferred to the Grand Lodge of England, and called the Royal Pater Lodge. In 1900 the lodge removed from the Pier Hotel to the Market Tavern in Pembroke Street. There were about sixty members.

1902 A new lodge was made in addition to the Royal Pater, and called the Sir Thomas Meyrick's Lodge, under the Grand Lodge of England. The meetings of this lodge were held in the Bush Tavern. There was forty members.

Pembroke Dock creation

The reason for Pembroke Dock is indicated in its name: it was developed as a dockyard town early in the nineteenth century, no more than two miles away from the established market of Pembroke. Whereas the latter was located on a narrow tidal pill leading off the Milford Haven waterway, Pembroke Dock was built on a low platform on the southern shore of the main estuary from which ships could be directly launched into the deeper waters of the channel. It was not built by a private entrepreneur as a commercial undertaking but by the Admiralty Board for the Royal Navy and, interestingly, it was to retain a military role long after the dockyard itself had outlived its usefulness. Shipbuilding for the Royal Navy had commenced in Pembrokeshire in the mid eighteenth century at Neyland and in the late eighteenth century at Milford, downstream of the subsequent developments at Pembroke Dock. When the yard at Milford became too expensive an alternative site was sought in the haven. That alternative site became known as Pembroke Dock.

Prior to the building of the town, the land - known as Paterchurch - was largely in agricultural use for centuries under the Adams Family until their debts became too great when it was acquired from the new owners by the Meyrick family. However, the Ordnance Department already had a foothold there, having purchased part of it at Paterchurch Point as the site for a fort - which was started but not finished - in the 1750s.

Initially, in 1810, an area of just over twenty acres was earmarked and purchased for the new venture, but this proved to be far too small and over subsequent years the Admiralty Board progressively extended its holding by taking in more land from the Ordnance Department and the Meyricks. The dockyard itself was marked out and fenced off in 1812 and then given a stone boundary in 1814 (which was replaced by a much more substantial structure between 1830 and 1832).

While it was the intention to move operations upstream in 1813, this was delayed until 1814 because of work in hand in Milford on the battleship Rochefort. Nonetheless, by the 1820 a dockyard was in place.

In these early days there was little residential accommodation in the immediate vicinity, with the workers in the yard having to travel daily from Milford and from other settlements on both sides of the waterway, but plans were afoot to create an associated new town.

The first houses in the town built after the opening of the Yard were built by Mr. Lowless, John Narbeth (Carpenter) and John Jones, started on the 14th May 1814 they were completed by the 25th September and were occupied by Mrs Thomas, (wife of the foreman of Shipwrights,) Mr. Thomas (foreman of Blacksmiths) Mr. Clun (Issuer of Stores) and Mr. Honeydear (Publican) These houses were built in Front St., then called Thomas St.

John Narbeth of Pembroke recording in his diary

1813 “In the year of the Lord 1 January 1813 began the enclosing of the new Dockyard, Pater, and the fitting up of workshops for the men and sheds for all sorts of materials; there was a temporary dock dug out to take in an old 74 gun ship for a storehouse , and the upperdeck for offices for the Builder and Storekeeper; the yard enclosed with wooden pailings.”

1814“ By 1st January 1814 the whole of the of the workmen were able to come there to commence their shipbuilding with Mr. Roberts as their builder , and not so much as one house on the spot , only Paterchurch farm, so poor old Pembroke was well filled with both officers and men for a few years”.

“On the 14th day of May 1814, Mr. Lowless and myself left poor old Pembroke to commence its rival, so on that day was the first shaving cut and first window frame made by John Narbeth, and by September 25th 1814, was the first four houses ready. Mrs. Thomas the foreman of Shipwrights wife came to take possession, and we drank to the success of the first house in Pater.

Mr Thomas, foreman of Shipwrights; Mr. Stephens, foreman of Blacksmiths; Mr. Clun, issuer of stores; and Mr. Honeydear, public house ; were the first four inhabitants of the new town, Michaelmas Day 1814. After that we built a public house for Mr. Phillips on the corner of Middle St”.

extract from a letter from Hugh Wilson to J Harcourt Powell, esq. ...The dockyard being so nigh will certainly improve the property at Pembroke, but great exertions are making to build houses adjoining the yard. There are now near one hundred building and engaged to build on Mr. Meyrick's property and the continuance of building there will , it is thought by everyone, keep the rents from advancing very rapidly at Pembroke..

Harcourt Powell MS unnumbered.

1815 June the Mayor of Pembroke requested help from the Navy Board to repair the old track which connected Pembroke with the new yard and which was being increasingly used by the work force who were lodging in Pembroke town. Previously it had only used as a means of communication with the farm buildings at Paterchurch. This request was refused but the following year the matter was again raised . It was agreed that if the parish would keep in good repair the whole of a road from the “Lodge” to farmer White’s house at Paterchurch (which stood at the top of what is now Sunderland Ave.) then the Navy Board would contribute £200 towards making the road.

1817 By 1817 the framework for the town was set down outside the east wall of the dockyard in a grid-iron arrangement of streets, some quite spacious, running north-south and east-west. The Admiralty Board and the Meyricks (the latter still retaining much of the vacant land adjacent to the dock) granted leases to an army of small builders who gradually lined the new thoroughfares with houses, sometimes in piecemeal fashion. The original leases from the Admiralty were for 60 years at 6d per foot but those from the Bush and Orierton Estate were for length of three lives with the addition on one in certain conditions.

Building commenced along the waterfront in what is now Front Street then Thomas Street after Thomas Meyrick After the building of Front St., houses were built in King’s St, Queen’s St., Commercial Road (now Commercial Row and Bellevue Terrace/ Tregennis Hill (Tregennis Hill was so called because a Mr. Tregenna occupied a house at top of it, his son was a prominent contractor and built forts down the Haven), Pembroke St., Cross Park, High St., Brewery Row (now Charlton Place)

1816 By 1816 the new Yard was expanding rapidly and more men were required. Work in the other major Royal Yards was slack and there was a immigration of large numbers of skilled tradesmen and their families, from the other Royal Dockyards, about 1816 necessitating a massive house building programme. Houses were erected as fast as possible many with the aid of the dockyard workers who worked on them after a day's work in the yard, but even so some were occupied before they were completed and many were of very poor standard.

1823 Back Cottages (Park St) were built in 1823.

1830 According to Mrs S Peters the majority of the older houses in Pennar were built about 1846 but the Ordinance Survey Map of 1839 based on a survey of 1830 shows that houses were already in existence in Upper St (now Castle St), Middle St (Grove St), Front St (Fleet St), Military Rd, and North St (Owen St) Mays Buildings (Nelson St)

This was the basic orientation of the grid layout which was to be extended eastwards and southwards After the end of the Napolionic War, the Yard time was, in the first instance, reduced to five and a half days a week, and later to five days a week. Tradesmen now and again, having to do laborers' work in the Yard and the gardens becoming very important as a source of food. The wages of the Tradesmen dropped to 19s per week and that of the Laborers to 10s estate was loathed to provide a site but Oriulton Estate was more receptive, also the Corporation had made a decent road leading from Pembroke through - Furzey (High Street), caused the construction of the town, for the time being, to move to Bethany Square as its center.

1818, cottages were built along Pembroke road, north, near Bethany Chapel.

1818 Bethany Chapel was erected-the first place of worship to be erected .in the new town. The first Bethany Chapel, with its cemetery was lighted inside by tallow candles that smoked needing deacons to go round, during the singing of the hymn before the sermon, with a pair of “snuffers” to lop of the burnt wick.

1820 Shortly after Bethany the first Wesleyian Chapel was built at the top of the row (Tregennis Hill), on the north side, just outside Mr. James Biddlecombe's garden, on the edge of the Barracks’s field It was a small place, but it had a gallery, and a choir sat in it.

1820, Cross Park houses were erected, and the big houses in the square followed.

The Caledonia," Inn; with its sign of a kilted Scotchman, the “Cambrian” Inn, Phillips Grocery Store, Barclays’ School (the present “Caledonia”) Glanville’s Grocery, Tregenna’s workshop and school were the first Temperance meetings were held. In the early days of the town Bethany Square was one of the important places of the town where the people met and talked in the summers evenings

Most of this was demolished with the building of the Defensible barracks.

Park St Cemetery

(acc to Mrs Peters History of Pembroke Dock 1905)

As the town of Pater increased in size, a proper place for sepulture became necessary. In Monkton Churchyard and in that of St.Mary’s, Pembroke, many of the earliest inhabitants of the town found their last resting-places.Bethany Chapel (built in 1818) was provided with a grave-yard wherein many were buried, but it was deemed expedient that a special place should be set apart for burials. During the growth of the town in three decades, the reaper Death had gathered in so many lives that the old burial ground became too crowded, and it was therefore necessary to provide a new cemetery.

1869 On October 2, 1869, this new cemetery was opened. But before the cemetery was formally opened a few internments took place . The Rev. Eliakim Shadrach, a much revered minister of Albion Square Church, of whom more in another chapter was the first was laid to rest in this ‘God’s acre’. He died April 8, 1869. A monument was erected to his memory by the members of the church, and in May, 1872, Miss. Maggie Moore, daughter of the late Mr.Joseph Moore, chemist unveiled it. This cemetery has recently been enlarged by the addition of more land.

1830's Smuggling

In the early 1830's smuggling was rife as was wrecking in some parts of the county, The Preventative Officers were keen to catch a man called Truscott from Pembroke who they suspected of smuggling and tried to trap him. A quantity of tobacco had been smuggled in to South Cliffs and one of the Preventative Officers, posing as a customer had persuaded Truscott to deliver it to Bentlass. That night Truscott, his friends, the tobacco and Truscotts young son who had just been taken along for the trip were waiting in Pennar Gut near Bentlass, they were approached by a boat load of Preventative Officers, rowing with muffled oars, Mr. Larkin in charge. Truscott spotted the Preventive Officers boat and he and his friends started rowing as fast as possible up river towards Pembroke. The preventive boat was rapidly overhauling them so the young boy jumped out of the boat and tried to swim towards Jacob's Pill. According to his account at the trial, the mate of the preventative boat shouted three time for him to stop before shooting him in the back of the head and killing him. There was a tremendous outcry throughout Pennar and the whole area, with meetings at Bethany Square, Pembroke and Pembroke Dock. The Preventative Officers had to be escorted to and from Pembroke Town Hall where the trial was held, by Marines, The mate was found not guilty but for his own safety had to be moved from the area.

From 1830 onwards development also occurred in the Melville Street/Albion Square area close to the south-east corner of the dockyard.

It was in this part of the town that the Market House was built in 1826 after the objections from nearby Pembroke had been resolved.

When the market was first proposed in 1817 the Corporation of Pembroke objected and finally the mayor of Pembroke wrote to the Officers of Pater Dockyard

Pembroke 12 September 1818

Gentlemen

Having been informed that the Government have held out an inducement to those persons who are inclined to take lots for building houses at H M Dockyard Pembroke, that a market place is to be built, and a market established there. I request to know if that be the case, and if you have felt it your duty to acquaint the proper departments of the state that H M Dockyard being situated within the liberties of this Borough, where there is a market established by law, that the establishment of another market at H M Dockyard would be an unlawful infringement and injury to the Franchise and Revenues of this Corporation

I have the honour to be etc.

The following year an act of Parliament was past (George III 59, C C XXV) giving powers to the Admiralty to build a market place and to make bye-laws for the good rule and government of the town.

The original landing place for the area was enclosed within Dockyard, but this was not really available at full tide owing to the accumulation of mud. To replace this and to facilitate the bringing of produce to the market from across the water, the Government built the Hard in 1827.

According to Mrs Peters (The History of Pembroke Dock) An eyewitness stated that the work of making the Hard was done by the men of the Dockyard, assisted by the marines, and the materials used for it were the refuse stones and rubbish left from the excavations made in forming or extending the Yard.

Objections to this Hard were made by James Huzzey, the lessee of Pembroke Ferry, who claimed the exclusive right of ferrying.

1826 the Admiralty built the market hall paying Pembroke Borough £3000 compensation for the right to sell goods (this right had previously belonged solely to the Freeman of Pembroke) The building cost £4630.5s.7d

1827. The foundation stone was laid in the northwest corner. Prominent at the ceremony were the Freemasons who marched from the Navy Tavern where they held their lodge meetings to the site. Also at this time the Admiralty built what is now Commercial Row, and slip in Front St., to compensate the town for the loss of the previous landing place, swallowed up by the expansion of the Yard, at a cost of £71. Its aim was to facilitate the bringing of produce from the surrounding area to the Market.

This became, right up until the 1850's, the principle landing place for boats to and from Neyland causing problems with the existing ferry from Pembroke Ferry to Burton. The lessee Mr Huzzey contended that he had the sole right to ferry people across the Haven from any point. The matter came before the courts at the Summer Assizes in 1834 and the judgement went against Mr Huzzey. Mr Huzzey took the matter of the Neyland Hobbs' Point ferry to the Court of Exchequer of Pleas. Again the judgement went against him.

The landing place at Neyland was at the point near a Public House called the Shipwright's arms and at that time kept by Mrs Margaret John. This public house disappeared when the new rail terminus was constructed at Neyland by Brunel.

Further enhanced means of transport were implemented in the 1830's

The Mail Service had previously run from Milford Haven but it was decided to improve the roads to Pembroke Dock so as to avoid the long hilly road from Narberth via Haverfordwest to Milford. This necessitated a new pier being built.

1830 the foundation stone of the pier at Hobbs Point (Named after a Nicholas Hobbs, buried May 4th 1728 who once owned land in the area.) was laid by Captain E J Savage R E. The excavations began in 1829 and for much of the work on the seaward side a diving bell was used. It was completed in 1832 it cost £20,250. 19s.3 1/4d.

Sailing packets - viz., the Auckland, Camden, Treeling, Gower, Iris and Mansfield - carried the Irish mails in the early twenties between Ireland and Milford, but in the year 1836 the mails were brought to Hobbs' Point to meet the royal mail-coaches,

The sailing packets were later discarded for small steamers named respectively the Adder, Advice, Jasper, Prospero, Pigmy, Donkey and Viper. A reserve steamer, the Firefly, was moored off Barnlake in case of emergency.

After the pier was completed, the London Mail-Coach Road, now generally known as the Lower Road, was made. The contractor was Mr. Henderson, of Bangeston House.

A large hotel was built near Hobbs' Point at the same time, with several stables attached for the mail-coach horses. It may be interesting to know that a dinner to celebrate the Earl Cawdor's coming of age was held at this hotel also a house was built for the Superintendent of Packets.

For many years after the Government placed a rope across the road once a year to preserve their rights.

1837 the service was taken over by the Admiralty but by 1848 other routes to Ireland had become more popular and the service closed. The hotel and stables was transferred to the War department, and until it was enclosed into the Military Hut Encampment, the Admiralty used the Superintendents house as a temporary hospital.

1831 A Steam ship service was introduced between Bristol and the Haven. Once a fortnight the "Frolic" a steam packet travelled from Haverfordwest, calling at Pembroke Dock, Milford and Tenby to Bristol Unfortunately on 16th March 1831 she was wrecked on the Nash Sands. All 71 people on board died including several from Haverfordwest and the son and daughter of Mr Henderson of Bangeston who was a local government contractor. Acc to Mrs Peters 1896 At one time the pier nearly became lost to the public. On August 13, 1896, a deputation of the Town Council Water Committee, with Mr.A.McColl as chairman, waited on Mr.Austen Chamberlain, then Civil Lord of the Admiralty, relative to the water supply of the town and the proposed closing of Hobbs' Point Pier to, the public.

After the plan of the laying on of the water had been shown and satisfactorily dealt with, the matter of the closing of the pier was brought forward. Upon conditions the deputation received an assurance that the closing order should be suspended for six months. A second deputation, consisting of Messrs. McColl, Sketch, S. J.Allen, and Hulm, again waited on Mr. Austen Chamberlain March, 1897, with the result that the closing order was extended to January 1, 1898. In December, 1897, Mr. J. Allen, then Deputy Mayor was in London on private business, when he found that, although the Corporation had made all the necessary arrangements with regard to the water-supply, the Local Government Board, in whose hands it then lay, had not so informed the Admiralty. They, thinking that the Corporation were the defaulters, determined to issue the final closing order of Hobbs' Point. Mr. Allen saw Mr. Austen Chamberlain, and placed the matter before him in the right light; consequently the closing order was unconditionally withdrawn,

Sailing packets - viz., the Auckland, Camden, Treeling, Gower, Iris and Mansfield - carried the Irish mails in the early twenties between Ireland and Milford, but in the year 1836 the mails were brought to Hobbs' Point to meet the royal mail-coaches,

The sailing packets were later discarded for small steamers named respectively the Adder, Advice, Jasper, Prospero, Pigmy, Donkey and Viper. A reserve steamer, the Firefly, was moored off Barn lake in case of emergency.

The coaches were drawn by four horses, which were changed at different posting-houses on the road, and ran as far as Gloucester; there they met the train, as the railway at that time was made between Gloucester and the Metropolis. The same driver only went to St. Clears. The posting-house where he stopped was the Picton Castle, and, being central for the coaches, a large and flourishing business was done there. The most popular of the men who drove the coach was named Bramble, and he is described by one who knew him well as "a real gentleman". It is sad to relate that this man took the innovation of the railway, and consequent cessation of the mail-coach service to Pembroke Dock so greatly to heart that he developed melancholia, and hanged himself, during a fit of depression, in a stable at Tenby.

1848 passengers for the royal mail-coaches became very scarce, and they ceased to run to Hobbs' Point. After that time the mails were carried by a four-horse coach to Narberth Road (now called Clynderwen), where it met the royal mail. The coach was owned by a man named Benjamin Davies and driven by his son-in-law John Thomas. After the railway to New Milford was completed in April, 1856, the mails were brought across the water and conveyed by the mail train to their destination. When the royal mail coaches were taken off the Lower Road, the stage coaches used to start from, and arrive at, the old Victoria Hotel, at the top of Pembroke Street. One of these coaches brought a newspaper every week. Weekly papers at that time cost sixpence, but, owing to the repeal of the newspaper stamp duty, were some time later reduced to threepence, and still later to the price of one penny. Alderman Hughes of Bush Street, used to stand on the steps of the Clarence Inn and read the paper to the people who congregated there for the purpose of hearing it every Sunday. During the Crimean War a crowd collected long before the arrival of the coach on the newspaper day, anxious to hear the latest news.

The hotel and stables on Lower Rd which had been built for the convenience of travellers were subsequently passed over to the use of the military, and the Government requisitioned Hobbs' Point. (The old turnpike gate through which the coaches passed disappeared in 1889.)

1831 the town's population was 3,076.

That was the year of the very hard fought parliamentary election between Sir John Owen of Orielton and Colonel Grenville of Milford. Haverfordwest was the polling station and large quantities of beer and food were supplied to influence the voters. Sir John's supporters included the colliers, many of whom worked in his mines and for intimidation only, one would hope, they marched round with their picks on their shoulders. Of course the other side was supported too. Grenville's supporters included the Shipwrights who entered the fray carrying their adze. Many fights were won by the Dockyardies. It is said that both gentlemen nearly ruined themselves with the expenses of this election which was won by Sir John Owen

The old lock up stood at the top of Brewery Row. Reputed to have been a miserable den with an iron studded door, the inside was sufficiently terrorising to expiate the fault of any poor unfortunate prisoner who was incarcerated therein. Attached to the lock up was the local pound with a strong iron spiked gate.

A description of the town in 1834 reads (Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis)

Pembroke Dock, sometimes likewise called PATER, or PATERCHURCH, is situated on the southern shore of Milford Haven, about two miles from the old town. It consists of several streets of neat and well-built houses, and is partially paved, but not lighted : there are numerous good shops for the supply of the population, , several of which are branches from the larger establishments in the borough. A handsome enclosed market-place was erected here about five years ago; but it has hitherto been but scantily supplied, and most of the inhabitants frequent the market at Pembroke. The dockyard forms a spacious area enclosed within a lofty wall of stone, and comprises a neat range of buildings for the public offices, houses for the principal officers of the establishment, a well-built chapel fitted . up with elegant simplicity for the use of the officers and men employed in the Yard, and a fort, which is just completed, for the defence of the place, mounting twenty- three long twenty-four pounders. There are twelve slips for ship-building, which is at present the only business carried on in the yard, though, from the low price of labour in this part of the country, and the facility of obtaining materials of all kinds, it is in contemplation to introduce other branches of labour for the naval service. There are at present on the stocks, and in different states of progress, the Royal William of one hundred and twenty guns ; the Rodney, of ninety two gun; the Forth, of forty-six guns; the Andromache, of twenty-eight; the Harrier, of eighteen; and the Cockatrice schooner. The number of men employed at present is about five hundred. Besides the Government establishment there is a small private dock, and it is probable that the Irish packet establishment will be removed from Milford to this place, with a view to which alteration a very fine jetty is now being constructed at Hobb's Point, a few hundred yards to the east of the dock-yard, from which new roads have been formed, connecting it with the main road from Carmarthen, in a new line avoiding both Narberth and Haverfordwest, by which route the mail will save a distance of several miles. About a mile to the east of the dock-yard is Pembroke ferry, belonging to the crown, and held by Sir John Owen, Bart., who underlets it at an annual rent of £200 : it forms the shortest and most usual line of communication between Haverfordwest and Pembroke, the distance between which places by the ferry is only ten miles, but by Narberth twenty-five : the fares are one-halfpenny for a foot passenger, one penny for a man and horse, and one shilling per wheel for carriages.

The regularity of the streets suggests at first sight that development took place in a much more structured way than was the case. The reality was that numerous builders were engaged in the process, and terraces were often formed by the coalescence of individual or small clusters of houses, rather than built in their entirety by one person at one time. This is revealed in the Registers of Building Plans which show that many lessees and/or builders applied for building approval in a particular street and that their applications were spread over months and sometimes years. As an example, 'One of the present-day main thoroughfares - Dimond Street - was built piece-meal, the south side of the street completed almost fifteen years before the northern part. In Market St one plot was not built on till 1847 and Princes St still had plots vacant in the 1840's. For a long time the northern side retained a high, thorny hedge - an incongruous sight in the centre of the thriving and developing town. By this process, a town of over 11,000 inhabitants (that is, Pater Ward of Pembroke M.B. in the 1901 Census) came into being during the nineteenth century. What was built was not particularly impressive, rows of terraced houses of one or two storeys with slate roofs. The town was built basically to accommodate large numbers of workers in industrial employment. Most streets were lined by two storey, single-fronted houses but showing some variation, especially over the course of the century. In general, those built in the early days closest to the waterfront and dockyard (such as Front Street, Brewery Street and Clarence Street) were small and had plain facades. Those built later in the century, while retaining the same overall structure, were larger in their internal dimensions and had bay-windows. An interesting and distinctive form of working-class housing was the use of the single storey cottage, particularly characteristic of the outer parts of the town (for example, in High Street and Waterloo), where four rooms were built at street level. Certain areas had far grander houses - witness Officer's Row, (Queen St West) which was completely occupied by Dockyard Officers.

At this time every woman walking about the town had to wear clogs or pattens to keep their feet and dresses clear of the mud because the streets were not very well made up. At night a lantern was a necessity as piles of culm and slime for mixing into fuel, would very often be left in the street overnight. Water had to be fetched from wells and rain water collected in tanks. The Admiralty had their own supply having driven tunnels into Barrack Hill to collect it. They also purchased the right to the springs at Bethany Corner from Mr Tregennis for £200 had piped it down to their reservoir at the top of Charlton Place. These springs had previously fed a stream running down, in a deep ravine, where Tregennis Hill is now. As the town grew, facilities followed. At the start there was skeleton shopping provision in Commercial Row, these included Trewent drapery shop, Clougher's book shop, the Royal Oak Hotel and general shop kept by Nathaniel Owen, where at first the leading hands of the gangs used to distribute the wages. And Moore's the Chemist.

Friday St., so called, was where goods were sold before the Market was built. The name was later changed, in 1827, to Clarence St in honour of the visit of Prince William Henry, Duke of Clarence (later William IV) who came to witness the launch of the "Clarence". With the town's spread westwards, the centre of commerce gradually shifted in that direction, until Queen Street and Diamond Street, and the spurs leading off them, became the main shopping artery.

After a period of stagnation the town had started spreading eastward in 1836 mainly due to the increase in size and therefore employment brought about by the Dockyard expansion. Queen St East, part of Meyrick St and Lewis St were built about this time. It had been intended to build a row of better houses up the Dockyard Avenue and two were built but the arrival of Mr Edie as Master Shipwright changed the plans. He decided on the planting of a row of trees and the two houses built were purchased by the Government and allocated to the Lieutenant in charge of Police and the Boatswain of the yard.

The Postal Service

1837 London Mail Coach arr. 12.34, dep. 01.32. 273 miles

Hobbs Point was made a Post Town when the Irish Packet was transferred there from Milford Haven about 1837. Before the establishment of the harbour at Hobbs Point the main centre of population was at Pembroke Dock (the Admiralty Dockyard) and the village of Pater or Paterchurch which both lay about half a mile away to the southwest. These places were, in turn, a fifth Class Post under Pembroke two miles to the south east. When Hobbs Point was established Pembroke Dock became a Penny Post under Hobbs Point.

The additional 1/2d. charge.

In 1826 Telford surveyed the Hobbs Point-St. Clears road as an alternative to the much criticised Milford-St. Clears turnpike. In 1833 his road from Hobbs Point was under construction but the funds held by the Turnpike Trust for completion were inadequate and according to the 1846 Report of the Commissioners on Highways in South Wales further moneys (the amounts quoted by different people giving evidence to the Commission conflict) were secured against a charge to be levied on letters carried from Ireland to South Wales. The 1/2d. surcharge Act was passed on 22 June 1836 and applied to letters coming into Milford;. Probable period of use was Jul. 1836 to Dec. 1839.

The Waterford Packet had to come to Milford until about 1837 when it moved to Hobbs Point, (near of Pembroke Dock).

One reason for moving it was the poor state of the turnpike between Haverfordwest and Milford. This road, built by Greville in 1791, was so bad in 1817 that the Secretary of the Post Office, Sir Francis Keeling, sent for Henry Leach, Collector of Customs and Controller of the Post Office Packet at Milford, and told him that it would be impossible to maintain the mail for Ireland unless the road was improved. Leach in his report the following year attributed the lack of repairs to misappropriation of funds by the trustees of the turnpike.

1825 Telford surveyed this road and subsequently was asked to survey the route to Hobbs Point from St. Clear and Begelly. In order to help pay for the new road to Hobbs Point an Additional' 1/2d surcharge was authorised on letters

Law and Order

Acc to Mrs Peters

The two first magistrates in the town were Dr. Thomas and Mr. Probert.

Dr. Thomas resided in Officers' Row, and subsequently in Charlton Place. He was also a Town Councillor.

At Mr. Probert's house magisterial business was conducted. The house that he occupied was the small one adjoining Albion Square Chapel. It was at that time, with the exception of the Albion House, the only building in the square. It had a small court of grass and flowers in front, and in addition a similar one at the side.

The guardians of the peace were two or three constables.

One was a retired sergeant named Gilfillan, another was Lipton and one was named George Young, familiarly known as Old Young. The duties of these men were manifold, if light.

George Young also acted as sanitary inspector, for which duty he received £5 a year.

At the top of Brewery Row formerly stood the old lock-up. It was a miserable den with a nail studded door, and the inside was sufficiently terrorizing to expiate the fault of any poor unfortunate prisoner who was incarcerated therein. Attached to the lock-up was a small plot of grass, secured by a strong iron spiked gate; this was the local pound. To the delighted curiosity of small children, very occasionally a stray quadruped might have been seen inside.

1843/4 Mr Edward Laws, Naval Storekeeper of Pembroke Dockyard and a trustee of the Bush Estate was selected as Mayor of the Borough, he was also the chief magistrate for Pembroke Dock.

1860, the next one was Mr James Cocks a master mariner and timber merchant. He died age 89 in 1891.

1870 Samuel Jenkins and ex Dockyard official and landlord of the Victoria Hotel was Mayor (he later was landlord of the Bush Hotel)

1872 William S Lewis a draper of Pembroke St was Mayor.

The growth of the town depended on improvements inside the dockyard and the build-up of military support. The presence of the dockyard created the need for armed protection, and from the early there was a military presence in the town. Early in the century they were housed in an old vessel but permanent barracks and fortifications were soon needed. The three most important developments for the overall shape of the town were the Defensible Barracks, the Pennar Barracks and the Llanion Barracks.

Work started on the first in 1844 on the top of the hill - which became known as Barrack Hill - immediately behind the dockyard; the second was completed before the end of the century for the Royal Engineers; and the third replaced a hut encampment for the Crimean War at Llanion overlooking Hobbs Point.

With the demolishment of the houses by the War Department to provide a clear field of fire from the Barracks, many who had lived in Wesley Row, Cross Park, Tregennis Hill West and Bethany Square moved to the new houses that were being built in what is now Bufferland. The influx of military personnel led to an increase in housebuilding and as well as Dimond St South and Meyrick St Water St East and Lewis St and Laws St were started. The Temperance hall was erected in 1845.

Migration in and out

But there were times of unemployment, and migration in and out. An example is the Hawgood family recorded in the 1851 Census Pembroke Dock

By the end of the nineteenth century the main features of Pembroke Dock were in place, An enclosed naval dockyard, and associated fitting-out facilities on the waterway;

To the east of this yard a grid-iron town, with its streets (some spacious) lined by rows of terraced properties, these showing some variation in size and style. Residential development had also spread up the hill to the south, with streets leading off the road to Pembroke and towards Pennar; Shopping facilities were located in Commercial Row and the Market House nearby, and along the main thoroughfares to the east, especially the Queen Street/Dimond Street axis.

Large tracts of land at the edges were given over to military uses, most notably at Barrack Hill, Pennar and Llanion; Land was purchased at Llanion for the use of the army and a site near Hill Farm was also purchased with the intention of building a Military Hospital. Land was purchased at Pennar Point, a bridge built to connect Cross Park with Pennar, and a road built to connect this bridge with Pennar point. The original intention was to bridge the mouth of Pennar Gut and then continue the road linking all the Military Forts down to Angle.

The Pembroke and Tenby Railway, which had opened a station in Pembroke Dock in 1864, was extended through the town, cutting across some of its streets en route, into the dockyard, with a secondary spur to Hobbs Point, in the early 1870s

The use of culm for fires going out of fashion by the 1850's and a coal yard was established at the top of Pembroke St by a Mr Michael Morris. House coal from Newport arrived by sea and was offloaded at Front St. In the early part of the 1900's the yard was run by a Miss Leais.

Among notable buildings and services were the Mechanics Institute, Dimond St whose foundation stone was laid by Mrs Ramsey wife of Captain Ramsey M (Later Earl of Dalhousie) in June 1862. The land was leased by T C Meyrick for 99 years at 2s 6d per year. It contained a Reading room, a library of 3500 books and a small museum Members paid 6d per week

The Mechanics' Institute situated in Dimond street, the foundation stone of which was laid June 2th, 1862 contains a fine reading-room, which is well supplied with the daily and weekly newspapers and periodicals : the library contains about 4,000 volumes, and there is a small museum in connection with it.

Post Office

acc to Mrs Peters

The first post-office, as may be expected, was a very unpretentious place of business. It was held in a small house opposite the market house. The postmaster who kept it was a Mr. Tribble. The office was afterwards removed to the Mail-coach Hotel, Hobbs Point; from thence it was transferred to a house on the site of the present Pier Hotel. At both these last named places a Mrs. Williams did duty as postmistress. For a time she also kept it in Commercial Row, and while it was held as a general office at the Mail-coach Hotel, a post office branch, or receiving house, was, for the convenience of the public, held at the stores of Mr Nathaniel Owen in Commercial Row. After this the post-office was for many years kept by Mr. George Thomas Husband of the Clarence Inn, at the top of Pembroke Street. Letters were delivered once daily at 7.p.m. The office was then removed to a position in Meyrick Street North. Originally on this site stood a public-house called the Lamb and Flag kept by one Tom Harris, who was also a haulier; afterwards it passed into the possession of a Mr. Joseph Briggs, of the Bush Hotel; it was next an office for the Great Western Railway Company before it was taken over by the Post Office authorities.

The Temperance hall in Dimond St which was enlarged in the 1870's and besides being used by the Temperance Movement was also used for a variety of other purposes including public lectures and concerts. It held about 500 people.

The Albion Hall in Albion Square capable of holding over 800 people and renovated in the early 1870's used for concerts and lectures and miscellaneous entertainments.

The Police station was in Albion Square.

The area of Pembroke Dock ecclesiastical parish 1096 acres and the population in 1881 was 11,662

The Parish Clerk was Thomas Williamson.

1872 April 22nd by Order made by Queen Victoria in the Royal Court at Windsor that on and after June 30th 1872 the County Court should be held at Pembroke Dock instead of Pembroke. The County Court Room was next to the Victoria Hotel in Pembroke St. The Courts were held monthly and the Pembroke town Council held their meetings there alternating with Pembroke.

Pennar became part of Pembroke Dock about 1870 and, at that time, was a thriving community with shops, pubs, places of worship, several smallholdings and allotments. The Orielson Estate map shows that by that time most of the older houses in Pennar were in existence and the road connecting Military Rd. with Pennar Point, for which the Admiralty purchased two acres of land in 1862 from the Orielson Estate, was built although the road into Pennar was in a very bad state. In 1884 there were two bakers and grocers, Mr. William Lifton of Military Rd. and Mr. William Malley who also kept the sub post office, Mr. William Phillips, jun. of Military Rd., Pennar was a coal merchant and general carrier, Mr. William Phillips, Snr was a beer retailer, while Mr. David Nicholas kept the Royal Oak public house, Mr. John Williams, the Kilwentage, Mr. Robert Court Griffiths, the Commercial Inn and Mr. Henry Banner, the Swan Inn. The Orielson Estate, of which Pennar was a part, had been purchased in 1856/7 by Miss Jane Martha Jones of Cilwendeg with part of the compensation money for the sale of the Skerries Lighthouse in Anglesey. On her death this estate and the Cilwendeg Estate passed to her niece Margarette Sutton Saurin, wife of Mark Antony Saurin. Part of the estate included the ferry from Pennar to Bentlass and all the houses which were let, leasehold, in the main to dockyard workers although later some were leased to military personnel.

In 1875 the town was described as well lit with gas and pretty regularly built. The principal streets are Dimond St, Queen St East, Commercial Row, Pembroke St, Bush St, and Meyrick St. Bush St was not completed at that time.

The water supply other than that to the Government dwellings was from wells and by tanks attached to the houses. It was believed to be adequate by the town council.

The town had at that time two weekly newspapers The Pembroke Dock and Tenby Gazette and the Pembrokeshire Advertiser.

“Seen from the harbour the town makes a considerable appearance. The Dockyard presents a chief feature with its lofty and uniform range of tolerably handsome sheds covering the numerous slips whose entrances are skirted by the waters of the Haven. Beyond it crowing the summit of the hill to which they give their name stands the Defensible barracks. Away to the left the continuous elevations of High St and Prospect Place are occupied by terraces and streets of exceedingly neat looking private houses. Below and nearer us - on the level- is the larger and more business part of the town; where the mass of houses seem closely packed together, but in which the slender pinnacles of the Congregational Chapel are the only prominent object.

Seen from the Barrack Hill looking to the North we see the Dockyard beneath us. The building sheds rise majestically and barrier like along the water's edge ; while from their dark roofs most profusely skylights twinkle in the sunshine. To their right, a long slender structure with its roof and portions of its sides composed wholly of glass (The Glass House) is not without some pretension to beauty. Extensive and imposing blocks of stone buildings occupying the middle of the yard- devoted to various purposes -next to arrest our notice and holding an elevated central position on one of these, the Clock is seen- from which the time of day is at some is readily made out. , Nearer , fine plantations of high trees separate the well built officers' residences from the parts just described. In the south-east corner stands the Chapel of the yard, with its small square-set tower surmounted by a cupola, and cross ; and at our feet is the pretty entrance to the Establishment. All these catch the eye, and exquisitely combine to render this portion of the picture a most attractive and pleasing one.

Turning from the Dockyard we will now enumerate some of the objects which strike us as most prominent in the second part of the picture.

At the foot of the Hill are the National Schools, containing a crowd of bright, happy-looking, and intelligent children; and near to them the Victoria, Hotel at the top of Pembroke Street. A little to our right is Belle Vue Terrace, with its snug little cottages, each enveloped in the shrubbery and fruit-trees of its surrounding garden ; and adjacent, the Government reservoirs, holding two large rectangular sheets of fresh water-bright and sparkling. Beyond these latter, the Congregational Chapel, one of the most handsome edifices in the town, appears to advantage; and further along, the Town Clock, situated in the rather low and un-imposing tower of St. John's Church attracts attention.

Still further beyond, the wooden huts of the Military encampment dot the grassy slope which terminates in the Admiralty Pier at Hobbs' Point, -where a pair of immense , "sheer-legs," , forms a fitting completion to the picture, which has now been describe"

1880 Up till the 1880's the road connecting Pennar with Pembroke Dock was little more than a mud track a "bitter experience on dark damp nights" and down to Lower Pennar and the Ferry was described as "a double source of danger and disgrace" Soon after decent road was constructed with the main aim of conveying goods and manpower the new Torpedo store at Pennar Point.

1881 The Corporation bought the Market hall from the Admiralty for £4000. The Corporation later covered it in.

In the latter part of the century there was much rebuilding. Many of the early houses which had become more or less slums were replaced. The old cottages of Nailers Lane, (Wellington St.) Back Cottages (Park St) and Front St. as well as Pigs Parade (Bush St) were some. The Admiralty sold of its land in Pembroke St, Market St, Princes St, Cumby St and Victoria Rd making these sites freehold which encouraged owners to spend money replacing of refurbishing properties in these streets.

In 1884 according to Kelly's directory 49 public houses are listed in as being in the town

1887 and 1889 Mr. William Seccombe the then Mayor had placed a number of seats on Barrack Hill

Kelly's Directory 1884
Pembroke Dock

Pembroke Dock, or Pater, is a ward of the municipal borough of Pembroke, from which it is distant by rail 2 and by road 3 miles; in 1844 it was formed into an ecclesiastical parish from St. Mary, Pembroke: the inhabitants, consist chiefly of trades-people and dockyard artisans. The government dockyard here possesses great natural advantages and occupies 80 acres of ground surrounded by a high wall with a formidable fort facing the water, for its protection; on Barrack Hill, immediately behind (from which the entire yard can be overlooked), are strongly fortified artillery barracks mounting guns facing every point. This place, generally called "Little England beyond Wales," was originally a farm with a house and church, then designated "Pater church," and was the residence of William de Paterchurch, a follower of William the Conqueror: in 1812 surveys were made, and in 1814 the nucleus of the present government dockyard establishment was formed. The Pembroke and Tenby Railway Company have a line direct into the yard, thus avoiding the transshipment of heavy stores at the passenger station. Through the vicinity abounds with magnificent inland and seaboard scenery, Pembroke Dock itself has few attractions for the visitor, except the government yard and beautiful Haven, which is capable of floating the largest ships at neap tide and across which steamers are continually plying to and from Neyland (or New Milford) in connection with the Great Western railway station, which is situated at the end of Diamond street, and affords communication with every part of the North of England and the Midlands vid ~ the Central Wales line.

Entertainment

Various travelling companies of players acted in wooden theatres at the lower end of the cottages and of Lewis Street, where, among other dramas, the tragedy of 'Maria Martin' was enacted in all its horrors, and was a favourite play, being at that time quite up-to-date. One of the most patronized of these theatres was known as 'Cardonis'. Following these, other temporary 'playhouses' have stayed here at different periods. Later the Queen's Theatre was been erected in Queen Street East; the proprietor was Mr. Walter Canton.

Cook's circus was the first that came to the town, and made a great display.

Waxwork shows and travelling menageries were sources of much wonder and delight, and for many years stood in the Station Field. This is now covered by Apley Terrace and Hawkestone Road. One travelling show that visited the town many years ago was very amusing. A loud-voiced showman invited the public inside to see 'a living head without a body, which was picked up rolling down the sandy plains of Africa. The deluded person who paid the modest entrance fee of twopence was rewarded by seeing the head fixed in a box-like arrangement which hid the lower part of the body of a local "celebrity", best known by the name of Pyot, the dialect word for the magpie.

The first roundabout that visited Pembroke Dock was pushed round by boys, who for this work were rewarded by getting a free ride after a certain number of turns. An improvement on this was the whirligig, which was manipulated by some person. After this came the roundabout worked by a pony, then the steam-horses, finally leading up to the gorgeous gondolas and moving animals belonging to Mr.H.Studt. These latest improvements in the way of whirligigs and the revolving gondolas - 'Venice on land' -were each accompanied by a powerful organ; the motive power which produces the music is the same as that which drives the other mechanism, and the illuminant is electricity. Mr Studt represents a family who for many years made occasional visits to the neighbourhood. He was well-known for his contributions to local charities

1904 On May 14, 1904, Colonel Cody (Buffalo Bill) brought his gigantic show of the Wild West to Pembroke Dock. Where his “North American Indian, Cossack” and other daring riders gave their magnificent display of horsemanship and marvellous shooting in a large field nearly opposite Bierspool Farm.

In the early eighties bicycle races were held in the streets of the town, the cycle being then the old penny farthing ; some time after these races took place, a cycle-track was made on the ground leading from the Fort Road to old Pater Battery. June 28, which was then kept as a holiday, being the Coronation day of Queen Victoria, was a favourite day for these races, and large crowds used to gather at such a time to witness them.

The Barrack Hill, the cricket-field, and the field opposite Biespool, all come in for a fair share of patronage in an athletic way. But in addition to these places, the athletes of the town had a splendid ground for football, cricket, and other games, situated on a piece of Government land opposite the County Intermediate School. The ground was leased at a low rental on condition that sports and other amusements were to be held there, but that it was not to be let to any circus or travelling show. There are three tennis clubs, and courts laid out for the game at Llanion, Bierspool, and at Kingswood.

Processions

Many processions had been held in connection with the different societies, such as those of the past in which the Foresters took part in their gay regalia and feathered hats; and of the Rechabites, who, when they paraded the streets in the 1870's of the last century, never marched without carrying aloft on a stick a small cask, open from end to end.

Pembroke Dock people have witnessed many sights of interest in their town. There is a tradition that, when King George IV, died, the day of his funeral was observed by a procession of people, who marched round the Market Place and through the few streets that were then built in the town. Queen Victoria was proclaimed at the Dockyard gates by, it is said, Dr.Paynter of Pembroke, who was then Mayor of the borough.

1839The centenary of Wesleyan Methodism in 1839 was commemorated by a demonstration of Sunday-school children connected with this denomination- each child received on the occasion a medal to mark the event .

1849 On August 14, 1849, the royal yacht, the first Victoria and Albert, with Queen Victoria, accompanied by the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales (King Edward VII), and the Princess Royal (the late Empress of Germany), came into Milford Haven. Queen Victoria appeared on the deck of the vessel, attired in a dress of a dark material, with a white shawl loosely thrown around her shoulders, and wearing a white straw bonnet trimmed with blue, and with blue strings. Numbers of small boats put out to see the yacht, and Earl Grey, in response to the cheering of the people in them, brought His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to the side of the yacht for them to see. He was dressed in a sailor suit, with a broad white hat. A Welsh girl, habited in native costume, went on board the royal yacht, with a present of butter for Queen Victoria from the late Earl Cawdor. Prince Albert came up to Pembroke Dock in the Fairy, a small yacht and viewed Pembroke Castle, but went no further. He then returned to the yacht. The yeomanry turned out on the occasion, and a royal salute was fired from the Defensible Barracks. Queen Victoria did not land, and was never in the town.

1858 the Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales were again in the harbour, having boarded the old royal yacht from Neyland, en voyage for Ireland

1858 On April 7, 1858, the coming of age celebrations of Thomas Charlton Meyrick, Esq., (later Sir Thomas Meyrick, Bart. C.B) took place. A dinner was held at the Victoria Hotel, and shortly after a grand ball was also given at Bush House in honour of the occasion.

1861 The Prince Consort died on December 14, 1861. The sad news did not arrive in the town until the following day (Sunday). The body of the late Prince was interred at Windsor on December 23 (after wards removed to Frogmore), and Pembroke Dock, together with other places in the kingdom, observed the day as one of national mourning.

1864 The marriage of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to Princess Alexandra of Denmark took place on March 10, 1864, and was, of course, the occasion of much rejoicing. The children from the various Sunday-schools assembled together and marched through the Dockyard and principal streets of the town, headed by the Rechabite band. The band of the volunteers also accompanied the procession. This regiment held a grand parade and review on the Barrack Hill that day. All the children were decorated with a white silk ribbon rosette, bearing in the centre portraits of the Prince and Princess. The houses were illuminated in the evening - one house in Prospect Place noticeably so, having fixed to it a large Prince of Wales's plume lighted by gas. There was a bonfire on the Barrack Hill. A ball was held at the Victoria Hotel the same night.

1880 The Robert Raikes centenary of Sunday-schools was celebrated on June 28, 1880. Hundreds the children of the town, accompanied by bands, marched from Albion Square, through the Dockyard and the principal thoroughfares, forming a gay pageant as they walked, wearing their bright centennial medals. They disbanded and went to their Sunday-schools for tea, afterwards meeting on the Barrack Hill, where all sorts of games were indulged in 1887 June 21 the Jubilee demonstration commemorated on Tuesday, the fifty years' reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. A huge procession, headed by the 81st Loyal North Lancashire military band, formed between Albion Square. and the end of Bush Street East and marched round the streets of the town, entering the gate of the Dockyard through the main gate, and up south-east Lovers' Walk to the Barrack Hill. The procession comprised the Chamber of Trade and all the scholars of the different Sunday-schools of the town. In addition to the Loyal Lancashire brass band, there were the fife and drum band of the same regiment and the town Excelsior band in attendance. The children marched four abreast and were marshalled by Messrs. William James, John Bray, and W. H. Way on horseback. On the slopes of the Barrack Hill three cheers for Queen Victoria were given. Then the National Anthem, 'God bless the Prince of Wales', 'All hail the power of Jesu's Name', and the Doxology were heartily sung by many hundreds of people, efficiently led by Mr. D. A. Andrews. The schools divided after the singing, and marched to their several schoolrooms, where the teachers had provided tea. At half-past five they reassembled on the Hill for games; the Excelsior band and the band of the regiment played at intervals. At ten o'clock a monster bonfire was lighted, after which a display of fireworks was given by Messrs. Llewellyn and Sons, of Bristol. Each child was presented with a Jubilee medal as a memento of the day.

1892 The death of Prince Albert Victor, the late Duke of Clarence, on January 14, 1892, and his funeral, which took place at Windsor on January 20, were commemorated at Pembroke Dock. On the day his remains were interred an impressive service was held at St. John's Church, when the Mayor and Corporation and representatives of the army and navy were present. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. R. Lloyd, then curate in charge.

1893 On July 6, 1893, the occasion of the marriage of the Duke of York and Princess May of Teck (now the Prince and Princess of Wales), Pembroke Dock was decorated and illuminated. On the Barrack Hill, a bonfire was lighted, and fireworks were set off by Mr. K. McAlpin and Mr. Joseph Tucker, of Commercial Row. Many of the townspeople wore a white rose, the York emblem, on the day.

1897 The celebrations of Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee on Tuesday, June 22, 1897, were carried out on much the same lines as on Jubilee Day, 1887. The Sunday schools assembled in a field east of Bush Street, kindly lent by Mrs. Owen Davies, of Waterloo House. The band of the 2nd Battalion Devon Regiment (Colonel Bullock commanding officer) headed the procession. The Salvation Army band also marched and played. Before the procession started the Sunday-school officers distributed medals to the children; then 'God save the Queen' and 'God bless the Prince of Wales' were sung. The same marshals were in attendance as in 1887, with the addition of Mr. James Eastlake Thomas. Inside the grounds of the Dockyard the English and Welsh National Anthems were sung, after which the children proceeded in marching order to the Barrack Hill, where 'All hail the power of Jesu's Name' the National Anthem, and the Doxology were again sung by the direction of Mr. Fred Sanders, and conducted by Mr. D. A. Andrews. The children afterwards dispersed to their own schools.

Calamities and disasters

It is not to be expected that during the space of ninety years the town has escaped all calamity.

1866 On January 8th 1866, Bush House, at that time the residence of Mr. Meyrick, the owner of the estate, was burnt down. The fire broke out at five o'clock in the evening through some inadvertence. A beam in the chimney caught fire. There was a strong westerly breeze going at the time, which fanned the flames and caused them to spread quickly. The Dockyard men living in the district of Pembroke, who were returning home from work, rendered great assistance, as did also the soldiers of the 6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment, but all to no purpose, as far as saving the mansion went, although they were able to remove many valuables to places of safety. The fire, happily, was not accompanied by any loss of life.

1880 The biggest fire that has occurred in the town, until the Tank fire of World War II, was that which destroyed the 'Emporium' drapery establishment in Bush Street, then owned by the late

Mr.David Jenkins. About ten o'clock on the night of July 12, 1880, the first alarm was given. The flames increased so rapidly that they grew beyond control, and the whole of the house was soon on fire, and was completely burned. Unfortunately, a young man named Richards, an assistant in the business, lost his life in the burning building.

The drapery business of Mr.Thomas Phelps, which was at one time carried on in Commercial Row, suffered greatly from a destructive fire. The conflagration spread until it reached the ironmongery establishment of Mr.J.Phillips next door, and did immense mischief. In consequence of this fire both these businesses were discontinued.

Fire also threatened the destruction of Mr.J.Hancock's drapery establishment, the Crillion, in Dimond Street, but, fortunately, it was subdued before it had taken too great a hold.

1897 A volunteer fire-brigade was formed in the town in 1897, and paraded for the first time in the Mayor's (Mr.William Davies) Procession to Albion Square Congregational Church in 1898. It also marched in Alderman McColl's mayoral procession in 1900 to St.Andrew's Chapel, and likewise took part in the historical pageant in Coronation year, 1902. The late Mr.D.Hughes Brown, Mrs.J.Allen, and Mr.McColl were the first promoters of this fire-brigade.

1905 Owing to lack of support the brigade was disorganized

Calamities other than those by fire have happened in the town. Some have been caused, of course, by the various dangers to be met with in any big works. The waters that wash our coast are responsible for many others.

1831 The daughters of Mr.William Henderson, of Bangeston House, lost their lives by the foundering of a steam packet called the Frolic, which was wrecked off the Nash Sands (Glamorganshire), September, 1831. This ship was comparatively new, having only been in use about a year for trading every fortnight between Bristol and Haverfordwest.

1889 A sad accident, resulting in the loss of nine lives, happened on Friday afternoon, February 8, 1889. It was market. day and the weather was very stormy. The market-women were returning home across Bentlass Ferry, and the boat was heavily laden, with, amongst other things, a sack of flour; while proceeding across the water, just before reaching the other side, the boat capsized with all her living freight, and the seven women and two men of whom it consisted were drowned. The sadness of the disaster was added to by the thought that they were within one would have surmised, such easy reach of help, and the tide, at the time was but at low ebb.

This was not the only tragedy connected with Pennar and the Gut (More information is recorded under Pennar)

Other Shipbuilding and Industries in the Area

1700's shipbuilding in Pembroke River near Bentlass

1700's Shipbuilding and boat building at Pembroke Ferry by the Allen Family

1780 "Prince of Wales" built for the Admiralty at what is now Neyland

1784 "Triumph" built for the Admiralty in same yard.

Mr. William Robinson

In Pembroke Dock the first yard was that of Mr. William Robinson in Front St. He also had a timber yard and two large saw pits. He had been a Dockyard Clerk but had been left a large amount of property and left the Dockyard to start up in business. Among the vessels built was a barque for the timber trade called Resolution. The Resolution was wrecked coming over from America with timber. He also purchased a paddle steamer the Cambria the first steam vessel to carry a member of the Royal family and had a gilded crown on the bulkhead of the engine room. The monarch was George IV in 1821 and he travelled on the paddle steamer between Newport and Bristol. Mr Robinson lived in a large house in Water St which was later divided up into smaller dwellings. Among his other business interests was a flour mill at Hazelbeach which could be worked by either steam or water. He converted the old lightships which had been moored at Carr Rocks and Weir Point one into a barge and the other into a pontoon which he moored at Neyland point with a sloping stage which could be varied according to the tide. The Cambria was used as a ferrysteamer between Neyland and Hobbs Point and thus was the first mechanically propelled ferry between the two points. Mr Robinson also purchased another steamer "Pearl" which was used on the Irish trade at first but later used for running excursion trips.

1850's Mr. Richard Allen had a yard on the west side of Water St. He built the Arethusa for Captain Pring of Brixham.

1856 Mr. Allen formed a partnership with Mr. James Warlow. The firm called Allen and Warlow built vessels until 1868. Among them was the Carmarthenshire, the first merchant vessel to enter Yokohama Harbour. She was owned by Messrs David Jenkins of London, Merchants, and carried 1250 tons of Cardiff coal.

1868 In 1868 the firm became Allen and Long for about three years. Then Richard Allen and Son, Shipbuilders. They were appointed contractors to the Trinity Brethren for the repair of Lightships and were also Admiralty Contractors. Also they built and operated a steamer called Wave which ferried people to and from Landshipping and other places on route on a Friday for Pembroke Dock market.

1873 Richard Allen died and his son Mr. S R Allen JP inherited, he moved the business to Lower Meyrick St.

1858 1860 Messrs McMaster and Co built ships at Front St., among those built were a brigantine the Katherine Jane and a Barque the Monte Belle. The Yard was afterwards converted into a Timber Store and the firm went into the Timber business with saw mills in Front St.

1873 1879 The Pembroke Dock Co Operative Shipbuilding Co employed about 100 men on the site at the bottom of Meyrick St. They failed and the vessel on the Stocks was completed by Mc Masters and Co.

1888 Messrs J & W Francis Shipbuilders of Milford started a business at Front St

Jacobs Pill Pennar

1874 a large shipbuilding Yard commenced at Jacobs Pill built the Hei Yei a corvette for the Japanese Navy launched in 1877. Another ship built there was the Acorn . The last work carried out was the building of a Caisson for the Government, the yard closed in 1884.

Fortifications and those Manning them

1539 Thomas Cromwell proposed the fortification of the Haven and two blockhouses were started at Angle and Dale but not completed.

1595 George Owen prepared a plan for the fortification of the Haven but it was not carried out

1643 Richard Steele, a royalist engineer constructed Pill Fort near Milford Haven -- it did not hold out for long

1689 The Privy Council discussed the problem of the defence of the Haven and an engineer was sent to survey the area but no further action was taken

1748 Lewis Morris carried out a survey of shipwrecks and navigation in the Haven and suggested that a small fort be built on Stack Rock -- nothing was done

1757 Lt Col Bastide (Director of Engineers) was sent to survey the area and advise on suitable sites for forts and batteries.

He suggested -- Dale point, Great Castle Head, West Angle, Popton Point, Paterchurch and Neyland and a floating battery anchored 500yds north of Chapel Bay. --- The effective range of the cannon was about 500yds so there were areas not covered.

An alternative plan provided for a fort at Paterchurch point, one at Llanion Point and one at Neyland. The Ordinance department was put in charge of construction and land purchased. Only one the Paterchurch fort was started but it was not completed. The Paterchurch fort that was started stretched from the Carr Rocks to the foot of St. Patrick's Hill and the walls were built in the form of a zigzag with a total area of 10 acres. When the remains of this fort were demolished in 1836 during an expansion of the yard, the masonry of parts was so hard that it to be blown up to remove it.

From 1801 to 1803 batteries of guns were sited at Milford Haven to defend the dockyard there one at Hakin Point and one on the site of St. Katherine's Church. It is not recorded what guns were actually sited there.

Pater Fort

1830 With the Dockyard moving to Pater in consideration was given to fortifying the area and in 1830 work was carried out at Pater Fort. It was garrisoned in 1831 but in 1836 it was dismantled. No record is available as to what armament was installed.

Paterchurch Battery

1840 work was started by the Admiralty of the Paterchurch Battery and completed in 1842 and mounted 23 guns. It was taken over by the Ordinance Department in 1855 and renovated in accordance with plans drawn up by Lt Gordon (Gordon of Khartoum) of the Royal Engineers. Until 1855 it was only entered through a gateway via the Dockyard and in charge of a Naval Gunner. The last one was a Mr Turner. It was used by the Royal Dockyard Battalion from 1847 to 1857 and in that year, on its being taken over by the Ordinance Department a gateway was made so as to allow entry to the Battery from outside the Dockyard Wall. In 1864 the Pembroke Dock Artillery Volunteers used it for gun drill and firing practise. It was finally dismantled in 1902 when some of the stone was used for the erection of a new fitter's workshop and some for St Teilo's Church Llanion.

Defensible Barracks

This and the odd bullets, cap badges and tunic buttons, which are still occasionally washed to the surface by the winter rains that lash the Barracks Hill, are all that remain to remind the golfer and stroller of a proud and distinguished past when practically every major regiment of the line was garrisoned at Pembroke Dock.

1844 For the army garrison the defensible barracks was erected above the town work commenced in 1844 and the army took possession on 25th November 1845. This barracks was not designed to mount artillery but a Gun was fired daily at noon and at 9.30 pm from it.

This needed according to the original plans a clear field of fire with no buildings encroaching on it surrounding the Barracks and the War department drew up proposals to clear all building to Llanreath at the west, to the stream of water running at the south and east of Cross Park, to the road at Tregennis Hill (all the houses built on the west side) and down to Victoria Rd on the north.

Farmer Whites house and all the farm buildings were the first to be cleared as their lease had expired. All the other buildings were held on leases with unexpired portions and the tenants were asked to sell. It would appear that pressure was brought to bear on many of the tenants especially those who were working for the Admiralty and the houses were demolished. All the houses on the west side of Tregennis Hill, much of Cross Park including all those on the North side, and all Wesley Row including the Ebenezer Chapel.

Martello Towers

The Martello towers were built in 1850-1851; the contractors were 'Messrs. Joseph and Charles Rigby, London; chief-foreman, Mr, Stovall; under-foreman Mr.Noakes, father of Mr.Noakes, High Street. They were intended as a coast defence. One is situated off the Hard, Front Street, and the other opposite the Fort Road. One to the South West , was designed to accommodate 1 x 32pounder + 4 x 12 pdr. brass howitzers and the other,by Front street 3 x 32 pdrs. These towers were formerly occupied by sergeants of the artillery and their families, but are now unoccupied and obsolete for military purposes. The one approached by the Fort Road is utilized for storage, but the other, off the Front Street, is now a museum

Pennar Torpedo Stores and Magazine near Pennar Point.

1875 A description in 1875 reads--Near the shore at Pennar Point (or Pennar Gut) are torpedo stores and magazines. Submarine mining experiments have been carried on in connection with this station, and all appliances are kept there for mining the Haven in case of need. At present these submarine mining works belong to the War Department, and Royal Engineers are established there. But in the near future it is thought that the Admiralty will take over from the War Department all these works. These arrangements are understood to be part of a new scheme for the defence of Milford Haven, and will probably be developed on lines suggested in a recent Parliamentary statement made by the Right Hon, Arnold-Forster, Secretary of State for War.

If this transfer should take place, it may eventually happen that a torpedo depot will be established in the neighbourhood of Pennar Gut. This has, it is believed, been under consideration, and a part of the Pembroke river already been surveyed for this purpose.

Much money has been expended on the various buildings in connection with this establishment at Pennar, the total cost approximately being £17,000.

1875 Findlay records

The Garrison comprises Artillery infantry of the line and forms part of the 24th Brigade depot'. The total number of men of all ranks, including those in charge of the forts down the Haven, is about 1,500, the larger portion of which occupies the Hut Encampment and the Defensible Barracks. The Hut Encampment is situated upon a acclivity on the north-east side of the town. It was formed about the time of the late Crimean War. It consists of a large number of huts, built chiefly of wood, arranged in parallel lines - those of the officers standing separately from those of the non-commissioned officers and men and those devoted to hospital purposes from both. A large stone-built residence for the doctor-formerly used as a hospital, a fine brick canteen, and a splendid gymnasium ; besides schools, ball-court, etc. There is also a capital parade ground, with plenty of space for field, exercises, and a most capacious magazine for the storage of the War material necessary for the troops in this district.

The Defensible Barracks, standing on the summit of a hill overlooking the town, are always most conspicuous and striking objects. They are visible at a distance of, several miles. From their elevated position, they command the town- a large portion of which lies at the foot of the hill, the harbour, and the country in all directions: they would in case of actual necessity be well adapted for purposes of defence. ,

They are strong and well-constructed buildings, erected in the year 1844, occupying an area of 6,000 square yards." The outworks are strengthened by ramparts, loopholes, for small arms, and an entrenchment thirty feet wide and twenty feet deep. The outer boundary of the entrenchment was formerly unenclosed, which made it very unsafe for persons approaching it after night had set in; and during the first occupation of the defences by detachments of the Royal Marines-Plymouth Division-some twenty-eight or thirty years ago, several unfortunate members of that corps lost their lives through falling into it, as the grave-stones erected to their memory in the Old Burial Ground only too truly testify.

The barracks, occupying the centre of the works enclose a large quadrangular area and are reached by a drawbridge. The Royal Artillery has for many years occupied them. The armament at present consists of twenty four pounders(used only for firing salutes), likely shortly to be replaced by much heavier ordinance From here a gun is fired morning and evening -- sunrise and sunset-daily throughout the year, as is usual in most garrison towns."

Pater Battery is situated at the north west extremity of the dockyard, which it adjoins and protects. It mounts twenty-three guns-among them being one breech loading Armstrong 112-pounder. It is a very neat and compact fortification, and is much used by Artillery Volunteers for gun-practice It is occupied by the Royal Artillery

The Martell Towers are two in number erected in the years 1849-50. They are situated, one on the southwest, and the other on the north east of the dockyard -the latter being the larger. They mount five and seven heavy guns respectively. The Royal Artillery occupies them 1899 quarters for married artillerymen were built on the east side of the Barracks on the site of some very old cottages.

The need to garrison regular troops on a permanent basis did not arise until the establishment of the Admiralty dockyard at Pembroke in 1814. Originally the Yard was under the care of caretakers, then a small force of under a naval lieutenant was formed.

Royal Marines

It was then decided to protect the yard with a force of 500 Royal Marines. These men were to be accommodated in HMS Dragon, a hulk deliberately run ashore near the developing dockyard. This accommodation was used until the Defensible Barracks were opened. Work on Defensible, which overlooked the dockyard, had commenced in 1844 and possession was taken at 3 p.m. on 25 November 1845. This was signalled to the spectators by the hoisting of the Union flag; meanwhile, the workmen who had been employed in the construction enjoyed a substantial dinner. When the barracks were ready for occupation the Marines, drawn from the Plymouth, Portsmouth and Woolwich Divisions gratefully moved in.

The Royal Dockyard Battalion

1847 Was a force of volunteers formed from the Dockyard employee's. It is believed that every man who was fit in the Yard, except for one, volunteered. It was raised in 1847 and consisted of eight companies of artillery and infantry combined and one company entitled the boat brigade. The salaried Yard Officers formed the Officers of the battalion and the instructors were professional soldiers. The Yard Officers appointed the non-commissioned Officers from among the volunteers. The uniform consisted of a blue frock coat and trousers, red facings, brass buttons and a spiked helmet. They drilled for two hours, twice a week and were paid sixpence an hour. Some afternoons were given over to target practice and once a year a field exercise was held to which the general public were admitted. Blank ammunition was used for these field exercises but there was the one occasion when a ramrod was fired off by mistake narrowly missing the Commanding Officer. There were comments that the man who fired should have been court-martialed for missing the target. Target practice by the infantry was much encouraged by setting apart certain afternoons during the summer months for the purpose. The place selected for the firing was Llanreath Point, just a little to the west of Mr. David Price's house. The target was fixed along the beach to the south. A good deal of rivalry existed between the companies which was fostered by the officers in giving prizes, and it was a remarkable fact that the company possessing the greatest number of shipwrights was the premier shooting company. The leaden bullet used at that time was five-eighths of an inch in diameter.

Transporting the regiment by boats, which also conveyed the field guns. One occasion stands out
According to Mason

"The Field Day in the summer of 1853 was announced to be a special one. The troops were to be conveyed across the water with every equipment for service. The day arrived with a beautifully fine morning, which induced thousands of spectators to cross over to Neyland. Milford and Haverfordwest also furnishing their quota. Shortly after noon, a great number of boats; loaded with soldiers, shot out from the Dockyard, crossed over to the north side of the Haven, and landed on the beach between Neyland point and Church-lake. The regiment formed up with field guns, and marched with the splendid band playing a lively air, to a field at the Gale near Great Honey borough. It was a sight to be remembered. The battalion was drawn up in line in an oblong space reserved for the review ground, and an immense concourse of people surrounded, the ladies dressed in their lightest summer attire and straw hats "being conspicuous amongst the gentlemen". The battalion went through various evolutions splendidly, and were much admired. At about; .3.30 p.m.; the field guns were being exercised and several rounds fired. The first concussion of this firing produced a slight rain, and as the firing went on, the sky assumed a black, threatening appearance, which suddenly broke out into a terrible thunderstorm. Vivid flashes of lightning flew in every direction, and the rain descended "in a devastating rush", which scattered the people to seek for shelter. This could not be found, there being only a few houses near at hand. Everybody seemed to be almost immediately saturated, and the ladies looked most pitiable in their wet flimsy garments. The review was cut short, and the battalion limbered up guns and marched of the field en-route for their boats, to re-cross to the Dockyard. When they reached the road, which had become a quagmire, crowded with people going in the direction of the beach, the scene could only be likened to the final attack of the French at the battle of Waterloo. "They got mixed" it was impossible to keep anything like formation and the word was passed "Get to the boats the best way you can". The result was that about one third did not reach the boats, some went directly home and some found themselves in Haverfordwest.

1857 it was decided that the Royal Dockyard Battalions were no longer required, and with the exception of Malta, they were removed from the Army List.

After the Pembroke Dock Battalion were disbanded the Pater Volunteer Artillery Corps were reformed, and they continued to serve until 1861.

The Royal Dockyard battalions were never intended to be used as front line troops, their primary task was to defend the Dockyards, but in the event of invasion they were expected to assist the Coastal Defence Units.

Regiments of the Line pre Crimea war

In 1850 the Royal Marines, who had formed the Pembroke Dock garrison since the first houses were built around the dockyard thirty-five years previously, were replaced by regiments of the line. General Gordon, destined to die at Khartoum many years later, was a young Royal Engineer Lieutenant stationed at Pembroke Dock at the time of the outbreak of the Crimean War. It is said that when he received his posting to the Crimea, Gordon exclaimed: 'I have received my death warrant!' The 21st East Surrey Regiment was at Pembroke Dock when it, too, received orders to embark for the Crimea. Their departure was impressive; on a bitterly cold morning the East Surreys, led by their Commanding Officer, Colonel Slater, marched from the Barracks Hill to the dockyard steps. From there they were ferried out to the troopship Imperadore. After the soldiers had gone, collections were made in the town and dockyard in aid of the wives and children left behind. The Royal Monmouth Militia replaced them

Militia Men

Militiamen formed the Pembroke Dock Garrison for most of the time of the Crimea War, and from all accounts they were an ill disciplined lot. Many were billeted on the townspeople, who were pleased, when the war ended and the militiamen departed. The Royal Monmouth Militia had to march from Haverfordwest in a blizzard to Pembroke Dock and moved into the Defensible Barracks the same day that the East Surrey's left.

There are several records, which show the sorts of problems associated with the militia.

One was tried by Court-Martial disobeying an order in that he proceeding to Pembroke without a Pass.

In October 1855 a party of Militia who had been in Duke of Wellington Hotel broke windows of some of the residence in the area, by throwing stones at them. The Duke of Wellington was put "Out of Bounds" and a military piquet of four NCO's and 12 rank and file policed the town between 7.30pm and 9.30pm to prevent further disorder

Regiments of the Line post Crimea war

1856 to 1861, regiments stationed at Pembroke Dock included the Monmouthshire Light Infantry and the green-uniformed Montgomery Rifles.

1861 batteries of the 15th Brigade, considered to be an elite corps, arrived, to be followed by the 1865 62nd Wiltshire Regiment arrived. This regiment had its own band; it played at the unveiling of the memorial to the Prince Consort on Castle Hill, Tenby, by HRH Prince Arthur, later Duke of Connaught.

1866 The Royal Warwickshire Regiment whose soldiers rendered valuable assistance when the original Bush House at Pembroke, seat of the Meyrick family, caught fire in 1866 succeeded the Wiltshires. Despite their heroism and that of others, the stately building was destroyed.

1871 The 103rd Foot, also known as the Bombay Fusiliers, occupied part of Defensible in 1871

1873 The 1st Battalion of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers whose Commanding Officer was a Colonel Prevost. Even in a town used to the pomp and splendour of the Victorian military, this regiment attracted considerable attention, not least because of the handsome goat that invariably led ceremonial parades.

The 'Holy Boys' of the 9th East Norfolk Regiment followed the Fusiliers. Their fine band under its dashing Italian Bandmaster, Signor Bonicoli, a member of the Regiment, created a big impression.

95th Derbyshire,

54th Dorsetshire and

41st Welch Regiments, the last-named commanded by Sir Hugh Rowland, VC It, too, had a goat as its mascot.

1877 The 36th Worcester Regiment was in residence at Defensible from 1877 to 1879. Its soldiers were the last in Pembroke Dock to have a green facing on their uniforms and to wear the old shako-style headdress. The Regiment was also the last to attend services in the Royal Dockyard Chapel. For some unknown reason Dr Ring, the Dockyard Chaplain had objected to the presence of troops in the Chapel. The military took offence and ever thereafter attended Divine Service in the Parish Church of St. John.

1880 a hutted encampment was created to lodge an overflow of men from Defensible. This was on land overlooking the present Pier Road at Pembroke Dock, just below the future site of Llanion Barracks where building was due to begin in 1889.

One of the encampment's first occupants was the 2nd Battalion, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, whose Commanding Officer, Colonel Luke O'Connor, was a remarkable man. Commissioned from the ranks, a difficult achievement in those days, he had won the VC in the Crimea. Though severely wounded he had saved his regiment's colours during the thick of the fighting on the heights of Alma.

While the Fusiliers were at Pembroke Dock, a detachment of the Royal Marine Artillery was also stationed there, quartered in the hospital ship Nankin. This was the time of the Fenian scare and the Marines were brought in from Portsmouth to add weight to the police protection of the dockyard, taking sentinel duty on the yard's boundary walls.

1883, after a tour of duty in Nova Scotia, the Royal Munster Fusiliers arrived in the trooper Himalaya. Though weary after the Atlantic crossing, the Munster's marched in immaculate style to Defensible and were said to be the finest body of men ever seen on the streets of Pembroke Dock up to that time. They, too, had an excellent band; Mr. Dunkerton, their bandmaster, subsequently became bandmaster in the Scots Guards.

Next into Defensible came the 81st Loyal North Lancashire's. During this regiment's stay the Rev. Stuart Patterson, the Garrison Chaplain, discovered among its possession a Bible on which George Washington, first President of the United States was said to have taken his Freemasonry Oath. This was obviously a trophy of the American War of Independence, in which the North Lancashire's had fought over a century earlier.

1891 In December 1891 the 88th Connaught Rangers under Sir George Larpent stepped ashore at Pembroke Dock in a snowstorm, in marked contrast to the heat of Aden, their previous station. However, the prospect of spending Christmas at home after service abroad put the soldiers in much better humour once they had bedded down. The officers were men of considerable wealth, keen to encourage and promote sport in the locality, and one of their presentations was a cup for competition in the Pembroke Steeplechases. During the regiments stay a steel engraving representing General Picton, of Waterloo fame; was presented to the officers' mess by Sir Owen Scourfield, Bart.

1893 After the departure of the Connaughts, the artillery took over garrison duties until 24 November 1893, when the trooper Himalaya again put into Milford Haven, this time with the 41st Welch Regiment from Malta. There was a particularly warm welcome for the bandmaster, Mr. Rowlandson, a popular and well-remembered figure from the regiment's earlier stay in Pembroke Dock. Its band played the Vespers Hymn every night at 9.30 on the Hut Encampment parade ground, a sum of money having been bequeathed for this to be done. In addition the Welsh and English National Anthems were played.

1894 On St. David's Day 1894 the regiment indulged in traditional celebrations and that night there was a grand banquet in the officers' mess. In the early hours of the following morning, by which time the mess was unoccupied; it was ravaged by fire. Many valuable items, including the mess silver, were destroyed, and for some time afterwards the officers dined at the Pier Hotel and, subsequently, in a spacious room in the old Pembroke Dock library, specially converted for the purpose. It was still in use as an officers' mess room in the early years of the 1900's

1895 On 17 August 1895 the paddle steamer Cambria brought the 2nd Battalion of the Devon Regiment (11th Foot) from Ilfracombe. They were commanded initially by Colonel Kinder and then by Colonel Bullock, who was to achieve fame in the Boer War by refusing to surrender. He was only taken prisoner after being knocked unconscious.

When the Devon's left the 2nd Battalion of the 24th South Wales Borderers (the 24th Regiment of Foot) replaced them. Every Pembrokeshire schoolboy knew about this regiment and its heroic defence of the Rorke's Drift mission station in Natal during the Zulu War eighteen years earlier. The 24th marched through south Wales to Pembroke Dock and was given a tumultuous welcome all along the route by thousands of people. When approaching Pembroke Dock the marching soldiers detoured to Pembroke, where a large crowd in the castle gave them a rousing reception and regaled them with refreshments. There was an official welcome from the Mayor, Councillor Samuel J. Allen, who, accompanied by officials in a four-horse brake, members of the Corporation on foot and the band of the 1st Volunteer Battalion Welsh Regiment (E Company), then preceded the regiment to Pembroke Dock. There streets were lined three and four deep with cheering crowds as the 24th, bayonets fixed and Colours flying, marched past.

1899 the 1st Battalion Royal Welsh Fusiliers arrived from Ludgershall, Salisbury Plain, on 5 September 1899. Its stay in Pembroke Dock was brief for, on Sunday, 22 October, the regiment entrained for Southampton on its way to South Africa. On the morning of departure from Pembroke

Dock, a reservist from Cardiff was killed when a drummer named Grainger accidentally discharged his rifle. He was placed under immediate arrest but his subsequent acquittal by a court martial came too late for him to follow his comrades to South Africa. The regiment's commanding officer, Colonel Thorold, a man of exceptionally fine physique, was killed in the Boer War.

1899 The Royal Welsh Fusiliers were swiftly replaced by the 3rd Battalion of the Welch Regiment (Royal Glamorgan Militia), said to be the largest militia battalion in the British Army at that time. These soldiers occupied the hut encampment; their stay was brief for they were soon on their way to South Africa.

Throughout the Boer Campaign Pembroke Dock was overflowing with troops for, in addition to the Royal Northern Reserve Regiment, which was stationed there, the town also accommodated Number 1 Company of the Royal Garrison Artillery, the 35th Royal Engineers, and a section of the Royal Pembrokeshire Militia. They all did garrison duty until the New Year of 1903. Many of the men in the Royal Northern Reserve Regiment were time-expired veterans who had fought throughout the Empire in Queen Victoria's 'Little Wars'; they wore a string of campaign medals with great pride.

1903 One of the most famous regiments in the British Army, the King's Shropshire Light Infantry, commanded by Colonel Bulman, DSO, arrived in March 1903 from Poonah, India, and there were mixed fortunes for the men in respect of accommodation. Some were lucky enough to move into a block of the half-completed Llanion Barracks, but the majority was quartered in the old hut encampment.

Llanion Barracks

Although condemned some nine years earlier by the Duke of Cambridge, then Commander-in-Chief of the British Army, the huts had remained in use and the decision was made to extend their life until the new barracks, able to accommodate two battalions, was ready. Building commenced in 1899 and was completed in 1906. There were a number of innovations, not least a commodious mess hall for the soldiers. At Defensible and the hut encampment, they had slept and eaten in the same barrack-room, a practice that had been common throughout the British Army until the modernisation of barracks and the construction of new ones like Llanion. The new messing arrangements, therefore, were warmly welcomed. Each barrack-block had a veranda so that the men could sit and chat in the open air, and the large gymnasium could also be used for concerts, balls and other entertainments. Houses were built for married personnel who wished to bring their families to Pembroke Dock.

The opening of Llanion Barracks signalled the gradual demise of the sixty-year-old fort at Defensible. It had served its purpose well, quartering throughout Victoria's reign many thousands of troops in defence of the Royal Dockyard. It would never again be the principal source of accommodation for regiments garrisoned at Pembroke Dock, although right up to the early 1950s it continued to be occupied from time to time by various small units of the regular army, and local territorials.

Scores of Pembrokeshire men enlisted at the Llanion Barracks during the Great War, and after the War distinguished regiments continued to serve two to three-year stints at Pembroke Dock. In the mid-1920s the Royal Welsh Fusiliers - and their goat!, came back. Between then and the outbreak of the Second World War, a number of regiments were stationed at Llanion Barracks including the East Lancs, the Essex, the Royal Fusiliers, the King's Shropshire Light Infantry and The Buffs. The latter formed the garrison when Britain declared hostilities with Germany on the morning of 3

September 1939.

In October 1943 the first foreign troops to be stationed at Llanion Barracks moved in. They were American GIs of the 110th US Infantry Regiment, which formed part of the 28th US Infantry Division from Pennsylvania. The bulk of the 5,000-strong regiment was at Pembroke Dock, with various companies based at Lamphey, Cresselly, Haverfordwest and Fishguard. For the next eight months this regiment trained extensively in Pembrokeshire for the invasion of Europe, finding the county's many beaches ideal for the purpose. Strenuous route marches were also undertaken in the Preseli hills.

Off-duty the GIs made many friends, and lay on parties for hundreds of local children over the Christmas period, 1943. They also challenged the Pembrokeshire Home Guard to a shooting match, believing that their riflemen - in the best tradition of the American frontier - were second to none. In fact the old timers of the Home Guard won!

1944 General Dwight D. Eisenhower,

On 1 April 1944 the Supreme Allied Commander, General Dwight D. Eisenhower, paid a surprise visit to the 110th Regiment. Mr. Joe Gough of Pembroke, then a detective with the Pembrokeshire Constabulary recalled:

“It was not until the day before, that we were informed Eisenhower was coming. I was detailed, along with a colleague, Jack Evans, to act as the General's civilian police escort. He arrived by train at Tenby and was met by a delegation of top US Army brass. From Tenby our police car led a fast convoy of American military vehicles, with motor cycle out-riders, to the headquarters of the 110th Infantry Regiment at Llanion Barracks, Pembroke Dock. There the soldiers were lined up for inspection and afterwards Ike asked them to gather round so he could address them. I was struck by the friendly rapport he had with the men”.

The 110th Regiment's Intelligence Officer was Major (later Brigadier General) Robert M. Gaynor. He remembered that day at Pembroke Dock thus:

“It was chilly and damp and the troops had been standing on the barrack square in the rain and windy gloom for some time. They were a bit displeased but Ike's appearance, with his overwhelming personality, quickly changed the mood and most of us remember the occasion with great satisfaction.”

For his part, Ralph Johnson of Philadelphia, then a chief warrant officer and the regiment's assistant adjutant, recalled:

“After the inspection Ike stood in a jeep and used a bull-horn to speak to us. Later he walked through the re-formed ranks, chatting briefly here and there. He spoke to the soldier next to me and asked 'Are you ready?' The answer had to be 'Yes.' “Before leaving he shouted farewell and added 'Good luck! See you when we cross the Rhine, and we'll all have a drink together.' Sure enough, on the day we did make the Rhine crossing, trucks arrived loaded with cases of champagne. There was a bottle for every three GIs”

Eisenhower also visited other units of the 110th Infantry scattered around Pembrokeshire, including the regiment's Cannon Company, whose members were billeted in Cresselly House, Cresselly. A member of the domestic staff was Miss Martha Davies, who later became housekeeper and did not retire until the mid-1980s. She recalled:

“We were aware someone very important was going to arrive, and there was great excitement when General Eisenhower was seen stepping out of his car. The American soldiers paraded on the lawn and I watched from the staircase window as he inspected them. The General had a most engaging smile and impressed us as being affable but determined. I remember that miniature Stars and Stripes were attached to the mudguards of his staff car. After seeing Ike I think we all sensed it would not be long before the invasion of Europe got under way.”

Winston Churchill

There was another very important visitor to Pembrokeshire round about the same time. Prime Minister Winston Churchill watched invasion exercises on the beaches at Amroth and Wiseman's Bridge, accompanied by senior British and American officers. Mrs Olive Cook, whose parents, Jack and 'Artie' Mathias, then kept the Wiseman's Bridge Inn, recalled:

“There was tremendous excitement when it was realised the great man himself was in our midst. He and his companions stopped by the Inn for refreshments and we carried trays of tea, sandwiches and Welsh cakes out to his car, which was flying a small Union Jack from the bonnet. Mr. Churchill's daughter Sarah, who was his chauffeur and in army uniform, helped us carry the trays. She was a charming girl. I remember amphibious vehicles called DUKWS coming out of the sea and up on to the beach. They were filled with British and American troops. Anti-aircraft guns were placed in strategic positions at Wiseman's Bridge, but whether they were part of the exercise or there to protect Mr. Churchill, I could not say.”

110th Infantry Regiment

On 14 April 1944, only a matter of days after its troops had taken part in the D-Day rehearsals witnessed by Churchill, the 110th Infantry Regiment left Pembrokeshire under the cover of darkness for a military camp close to Marlborough in Wiltshire. There it remained until 17 July when, as part of the 28th Infantry Division, it moved to Southampton and Weymouth for the crossing to Normandy. In the months that followed the division was engaged in constant combat and late in the year was embroiled in two of the bloodiest battles of the war involving US troops. The first, in the Huertgen Forest, near the Siegfried Line, in November, was fought in a continuous mixture of rain, mist and snow. The second took place in the Ardennes in November and became known as the 'Battle of the Bulge'. Ironically, the 28th had been sent to this thickly wooded area to lick its wounds after the Huertgen Forest mauling. In both battles the 110th Infantry bore the brunt of some of the most savage fighting.

It has been estimated that of the 5,000 men who left Pembrokeshire with the 110th Infantry Regiment on 14 April 1944, only some 500 were still fit for combat duty by the end of that year. In the Huertgen Forest alone, the 28th Division suffered a minimum of 6,184 casualties after beginning the battle with its maximum infantry complement of 15,000 men.

A regiment of the 2nd US (Indianhead) Infantry Division, previously stationed in Northern Ireland, replaced the 110th Regiment in Pembrokeshire for some months, before itself leaving for Europe.

1945 British solidiers returned to Pembroke Dock for peacetime garrison duty. The town turned out in force in the mid-1950s to welcome the 1st Battalion of the Welch Regiment, who's CO was Colonel Cowie.

Davey John Lt MC

Among the regiment's younger officers was Lieutenant John Davey, a local man from Lamphey, who had won the MC in Korea a few years before. He eventually commanded the regiment which, following amalgamation with the South Wales Borderers, became the Royal Regiment of Wales.

The Welch Regiment was succeeded at Llanion Barracks by the 22nd Light Anti-Aircraft Regiment, now known as the 'Welsh Gunners' because it recruits mainly in the Principality. This regiment had a Pembroke Dock cafe named after it. Called 'The Double Two', it was destroyed by fire in the 1970s.

1966 Llanion Barracks became surplus to military requirements in 1966. Eight years later, and following local Government reorganisation, the former head quarters buildings and officers' mess were taken over by the newly-formed South Pembrokeshire District Council as its headquarters. The old barrack blocks with their verandas, such a luxury for the troops who occupied them for the first time in the early part of the century, were converted to flats, and the guardroom eventually became a pub of that name! Other buildings were leased or bought, one being taken over by the Department of Social Security. Cars now park on the former barrack square where Eisenhower inspected his invasion troops.

During the early 1970s Defensible was been the headquarters of South Pembrokeshire Golf Club. It was sold to an English-based company in 1985 by South Pembrokeshire District Council, that Authority having previously used the barracks as a works depot and stores.

The departure of the army in the 1960s, together with the earlier closure of the RAFs flying boat base in the town in 1959, dealt a severe blow to the local economy. It also signalled the conclusion of the military's connection with Pembroke Dock; a connection which had spanned 152 eventful years. A colourful era had come to an end.

Garrisoned in 1831 but was dismantled in 1847

Then was used by the Dockyard Battalion

Captain Wright R.M. & Commander Jennings R.N. appointed to form battalion 19/4/1847.

Terrier Captain was George Chiles (Dockyard Stone Keeper). Drills were every evening and Saturday afternoons and the men were dockyard employees. The men wore a special uniform and had a band led by a Mr. Ribbon.

The threat of invasion was still real at that time and considerable efforts were made to protect the yard.

A network of Fortifications was constructed, to form a chain of defence, not only to protect from seaward attack but also from landward invasion.

An earlier battery on Paterchurch point was improved and Martello towers were built on the south west and north east corners of the Dockyard walls, themselves heightened and strengthened.

Hutted encampments of Infantry and Artillery had been scattered around the town, and permanent barracks were built for them at Llanion, on the Barrack Hill and at Pennar.

Further down the harbour, forts were built at Scoveston, Hubberston, South Hook, Stack Rock, Angle and East Blockhouse.

It is obvious that Pembroke Dock was built with just one aim in mind, so the announcement of the closure of the Dockyard in 1926, was a grievous blow, and unemployment remained high in the town throughout the thirties.

Army – acc to Vernon Scott

Snow flurries gusted across Pembroke Dock on a bleak, bitterly cold February morning 132 years ago as the 31st East Surrey Regiment prepared to leave the town. The men had breakfasted early and at first light they were assembled on the Defensible Barracks parade ground, stamping chilled feet on the frozen square.

As the light strengthened, orders were barked, the troops snapped to attention, and with their commanding officer at the lead, they tramped out across the drawbridge and began descending the Barracks Hill in orderly ranks to the Royal Dockyard below.

The year was 1855 and from garrisons throughout the nation Queen Victoria's soldiers were off to the Crimea. The 31st East Surreys had received their embarkation orders only a week or two earlier. Although the notice was short there had been time for an officers' ball to which all the gentry of Pembrokeshire had been invited.

It was by all accounts a 'damned swell affair', with a band brought down from Cardiff to play for dancing and 'enough fine Food on the tables to have fed the whole of Pembroke Dock' There were some hungry bellies in the town which could have done with it too.

Meanwhile, the enlisted men had said their farewells at a much humbler level. They had swarmed into the smoky inns and taverns of the dockyard town and those of nearby Pembroke to 'drink, wench and make merrie'

The snow had thickened by the time the regiment reached the Royal Dockyard and there 'amidst much excitement and tokens of grief from wives, families and sweethearts, the men embarked upon the troopship Imperadore bound for the Crimea'.

The majority of the soldiers had never heard of the place. The war there was the first major military engagement in which the British Army had been involved since Waterloo many years before. There were, in fact, a few grizzled Waterloo veterans in their number who had quaffed many a free measure of ale during the East Surrey's time in Pembroke Dock on the strength that they had soldiered with Wellington, the Iron Duke.

General Gordon

As the Imperadore slowly moved away from Pembroke Dock in the swirling snow, a young lieutenant in the Royal Engineers and who was attached to the East Surrey's, looked back searching for the barracks on the hill.

His name was Charles Gordon and long before the turn of the century he was to become the best-known general in the Imperial Army. He was also to die a martyr in the Sudan at Khartoum.

As an officer he had been privileged to 'live' out while at Pembroke Dock and had lodged in a house at the top of Lewis Street. He was a man who kept to himself and was not altogether popular with his fellow officers. Many who watched the regiment depart Pembroke Dock that cold, grey morning, had frequently seen him 'walking to and fro at the foot of the Barracks Hill studying a book'.

When his papers arrived from the war office summoning him to the Crimea for active service with the 31st East Surrey Regiment, he was reported to have exclaimed with despair "I have recieved my death warrant!"

From the high stem of the Imperadore, Gordon continued to look back at the sloping town of Pembroke Dock and the barracks atop the hill, until a thick blanket of snow cut both off from his view. He never saw then again.

Work on the building of Defensible had begun 11 years before, in 1844. Mr. James Cole, a mason who worked on the battlements during the construction and who remembered seeing Gordon 'walking to an fro studying a book', he was still alive and residing in the town when the First World War started in August 1914.

Those who are familiar with the barracks and admire their size and strength may be unaware of the remarkable fact that they were completed in iust 12 months, the contractor, Thomas Jackson, handing them over to the military on November 25th, 1845.

According to records .. 'Possession was taken at three o'clock in the afternoon and was officially indicated by- the hoisting of Her Majesty's (Queen Victoria) flag amidst deafening cheers from hundreds of spectators. A substantial dinner with a liberal quantity of double strength Welsh ale was given to the workmen'.

These men deserved their reward, too, because even in this day and age, with all the contractors' mechanical aids, it is doubtful whether such a substantial fortress, capable of accommodating a regiment of soldiers, could be completed in 12 months.

Its first occupants were the Royal Marines of the Portsmouth Division, transferred there from the guardship Dragon moored off Pembroke Dockyard. They were shortly joined by two companies of the 14th West Yorkshire Regiment.

For several years after the military's take-over, the trench or moat around the barracks was not enclosed .. "presenting a great danger to the unwary, particularly on pitch black nights".

Several marines, returning to quarters much the worse for wear after over-indulging, toppled over the moat and were killed. Their headstones. with suitable epitaphs, are still to be seen in the old town cemetery (now a garden of rest) in Upper Park Street, and one reads:

To the Memory of John Harding. Late Private Royal Marines. who was accidentally killed by falling into the entrenchment at the Fort Barracks, Pembroke Dock, October 10th 1850 age 32.

The verse underneath, obviously composed by someone with a very dry sense of humour, says:

The Lord direct our feet and guide with gracious care.
in even step we danger meet in every path a snare.

Then reader pause whoer thou art,
as thus my grave you view renumber thou from life must part and perhaps as quickly too!

A local GP named Dr. Sumpter, who at that time was widely known in the district, lost his life through similar circumstances while returning from a professional visit to a patient in Pennar one night. He never recovered from the shock of the 30 feet fall and died from its effects.

Following the departure of the East Surreys to the Crimea, subscriptions were raised among the young men of the Royal Dockyard and the town in general, in aid of the wives and families left behind. One of the men behind this charitable gesture was a Mr. Thomas Collins of Church Street, Pembroke Dock, and it was largely due to his efforts that a handsome sum was raised.

During the Crimea Campaign the Defensible garrison was composed entirely of militiamen who .. not only enlivened the town with a drum and fife band, but made it lively for the inhabitants in other less acceptable ways; for the militia were oftentimes a very rough class of men, who were much given to practical joking and disquieting pranks. These men were more in number than the Defensible fort could accommodate; consequently some had to be billeted on the townspeople who doubtless were not sorry when their uninvited guests took their departure'.

Between 1855 and 1861, the regiments garrisoned in the town were the Royal Pembroke-shire Artillery, the Monmouthshire Light Infantry, the Hampshire and Antrim Militia. the Montgomery Rifles, who wore a green uniform and the Royal North Gloucester-shire Regiment.

This regiment, which afterwards became known as the 4th Battalion the Gloucestershire Regiment were, together with the Monmouthshire Militia. the first occupants of the wooden huts or hut encampment. These were built during the time of the Crimea War on the sloping ground overlooking the Pier Road leading to Hobbs Point. The wooden huts were condemned in 1894 by His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, then a Field Marshal and Commander-in-Chief of the British Army.

After 1861 came the crack 15th Brigade to the Defensible Barracks, and they were considered an elite corps. When they completed their garrison duties at Pembroke Dock they proceeded from Defensible Barracks by way of Commercial Row, Queen Street. Dimond Street and Water Street to Hobbs Point, accompanied by their band.

Because of the death, which occurred at the time, of Queen Victoria's husband Albert, the Prince Consort, the band played with muffled drums. The soldiers of the 15th Brigade were ferried out to the troopship Tamar, lying off Hobbs Point.

They were succeeded at Defensible in 1865 by the 62nd Wiltshire Regiment .. 'which arrived at Pembroke Dock to the inspiring strains of its own band'. Within a matter of months this band played on the occasion of the unveiling of the Prince Consort's memorial on Castle Hill, Tenby, by His Royal Highness Prince Arthur, later the Duke of Connaught.

Various regiments followed the Wiltshires, including the 58th Depot, the 13th Light Infantry, the 103rd Foot, the 1st Battalion the Royal Welch Fusiliers, the 9th East Norfolks (known as the Holy Boys'), the 95th Derbyshires, the 54th Dorsetshires and 36th Worcestershires. These soldiers went into the local record book as the last stationed in Pembroke Dock who wore green facings on their uniforms. and who had the old 'shako', a stiff military cap with a peak and a small upright tuft at the front, for headwear. They were followed by the 7th Royal Fusiliers.

1859 The Volunteers

The Volunteer movement at Pembroke Dock was first started in 1859, when meetings were held in the Temperance Hall.

Mr. William Harries, of Walwyn House, was one of the first members enrolled.

Mr. Edgecumbe Chevalier was Captain,

Mr. McAlpin, father of Mr. K. McAlpin, Borough Surveyor, was Lieutenant.

The men wore a gray uniform. It was known in 1860 as the 2nd Pembroke-shire Rifle Volunteers.

The first review was held at Portfield, Haverfordwest,

1862 the regiment became changed to that of the Pembroke Dock Volunteer Artillery, commanded by Mr. Chevalier; but upon this officer leaving the town

Mr. J. Richardson was made Captain.

Dr. Feynolds was Surgeon; the sergeant-majors were Mr. W. H. Lloyd and Mr. George Sloggett.

Mr. Richardson held command for some years; afterwards it was passed over to

Mr. C. A. Christie, who kept it until the regiment was disbanded in 1884 outside old Pater Battery.

Mrs. Ramsay presented a silver bugle to this corps on July 10, 1861, and some ladies in the town worked a set of colours and presented them to the Volunteers. The colours were subsequently handed over to a late Vicar of St. Mary's Church, Pembroke, by Captain Christie.

1904 A new company the C. Company, 1st V.B. Welsh Regiment, was started in Pembroke Dock in 1904, Mr. Treweek, Pembroke, as Captain,

Mr. W. Bowling, of Diamond Street, Pembroke Dock, as Lieutenant.

The silver bugle which was presented to the Pembroke Dock Artillery Volunteers was sent by Mr. C. A. Christie of London, the last commanding officer of this company, to Lieutenant W. H. Bowling, for C. Company, 1st V. B. Welsh Regiment for their use.

Military Cemetery

Situated at a little distance from the barracks lies the military cemetery, where many a soldier has been laid to his last resting-place by his comrades, who 'with arms reversed and muffled drum' followed his body to the grave. The largest funeral that has taken place in this cemetery was that of Colonel Isaac Moore, 13th Depot Battalion, who was buried October 14, 1868.

Places of Worship

The total capacity of the places of worship in Pembroke Dock according to Findlay in 1875 was 6620

Apart from St John's for which an architect was employed there is a remarkable similarity between the original designs of the early places of worship in the Town. It is believed that a Mr John Road, a draughtsman in the Dockyard drew up the plans and designs. Later he was assisted by Mr George Willing. Mr W Mason is credited with setting out the roofs, he also turned all the pillars free of cost. Dockyard shipwrights did the roofing and the floors while the dockyard joiners did the doors windows and pews.

1824 - The first Anglican Church Services to be held in the new locality were conducted on board the Naval Frigate H.M.S. Lapwing, moored close to the foreshore, when the Vicar of St Mary's Pembroke officiated. Later, a wooden Church was erected in the South East corner of the yard to be replaced in 1834 by the stone built imposing Chapel which after the closure of the Royal Dockyard in 1926 passed into the care of the RAF. In the post war years of World War II the building was used for the formation of many musical shows and acquired the name of " The Garrison Theatre"

1834 The cemetery in Upper Park St., the gift of Mr. Thomas Meyrick of Bush was consecrated by the Bishop of St David's and a small chapel erected on the site which was enclosed by high walls and a wrought iron gate, kept locked at all times. There was, until the late 1800's a stone in the wall near the north east corner recording the fact that William Instance, who had help erect the walls around the cemetery was the first person to be buried in it. Being so close to the early town was a great boon as the coffins were normally carried followed by the mourners walking. In 1898 the Rev Silas Phillips recorded that this stone was broken beyond repair. On the north west side were buried the Marines who died while based at Pembroke Dock. Burials continued until 1869 when Llanion Cemetery was opened. Some burials were subsequently arranged in family graves, e.g. the "Teesdale" grave. Although the Chapel was originally intended just for the burial service it was often used by the priest attending a funeral, for baptisms. Mason records that, as there was no font an ordinary basin was used and that sometimes two of three children would be baptised together and sometimes several families. The Chapel continued in use for over a hundred years, latterly as a mortuary. During the time of Canon David Steven's the Church was persuaded to sell the land to the Pembroke Borough Council/ South Pembrokeshire District Council who cleared the site and laid it out as a Leisure Garden. The headstones were stacked against the walls and those which had been damaged, preserved A Record was kept of those headstones which can be identified and may be inspected at the Offices of the South Pembrokeshire District Council. Mason gives and estimates of

3934 burials in this cemetery

Parish of Pembroke Dock

Her Majesty sanction was published in the London Gazette on June 3rd 1844 The boundaries were defined as “ All that part of the said Parish of St Mary, Pembroke bounded on the north, North – west and south by Milford Haven and on the east by an imaginary line commencing at a point at the southern end of Imble Rd and thence extending northward along the middle of such road as far as the middle of the high road to Pembroke and thence eastwards along the middle of such last road to a point opposite to the middle of the road leading to Pembroke Ferry and thence towards the north-west along the middle of such road as far as the road leading to Carmarthen and then in a straight line across such last mentioned road and along the western boundary of a certain meadow called Patch so far as the high water mark at Llanion Pill”.

The Parish of Pembroke Dock – Silas T Phillips 1898

1844 Nov 13 Rev George Fitzroy Kelly first incumbent of the Parish and from this date baptisms and burials were registered in the registers of the district of St John but until a new church was built marriage had to be celebrated at St Mary Pembroke. The new incumbent lived with the captain Superintendent of the Dockyard and he conducted services in the National School. At that time no evening service was held in the Dockyard Chapel.

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1843/4 By Acts of Parliament in this period and subsequent changes in the structure of Local Government, the area under the description of Pembroke Dock was included in the Municipal Borough of Pembroke and was described as the Pater Ward .

Pembroke at this time was in poor shape and in 1823 was insolvent. The union of Pembroke Dock with Pembroke saved the small town from further decay as the new town went from strength to strength to become a Flag Ship of the British Empire and a Garrison Town of great importance to the British Army. The names of General Roberts, Kitchener, Gordon of Khartoum - later Air Marshall Sir Edgar Harris (Bomber Harris) Lawrence of Arabia and the German Spy William Joyce (Lord Haw Haw) (lodged at 26 London Rd.). often pass through the minds of those of us who remember the old Town as it was before it died in 1926

1844 - by Act (6 & 7) VICTORIA, Pembroke Dock was declared a District for the purpose of Local Government and so for Ecclesiastical purposes a new Parish (as soon as a Parish Church was consecrated) On November 13th, the Revd. Dr. George Fitzroy Kelly became the Incumbent of the new Parish and remained in office until his death in 1878; the headstone of his grave is close to the Llanion Cemetery Chapel entrance. Pending the building of a new Church, the Vicar resided at the residence of the Capt. Superintendent of the Royal Dockyard and conducted Services at the national School in Victoria Rd.

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1846 - The land upon which St John's Church was built was acquired from the Bush Estate Trustees for £50. The resultant building costs amounted to £3500.

On September 21st, the Ceremony of Consecration was arranged. At this time Pembroke Dock had become one of the most progressive Towns in Wales and a Military and Naval Station of National importance. It is written that the Ceremony began with the assembly of the Procession at the national school. The procession was said to be the most imposing Pembroke Dock has ever seen, comprising the following:-

Scholars of the National School, Architect & Builder, the Mayor and Corporation with mace bearers, Military Officers of the Depot & Garrison in full dress uniform, Naval Officers in Port in uniform, the Revd Dr G.F.Kelly, MA (First Incumbent of the Parish) and Churchwardens, The First Lord of the Admiralty, the Earl of Auckland with Sir Charles Adams and other gentlemen of the Board of Admiralty

At the site, Lord Auckland was greeted by the hoisting of the flag of the Admiralty and received by a guard of honour composed of a detachment of Marines, the Enclosure being kept by the 37th Hampshire Regt.

The Revd James Allen read the inscription on a parchment which was placed in a sealed bottle with the customary coins.

When the stone had been well and truly laid, Lord Auckland delivered an address and he was followed by Captain Falcon RN, then Captain Superintendent of the Royal Dockyard.

A plate seems to have been placed over the cavity in the stone and then walled over. It is believed that the stone lies near the tower door. Notes from J Meyrick Owen 1848 - The building of the Church was completed - the floors were of concrete, the pews of deal and some were rented. There were no Choir Stalls in the Chancel; the Choir sat at the West end led by an orchestra and was screened by a red baize curtain. The children were seated under the Tower. A large stove stood in the Chancel. Later an Organ was erected in the Chancel - now in St Patrick's Church.

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1849 - In September the weathercock was fixed on the Church.

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1857 - A site for the Vicarage was purchased for £80 - and the handsome stone residence standing in its own grounds within the Church enclosure was erected. Previously a lime kiln stood on the site. Prior to the building of the Vicarage, the Vicar Rev D Kelly resided in the house now occupied by Mr John Roberts, Undertaker, in Bush St.

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1861 - The Rev John Nicholas was the first Curate to be appointed, followed by the Rev C D Quinland and the Rev Geo. E. Mc Hugh

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1865 - The Town Clock was placed in the Tower

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1867 - An attempt was made to provide accommodation for a Sunday School in King William St.(Gas House Lane) Better and more substantial work was done at Pennar. The curate Rev G.E.Mc Hugh had married the daughter of the Chief Constructor at the Royal Dockyard, Mr Fincham and with the help and patronage of his father-in-law the Rev Mc Hugh commenced cottage lectures and a Sunday School at Pennar. A large cottage was purchased for £100 and there Services were held until the building of St Patrick's Church in 1894.

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1878 - The Vicar the Rev Dr. George Fitzroy Kelly died at the age of 77 and was buried at Llanion Cemetery. He was remembered as a preacher of great ability with an attractive personality. The Pulpit in St John's was provided as a memorial and a tablet affixed there to.

Dr.Kelly was succeeded by the Rev F G Montague Polsell MA. for the next three years during which time the Church was restored, reseated and provided with a heating system.

Notes from J Meyrick Owen

1880 - The Church was re-opened on January 4th., as from that date the Infantry Bn., stationed at Llanion Barracks was present having previously attended Sunday morning Service at the Royal Dockyard Chapel.

Early Burial places in the Town

1731 St Mary's register states Jan ye 11 buried ye sonne, Roger, of Mr. Williams Adam's in their own Burying Ground [at various times remains were unearthed during the construction of the Dockyard and re interned on St Patrick's Hill][[under what is now the site of South Pembs. Hospital?]]

The early burials of Town's people were either at St Mary's Pembroke, Monkton or from about 1818 to 1834 at Bethany [halted by Admiralty because of fears of contamination of the water supply to the Dockyard]

1834 26th Sept Mr. Thomas Meyrick of Bush gave the town nearly 2 acres of land free of charge. Consecrated by the Bishop of St David's on that date. First person buried there was William Instance who had worked on the surrounding wall and died on October 11th 1834. Closed September 1869 when nearly 4000 burials had taken place.

St John the Evangelist

1844 Some time after that Chapel was built - from 1844 to 1848.- the Church of England services were held in the National School Victoria Rd

During the time that Divine services were held in the schoolroom a rather alarming event took place. A large number of people had congregated to hear a funeral sermon given by the Rev. George Fitzroy Kelly (afterwards Dr.Kelly). Owing to the weight caused by such an unusually large congregation, the floor cracked down the middle with a loud noise, despite the fact that stanchions had been placed under it in view of an extra strain. Such consternation was caused by the mishap. Fortunately, no accident occurred, but the assemblage at once dispersed.

1844, by the passing of an Act (6 and 7 Victoria, chap. xxxvii 1843), Pembroke Dock was formed into a district, and in November 1844, the Rev. George Fitzroy Kelly was appointed as the first incumbent.

1845 At a meeting held on December 11 (Thursday), 1845, it was proposed by the late Mr. William Hulm that a new church should be erected in the old burial-ground. This was seconded by Mr. Robert Lanning, then the Town Clerk. An amendment was proposed by the late Mr. Cocks, that the sacredness of the burial-ground should not be interfered with, and that other ground should be selected for the church. This was seconded by Mr. Glanville, and carried by a large majority.

1846 On August 19, 1846, Mr. Meyrick, the late owner of the Bush Estate, conveyed through Edward Laws, Esq., a site for the erection of a new church. A memorial tablet to him was erected after his death in the Dockyard Chapel. In 1983 this was found smashed, in rubbish, outside the Chapel. It was pieced together, by the Dockyard Shipwrights under Mr M Naish, framed and is now in the Main Office H.M. Mooring and Marine Salvage Depot Pembroke Dock.

On this site some of the very oldest inhabitants of the town remember there was once a rope-walk, owned by a man named Eldridge.

The ground for the building of the church was staked out on Wednesday, September 4, 1846, and the foundation stone was laid on September 21, 1846 by Lord Auckland, at that time First Lord of the Admiralty. He was accompanied by Sir Charles Adams and Captain Berkeley, subsequently Lord Fitzhardinge, and other gentlemen of the Board of Admiralty. The Mayor and Corporation were also present. It was an occasion of much rejoicing and ceremony. The Superintendent of the Dockyard, -Captain Falcon, after Lord Auckland had spoken, gave a short address. The Royal Marines formed a guard of honour, and the band of the 37th Regiment was present and added to the general effect. The architect was J.Harrison, Esq., and the contractors were Messrs. Jones and Griffiths.

The cost of the church was £3,500.

1848 September the Church of St.John the Evangelist, as it was named, was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of St. David's, the late Right Rev.Connop Thirlwall, who was accounted one of the greatest Greek scholars of his day.

With the consecration of the church Pembroke Dock became ecclesiastically a new parish, that of St.John's.

The first incumbent, the late Dr.George Fitzroy Kelly, was remembered as a preacher of great ability, with an attractive personality; and he gained the affection of all his parishioners. He died January 25, 1878 aged seventy-seven years, and was buried in the New Cemetery. The pulpit was placed in St. John's Church as a memorial of him, and a brass tablet in front of it is thus inscribed:
In Memory of

Dr. FITZROY KELLY, M.A., LL.D The first, and for thirty years, Vicar of this Parish. Died January 25th, 1878.

We preach Christ, and Him crucified.

During the three years that the Rev. Frederick Glyn Montague Powell, MA., was Vicar of the parish, St. John's Church was restored and reseated, and also provided with a heating apparatus. The church was re-opened on Sunday, January 4, 1880, and on that day the military attended this place of worship for the first time, having previously gone to the Royal Dock yard Chapel.

The schoolroom, a detached building standing in the church grounds, was erected when the Rev. John Seymour Allen was Vicar. Mr. Kenneth McAlpin was the architect and contractor. It was opened by Right Rev.W.Basil Jones, Lord Bishop of St.David's.

There are three memorial stained windows in the church. The first was placed there in memory of the late Isaac Smedley, Esq., J.P., who was a devoted Churchman. The inscription reads:

To the Glory of God, and in Memory of ISAAC SMEDLEY, J.P of Water Street in this town, who entered into rest June 12th, 1896, aged 55 years.

This Window was erected by friends who admired him for the services rendered to the Church, the poor, and the public.

The inscription on another window is as follows:

To the Honor and Glory of God, and in Loving Memory of RICHARD AND AMELIA JANE JENKINS This window is given by their daughter, Phoebe S.Mathias, A.D.1899.

To perpetuate the memory of Dr.James F.Stamper, M.D. a memorial window, the work of Mr.C.E.Kempe, was placed in St. John's Church, inscribed thus :

To the Glory of God, and in Memory of JAMES FENTON STAMPER, M.D., J.P.who entered into rest May 22nd, 1900, aged 52 He was a devout Churchman, a loyal friend, a skilful physician, and a good citizen. The cost of this window was defrayed by voluntary subscriptions.

There are seven mural tablets in the church, one in memory of the family of the Properts. It will be remembered that Mr. Probert is mentioned in an earlier chapter as being one of the first magistrates of the town.

Another tablet is in memory of one Lewis Davies, who was killed in an attack on pirates off the coast of Borneo, September 7, 1868.

There is also one erected to Henry Groves, an early inhabitant of the town, and a former churchwarden.

Four tablets are fixed in the chancel to the memory of a family named Shawe Jones. A grant was given to this family by the Secretary of State for War for rights to be buried in the military cemetery.

1849 In September, 1849, the weathercock was fixed on the church.

1865 In 1865, the town clock was placed in the tower of St. John's Church, mainly by the efforts of the late Dr. Fitzroy Kelly, the late Alderman Hughes, and the late Mr. Cornelius Williams. The cost of the clock itself was £170; the expenses in connection with its erection were a little under £50.

Public subscriptions were raised to defray the same, to which the Admiralty contributed £50. The organ was built by Messrs. P. Conacher and Son, Huddersfield. It cost £360, £100 of which was given by the late Mrs. Thomas McMaster. The organist is Mr. H. Taylor, of Dimond Street.

For many years only one bell announced the time for service which was hung in the year 1848. To commemorate the Coronation of our present Sovereign, King Edward VII., a peal of bells was placed in the tower. The bells were first rung on September 29, 1902, on the anniversary of the opening of the church. The makers of the bells were Messrs. Mears and Stainbank, who also had made the first bell in 1848. The cost of the complete peal of bells, which was £403, was principally defrayed by public subscription, but two were entirely given, one by the Rev. J. W. Longrigg, M.A., a late chaplain of the Dockyard, and the other by members of the Teesdale family, 1857 The Vicarage is a handsome stone residence standing in its own grounds within the church enclosure, and was erected in 1857. Many years before the erection of this building a limekiln stood on the site.

Prior to the Vicarage being built, the first clergyman, Dr. Kelly, resided in a house in Bush Street, now occupied by the firm of W. T. Smith and Sons, wine and spirit merchants.

The first baptism recorded in the register of the church was that of William Henry Budge, son of George and Harriet Budge, on November 29, 1844. The first baptisms that actually took place within the church walls were on October 1, 1848, and were those of Elizabeth Sarah, daughter of William and Jemima Earwaker; Thomas John son of William and Marianne Morris; and Dorothy, daughter of John and Elizabeth Nicholls. The first marriage that was solemnized was by license, on October 3, 1848. The contracting parties were Ann Elizabeth Spriggs, of Pembroke Dock, and James Thomas of Haverfordwest. The officiating clergyman was Dr. Kelly.

It may be interesting to know that Sir William White, K.C.B., LL.D., F.R.S., late Director of Naval Construction, was married in this church to Miss Martin, daughter of a former Master Shipwright of Pembroke Dockyard.

For many years there was a small mission cottage in Pennar, purchased through the instrumentality of the Rev. George McHugh, one of the earliest curates in the parish. In this cottage services were held regularly, and were well attended. Later the Rev. F. G. Montague Powell interested himself in getting a large wooden building erected in the garden of the mission cottage, which for a time served its purpose very well as a temporary place of worship, until St. Patrick's Church was erected. 1894 The foundation stone of this church was laid on May 1, 1894, by the late Lady Catherine Allen of Woodfield, mother of the Rev. John Seymour Allen, M.A., who was the Vicar at that time. The total cost of St. Patrick's Church was £2,324. The architects were Messrs. Nicholson and Son, Hereford, and the contractors Messrs. Davies and Morgan, Pembroke. The site was granted by the War Department. The church was consecrated on July 11, 1893, by the Suffragan Bishop of Swansea.

1903 On Saturday, June 13, 1903, Mrs. F.C. Meyrick, wife of Colonel Meyrick, C.B., laid the foundation-stone of St. Teilo's Church near Waterloo, and it was opened for Divine worship on February 9, 1904, the name-day of the old Welsh saint, by the Arch deacon of St. David's. This church was built principally with stones removed from Pater Battery, to which reference is made elsewhere. The carting was freely done by Messrs. Brown, of Kingswood, and Messrs. Gibby. The bell was given by Mr. Elijah Howell, of Queen Street East, and was taken from the wreck of a steamship, the Ben Nevis. This mission church will prove a great convenience to Llanion, Waterloo, and the surrounding district. The present Vicar of the parish, which includes the three churches is the Rev. Silam T. Phillips, B.A., B.D., (St. David's College, Lampeter), and Rural Dean of Castlemartin. He was appointed on August 31, 1894. He is a zealous clergyman and an energetic worker, and is diligently assisted by two curates, namely, the Rev. John Titus, B.A., and the Rev. A.E. Lewis, B.A.

The exterior has walls of trimmed and dressed limestone a triple ridged roof and a square tower. The interior of the Church with its fifteen arches supporting the roof and tower, consisted of chancel, nave, north and south aisles and vestry with a square tower and later a chiming clock. The columns are of dressed limestone. The original windows were fitted with small squares of tinted glass. The weathercock was fixed to the top of the Tower in 1848. The floors were of concrete with pine pews. The choir sat at the back of the church, children under the tower and an orchestra accompanied the choir and congregation. The original entrance was on the south side was designed without steps. The development on Bush St meant that the majority of the congregation used the smaller door on the north side. This entrance had to be altered and a suitable porch built. There was a large stove installed for heating in the Chancel. Mrs Ann Powell was appointed sextoness and carried out those duties for 33 years.

St John

Originally every legal document described the church as St John without indicating which St John was meant although it is believed that the inscription on the plate over the foundation stone bore the inscription St John the Evangelist.

The first Churchwardens elected on 12 October 1848 were Mr James Jennings (Chymist & Druggist) and George White.

Patronage of the new benefice was vested in the Crown and the bishop alternatively.

Originally the Church floor was of concrete. The Pews were deal and capable of being fastened to prevent the entry of all but those who rented them. There were no choir stalls in the chancel 1867 In 1867 a building was provided at a cost of £96 9s 4d for Sunday School purposes. This building in King Williams Street later became a warehouse.

1894 The damage done to the west end presumably by an earthquake was repaired and the chancel screen erected – the screen cost £100 and was dedicated on Feb 1st 1894.

1851 The capacity given in the 1851 census of religious buildings was free 500 other 375 and the average congregation 400 + 79 scholars in the morning and 750 + 62 scholars in the evenings.

1858A harmonium was purchased was purchased for the Church in 1858 and was played by Miss Adeline Grove. On the building of St Teilo's Mission Church this was moved there.

1860This was replaced in 1860 by an organ. The organ installed in was by Vowles originally made in 1819 and has two manuals and fourteen stops, at present (1998) it is installed in St Patrick's church. It was fitted in the southeast corner of St John's and the choir was moved to that area as well.

1861The Rev. John Nicholas was the first Curate to be appointed in 1861 followed by the Rev. C D Quinland and the Rev. Geo. E. Mc Hugh who lived up in Pennar. He married the daughter of the Chief Constructor at the Royal Dockyard, Mr. Fincham and with the help and patronage of his father-in-law the Rev. Mc Hugh commenced cottage lectures and a Sunday School at Pennar. An attempt was made to provide accommodation for a Sunday School in King William St.(Gas House Lane) in 1867 but with little success.

1878 - The Vicar the Rev. Dr. George Fitzroy Kelly died at the age of 77 and was buried at Llanion Cemetery. He was remembered as a preacher of great ability with an attractive personality. The Pulpit in St John's was provided as a memorial and a tablet affixed to it. He was succeeded by the Rev. F G Montague Polsell MA. The Rev. A Wilson was Curate

1878The Vicarage was enlarged in 1878

1879 On 16 July, 1879, a faculty was granted for the restoration of the parish church, included the installation of stained glass windows, some by Kempe, a carved pulpit of marble and bath stone, new seating, ornamental tile floor covering, a handsome reredos, patent heating apparatus and the building of a new North Porch.

1879On the 3rd of August 1879 wore surplices for the first time and moved from the south aisle to the Chancel.

1880 The Church re-opened on 4 January 1880 after refurbishing which cost of £1500 After the restoration. Weekly Eucharists were introduced and the Infantry Bn., stationed at Llanion Barracks was present having previously attended Sunday morning Service at the Royal Dockyard Chapel. The pew rents had been abolished which meant that more seats were available for the poorer members of the congregation. The Rev. F G Powell resigned and on December 14th the Rev. John Seymour Allen became Vicar. He was related to the Allans of Cesselly

1883 The Schoolroom and Hall by the church was completed in 1883 at a cost of £1300. The design was by Mr. K McAlpin

1884 In 1884 there was a robed choir of forty and the present organ was installed in 1890. It was purchased at a cost of £360 from Messrs Peter Conacher

1924Rev. Prosser had been instrumental in organising fundraising in all the Churches through the war years to build a new schoolroom at St Patricks. This was completed in 1924.

In a letter written January 19th 1924 he states that he had recently sold one of the little camp churches built on War Department ground and vested in himself personally. The highest bid he received was £15 – Was this the one on Bush Camp

In 1926 the Dockyard closed,. Unemployment and depression hit the town many tradesmen left the for other Government establishments. The Dockyard Chapel also closed and many of the Choristers transfered to St John's choir.

The Rev. Prosser was followed by the Rev. J Davies whose Scottish Terrier is said to still haunt the Vicarage

He was followed by the Rev. DD Bartlett who served the Church during the Second World War. During that period one of the Air Raid Shelters for the town was the Vicarage basement. After a period of illness he left the town and the Rev J T Morgan who had been Priest in Charge of St Patrick's was appointed Vicar of Pembroke Dock. He had the reputation of being vitriolic and not very tolerant

He was followed by the Rev D J Stevens who had previously been involved with Mission work. After his death the Rev Alan Thomas was appointed Vicar in 1977

Mission Room at Llanreath

The Rev F G M Powell contemplated the building of a Mission Hall at Llanreath. Several open air meetings were held there on summer evenings after Evensong at S John's. Eventually arrangements were made to use a room erected by the Calvinistic Methodists but numbers dwindled and the mission closed.

St Teilo's

The funding of this Church was quite unusual. With the exception of a few free gifts the cost was met by the quarterly offerings of the congregations of St John's and St Patrick's. The Vicar had made an appeal on a pamphlet explaining the proposal for obtaining the funds and the response was such that no fund raising by means of bazaars etc. was necessary. The stone came from the old Pater Battery which was being demolished in the Dockyard at that time and was carted to the site free of charge by Mr Thomas Brown of Kingswood and Mr Joseph Gibby of Bierspool. Questions were asked in Parliament about the material from the Dockyard being used free of cost in the construction of this church. The Church is a small rectangular building with a continuous nave and chancel. A lean to at the west end contains the porch and the vestry. It has a small projecting turret set within the gable apex at the west end containing the bell. It is constructed of rubble limestone with red brick dressings and the roofs are of slate. Internally the walls are plastered, ceiling boarded as are the floors. The bell was donated by Mr Elijah Howell of Queen St. It had come from the wreck of the Steam Ship Ben Nevis. A harmonium purchased for St John's Church in 1858 on the building of St Teilo's Mission Church was moved there. It was played by Miss Maud Thomas. Among the furnishings donated was a communion service by Dr Stamper, cross and vases by his wife and an Alter cloth by Miss Stamper. Candlesticks by Rev Goodenough MA RN alms bags from Mrs Harris, book for the lectern and altar Miss Packe, alms dish Mr and Mrs T Brown, altar desk Mrs Williams, kneeling cushions Mrs Smith and the stove by a lady member of the congregation. The Mission Church was consecrated Feb 9th 1904.

1912 February 7th St Teilo's schoolroom opened

In 2003 it was found that the timber in the church was suffering from dry rot and had to be replaced.

The school room was used for services until the work was completed

Bethany Chapel

The first chapel in the town was Bethany, which was erected in 1818. The late Sir John Owen of Orielton granted a little band of Baptists a choice of different portions of ground on his estate on easy terms, whereon to build, on a ninety-nine years' lease, at the nominal rental of 1s. per year, with power to claim for themselves or successors for nine hundred and ninety-nine years on the same conditions. Taking advantage of these generous terms, the Baptists commenced the building of their chapel at the west end of High Street, between the entrance into Bufferland and the road leading into Pennar. Having secured the land, the people had a mind to work 'and, with the exception of the masonry and the plastering, the structure was built up by the labour of love; for the woodwork was made and the carting done gratuitously, chiefly by Dockyard men before and after Government hours, as, indeed, was the case in the building of all the early Nonconformist places of worship in the town. Such free labour helped greatly in the erection of the chapels. But even then the cost was not inconsiderable. when it is remembered that a farm labourer's wages seldom amounted to more than 5s. a week and food, with possibly a few perquisites, and a Dockyard shipwright's pay was but £1 4s., it is not easy to imagine at what cost of self-denial each little body of worshippers raised for themselves 'a house of prayer'.

Acc to Mrs Peters

The original Bethany Chapel was smaller than. the present one which was erected later. It was surrounded by a stone wall 7 feet high, with heavy wooden gates, which enclosed a burial ground, where many of the earliest inhabitants of the town were buried. The road by the side of the chapel, sometimes now called Bufferland Lane, was at that time private property, and was owned by Mr.Barclay, schoolmaster. It was shut off from the public by gates at both ends.

The small stream which still meanders slowly at the back of the gardens in Hill Street once flowed almost across the site of Bethany Chapel. This stream lies between the Bush and Orielton estates, though since the early days of Bethany much of its waters have been drained, and its course somewhat diverted.

The first pastor of Bethany Chapel, was the late Rev. Gabriel Devereux, who was a saintly character, and whose ministry was much appreciated and long remembered by many. He died January 12, 1833, at the early age of twenty-six years, and was buried in the graveyard of the chapel. The old building became very dilapidated; it was therefore pulled down and a new structure erected in its place. The new building was extended 4 feet further out than the old one. The grave of the Rev.G. Devereux by this extension became actually enclosed within the chapel walls, and because of this a tablet was placed to his memory above the spot where his remains lie buried. Some time after Mr.Gabriel Devereux's death the Rev. John Morgan was pastor of Bethany. He was an able and scholarly man, who for a time also conducted an excellent middle-class school He was followed, in 1845, by the late Rev. H. J.Morgan, who was known as a powerful preacher and a strong theologian. He remained here until 1867, when he removed to Milford. After him came the Rev.William Davies. He was a felicitous preacher, and remained eleven years. It was during his pastorate the present chapel was erected.

When the first Bethany Chapel was built, the placing of the windows was left until the last. This was because at the commencement of its erection the window-tax was in force, but before the building was completed it was repealed. So the fore sightedness of the Baptists in this direction was rewarded.

The foundation stone of the present building was laid by Miss. Rose Reed, daughter of Sir E.J.Reed, K.C.B., M.P in the year 1877, on the morning of the day that the Japanese vessel, the Hei-Yei, was launched at Jacob's Pill. When the chapel was rebuilt, the old lease was yielded to the Ordnance Department, who had taken over the Barrack Hill from the Admiralty in 1830. The Government wanted the approaches kept clear for gun-range, and therefore desired to annex some of the surrounding property, which belonged to Sir John Owen of Orielton. To meet their ends, they offered compensation and lease renewals to all who occupied the land which they required. The old Board of Ordnance stone which marked the boundary of the Government property in the direction of Bethany is still to be seen fixed in the wall which encloses the chapel.

On September 14, 1904, the memorial stones of a new schoolroom were laid, respectively, by Owen Philipps, Esq., Amroth Castle; Mrs. J. D. Jones, Miss (Sketch) Edwards, Mr. William Evans, Mr. John Edwards, and Mr. Joseph Llewellyn. Moreover, the chapel itself is about to be renovated, and to be fitted with increased accommodation, and also with an organ chamber.

The present minister of Bethany Chapel is the Rev.J.D.Jones. He is a native of this county, but went at an early age to Glamorganshire, where after a time he became a candidate for the ministry. He studied for four years at Haverfordwest College. He first settled in Swansea. In 1880 he accepted the unanimous invitation of Bethany Church to become its minister, and there for nearly quarter of a century he has laboured with much acceptance and success.

Rev R C Roberts in his Baptist Historical Sketches

There was no Baptist Chapel nearer than Haverfordwest or Molleston, so originally the Baptist congregation hired a room in Front Street, where prayer meetings and preaching services were conducted until a suitable permanent place could be secured. They, however, experienced some difficulty in obtaining an eligible site, as the gentleman who owned a greater part of the land appeared to have no sympathy with Nonconformists. But this difficulty proved to them a blessing in disguise, for Sir John Owen, of Orielton, whose estate adjoined, granted them a suitable site on an elevated spot, where the present Chapel stands. No time was lost in setting to work, and in 1818, Bethany, the first Nonconformist Chapel in the town and neighbourhood was erected. In that same year the church was constitutionally formed, and also admitted into the Association. On June 13th, 1818, the Chapel was opened for Divine worship, but remained two years without a settled pastor. In 1821, the Church invited Mr. Rees Gibbon, a student from Bristol College to the pastorate. Mr. Gibbon, who was a native of Cwmfelin, Carmarthenshire, was a young man of eminent abilities, and this infant Church anticipated the enjoyment of his services for many years. But his pastorate was brief. He removed to Haverfordwest, then to Carmarthen, where he conducted a grammar school for some time, and at the death of that eminent Welsh author and preacher Rev. Titus Lewis, he succeeded him as the pastor of Tabernaclle Welsh Baptist Church, Carmarthen. Mr. Gibbon, however, died at the early age of 33 years, to the profound regret of his Church and the Denomination in West Wales.

On August 13th, 1827, a young man named Thomas Davies, originally a member of Rev. Rees Gibbon's Church at Carmarthen, was ordained his successor at Bethany. But after only one year's ministry here he accepted the pastoral charge of the newly formed Baptist Church, Commercial Street, Newport, Monmouthshire. His effective earthly ministry ceased in 1830 by the ruthless hand of death.

At the strong recommendation of Rev. Shem Evans, Milford, the Church now invited Mr. Gabriel Dewereux, a native of Wolfsdale, in the county, to the pastorate. He was ordained April 17th, 1829. A young man of great ability, fine diction, good memory, rich in Scripture and Theologic lore. He devoted his fine energies to the promotion of his Master's cause in Pembroke Dock." The Rev. G. Dewereux appears also to have been one of the prime movers in establishing a Baptist Church in the town of Pembroke, But in the mysterious Providence of God, consumption was permitted subtly to lay hold of him, and seize him as its victim, and in January, 1833, at the early age of 26 years, he exchanged his earthly toil for his heavenly rest. His mortal remains were tenderly laid until the resurrection morn in the ground on which the vestibule of Bethany Chapel now stands.

This saintly minister was succeeded in the pastorate by Mr., J. H. Morgan, a student from Bradford College. He was ordained in 1834, and after ten years' labour here re moved to Caerwent, Monmouthshire. The Reverend gentleman is described to have been physically, intellectually and morally a strong man. Towards the close of his ministry a number of members left, and formed the Church known today as Bethel Baptist Church, Bush Street, Pembroke Dock.

The vacancy in the pastorate was not long ere it was again filled. In 1845 the Rev. H. J. Morgan settled here as minister. Some of the older member of our Churches, who often sat under his ministry, have represented him to us as a great pulpit orator, his sermons being the result of profound study and extensive reading, with a powerfully impressive delivery. It was characteristic of him, when he took part in any public meetings he always insisted on speaking before nine o'clock in the evening, as he had strong objection to late services, believing that every one should be in his own home at that hour. In 1867, he resigned his charge after labouring at Bethany twelve years. The Rev. Morgan completed the census returns for this chapel in 1851 and recorded that there were 150 free places and 441 others, the average congregation being 300+108 scholars in the morning 130 scholars in the afternoon and 450 in the evening He also records that there was a great deal of sickness among the congregation at that time.

According to Findlay in 1875 the Chapel was a very plain building showing outward signs of delapidation accomodating 600

Not many months elapsed and the Rev. William Davies removed from Merthyr to become the next pastor of this Church. Like his predecessors he was no novice in his work. His sermons, beautiful in thought, and full of pathos in delivery, were much enjoyed by his people.

It was during his ministry in 1877 that the old Chapel was taken down, and a new one erected, half the cost of the contract being raised when the memorial stones were laid. Mr Davies resigned in 1879, after a ministry of eleven years.

We now come to the ministry of the Rev. J D Jones who, after a pastorate of nearly four years at Carmarthen Road Baptist Church, Swausea, commenced his ministry at Bethany, Pembroke Dock, on the first Sunday in April, 1880 Its due to him that the success with encouraging growth of the Church and the Sunday School-necessitating increasing accommodation, involving an outlay of £3,000

Bethany Baptist chapel, High street, will seat about 600 In 1904 the schoolroom became to small and the chapel needed reseating. A new schoolroom was built capable of accommodating 650. The interior of the Chapel was re- arranged, a gallery was fitted all round, and the old ceiling removed. The Organ and choir were moved to the gallery behing the pulpit. In 1905 the average congregation was 650 with over 300 children attending Sunday school.

Albany Square Congregational Chapel

A few years ago an old sail-loft in the Front Street was taken to carry on mission work in that part of the town, where much good is being done. In connection with the work, Miss. Barret, Mr. John Green, and others, deeply interested themselves, and their efforts are greatly appreciated by the people dwelling in that neighbourhood.

When the Dockyard was transferred from Milford, half a dozen Congregationalists, who had come up from that town, met in a room in the Front Street to hold their services, and once every month went into Pembroke to receive the Sacrament from an ordained minister of that place; but seeing that the Baptists and Wesleyans had built churches of their own, the Congregationalists set their minds on erecting a chapel.

As there was some difficulty in obtaining land for the purpose of building a place of worship, two cottages which belonged to a Mr. Wilkins, of Llanbwm, were secured in North Brewery Street. Here the new owners proceeded to erect a small chapel in the gardens. On Good Friday in the year 1824 this place of worship, which they called the Tabernacle, was opened. The Congregationalists had invited the Rev. Thomas Williams of Neuaddlwyd, to become their first minister. Owing to the debt on the building, the cause at the outset was not very prosperous, and their minister was not even 'passing rich on forty pounds a year', for the stipend that he received was only £39 per annum. The Sunday School was held in the Chapel. Music for the services was provided by Mr Thomas Rowe; violin, Michael Morgan, cello; and George Gibbs, double bass.

Following this minister came the Rev. Mr. Lewis, who was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Williams, of Merrivale, Templeton, known generally as the Rev. Thomas Williams the second. This minister was the father of the late B.T. Williams, Esq., Q.C., County Court Judge, Carmarthen.

In 1851 the capacity was free 36 other 516 with an average congregation of 200 + 60 scholars in the morning and 300 in the evening. Charles Sumpter was the Deacon
This was the first chapel to have an organ, which was installed in the 1860's

After a few years the Tabernacle was enlarged by removing one of the sides of the building and making it wider, so that, literally it was 'as broad as it was long.' Still the congregation became too large for the increased accommodation, and, after much prayerful thought as to the advisability of erecting a more commodious church, they decided to do so.

It needed much deliberation to arrive at this decision, for a debt of £140 still remained on the Tabernacle. However, they purchased a piece of leasehold property from Thomas Meyrick, Esq. for the term of ninety-nine years, for which they paid £561.

This piece of ground consisted of the house once occupied by the late Mr. Propert, J.P., and a portion of adjoining ground. Where the chapel now stands originally grew trees and plants, which formed Mr. Propert's orchard, and which opened out to Albion Square by a wooden door.

The cost of erecting this new place of worship, the Albion Square Congregational Church, was £3,940, which included the fees of the architect and clerk of works and legal and other expense~. The foundation-stone of the present handsome building was laid on June 28, 1865, by Mrs. Jenkins, of London, in the presence of a large assembly, including the Mayors of Haverfordwest, Tenby and Pembroke. The architect, R.C. Sutton, Esq., presented Mrs. Jenkins with a handsome silver trowel with which to lay the stone. In a prepared cavity beneath the foundation-stone was placed a bottle containing a copy of the Patriot and the Christian World, together with a few coins and documents of Church matters.

The chapel was opened for public worship on Friday, June 28, 1867. The late Rev. E. Paxton Hood preached in the morning and evening, and the Rev. D. Anthony, B.A., then of Tenby in the afternoon. Still within the memory of some of the oldest members of the church is the ministry of the late Rev. Eliakim Shadrach, who was the pastor at the time the present chapel was built. He was a saintly man and an excellent preacher, and was much beloved by his people. On the north wall of Albion Square Chapel is fixed a tablet to his memory, on which the following words are inscribed:

In Remembrance of THE REV. E. L. SHADRACH,

For forty years a faithful Minister of Jesus Christ.

Was ordained at Doncaster in the year 1829. After a short period he removed to Aberystwyth, and was co-pastor with his father, the late Rev.A.Shadrach, for six years. In the year 1835 he removed to Dursley, where he laboured with great acceptance for twenty-two years. In the year 1857 he commenced his ministry at the Tabernacle, Pembroke Dock, where he successfully discharged the duties of the pastorate twelve years. During his ministry this Chapel was erected, in which he preached for nearly two years. After a short illness he fell asleep in Jesus, April 8th, 1860 aged 64 years. To perpetuate his memory the church and congregation have erected this Tablet.

Following Mr Shadrach came the late Rev.Dr Davies and the Rev J R Webster.

The present pastor of Albion Square Church is the Rev. J E Griffiths who was born at Neath. In 1867 Mr.Griffiths entered Bala know Bala Bangor- College, where he had a very successful course and obtained a first class diploma. In 1870 he entered his first pastorate, at Vochriw near Merthyr. In 1877 he removed to Lion Street Congregational Church, Blaenavon, where remained until August, 1886, when he commenced his present ministry at Albion Square Chapel, and since that time has ably, faithfully, and consistently preached the Gospel in that place. During his pastorate he has had the satisfaction of seeing the extinction of the chapel building debt. Special services were held on the occasion, from Sunday, June 18, to Wednesday, June 21, 1899. On that day a big social tea took place, which was followed in the evening by a meeting at which Mr.Isaac Samuel, who was at that time treasurer of the church, announced that the whole of the debt had been completely cleared off. This debt, since the year 1865, had by accumulation of interest and incidental expenses increased to the sum of £6,389.13s.

In 1875 it was described as one of the most handsome and commodious edifices in the town. An exceedingly fine window immediately above the entrance attracts universal notice and admiration. The internal fittings are of the most elaborate kind. The roof is very lofty, and supported by fine wrought iron pillars running above the galleries, which are large and capacious. It will accommodate nearly 1500 persons and possesses a rich toned organ. Among those who preached at this chapel was General W Boothe of the Salvation Army.

During the latter part of 1897, Albion Square Church was closed for renovation, and at the same time a splendid new organ, made by Messrs. P.Conacher and Co., of Huddersfield, was erected in the north end of the building; the old one had previously stood near the south wall. A platform was also made below the pulpit for the choir. The cost of the new organ and renovation combined was £700; the organ alone cost £432. The talented organist is Mr.William G.Phelps, of Laws Street North.

The church has sittings for 1,350 people, but has held upon special occasions 1,500. The improvements were completed, and it was re-opened for Divine worship, on February 9, 1898.

Amongst the many zealous workers in Albion Square Chapel, Special reference must be made to the late Mr.James Hancock, Mr.Richard Allen, and Mr.Joseph Lewis, who were truly pillars of the church; also to the late Mr.John James, who passed away at the advanced age of eighty-seven. He was foremost in every good movement connected with the cause, and was the senior deacon for many years. Mr.I.Samuel and Mr.H.Pinch, who are still living, have also done much good work in connection with the church.

The old Chapel was for a period used as a public hall, and later as a Salvation Army Barracks. It was torn down in 1904 to make way for housing, the fate which met its successor in the 1990's

Records available include births and baptisms 1825-37 PRO London (The original Tabernacle in Pembroke was formed in 1691 as a branch of Albany St Thomas Green Haverfordwest and some records go back to that date)

Meyrick St Congregationalists

In 1843 a dissension arose amongst the Congregationalists worshipping at the Tabernacle, and some of the members decided to separate themselves from the mother church. They obtained a piece of land in Meyrick Street South whereon to build another chapel.

The foundation-stone was laid on February 12, 1851, by W.F. Moart, Esq., London, and the church was opened on Wednesday, December 3, 1852, when special services were held. The Rev.

J.D.Davies, of Albany Chapel, London, preached in the morning, and the Rev.D.Rees, of Llanelly, in the evening of the day. The services were continued on the following Sunday, December 7, when the Rev.J.D.Davies again preached.

The chapel was renovated in November, 1889. The first minister of Upper Meyrick Street Chapel was the late Rev. Josephus Williams, who prior to his pastorate in this place of worship had been minister of the old Tabernacle, Albion Square. Mr. Williams was an able minister and a man very remarkable for the extent of his general information. He could speak at length on any subject. He was followed by the Rev.Mr.Ramsay, who was an eloquent speaker, but he remained only about two years. After him came the Rev.Charles Goward, who was a sound preacher, a good man, and thoroughly devoted to his work.

The present pastor is the Rev.W.A.Edwards, who was born at . Aberdare, Glamorganshire. He studied at Brecon College. He has been minister of Meyrick Street Church for over thirty years successively, and, being so long associated with the people, has made for himself many friends. Mr.Edwards is a man of wide reading, and is well versed in geology and astronomy.

St Mary's RC Church

Roman Catholic St Mary's Church Meyrick St

It was started in 1846 due to the work of Rev. Father Lewis who was from Williamston. Previously there had been since 1840 a large number of Irish immigrants settling in Pembroke Dock who had come over with the start of Irish Mail Boats to Hobbs Point. He was first Roman Catholic priest who lived in the town and it was his custom to preach on Sunday afternoons in the open air at the top of Pembroke Street. Mainly by his efforts St.Mary's Church was erected in North Meyrick Street during the years 1845 and 1847. A private house had been in King St had been rented to meet and hold services in but the need for a church was felt greatly. A piece of land was leased from the Bush Estate in 1846 and work started. It was dedicated August 29th 1847 capacity 150 +30 standing ,average attendance 110 in the morning and 50 in the afternoon according to the priest Rev. Maybury The original church was much smaller than the present building and was enlarged and renovated in 1862 by the Rev. Father Oliver Murphy. The original Church only extended as far as the present altar rails. At the same time the altar was replaced with a stone one and the Sacristy was built. A large mission room attached to the church on the north side was built in the early 1900's.

The church was dedicated on Thursday, August 29, 1847, and on the occasion the Rev.Father PMcDonnel gave a special address in the evening to a crowded congregation. The church, which stands in its own grounds was enlarged and renovated by the untiring zeal of the Rev.Father Oliver Murphy, who succeeded the Rev.Father Lewis.

On the walls of St.Mary's Church hangs a memorial tablet to a lady who was buried within the building. The tablet bears the following inscription:

Sacred to the Memory of ANN MARTHA DARBY ,

The beloved wife of ABR.AHAN DARBY RN .

She was born May 16th, 1814 and died March 2nd, 1849, and was ill four years.

Her body lies beneath.

The funeral of this lady was the first that took place in the town according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church. It was on March 9, 1849. The procession solemnly march ed through the streets of the town from the house, which is said to have been in Llanion Terrace, to the church, and was accompanied by the two priests (the Rev.Father Lewis, and the Rev.Thomas Sick, from St.Bernard's Monastery) and two acolytes. The body, covered by a pall, was borne by six naval officers, wearing mourning scarves and hat-bands, assisted by the deceased lady's three medical attendants, who also wore deepest mourning. Large numbers of people followed the procession with marked respect. The body was brought into the chapel, and there laid to rest. An extempore address, given by the Rev.Thomas Sick, was intently listened to, and made a deep impression on his congregation. The building was crowded almost to suffocation.

The Rev.Father Murphy came as a young and genial priest to Pembroke Dock from Kilkenny in the year 1850, and after forty-four years of residence in the town he passed into rest, March 14, 1894, having borne an unblemished character, and won the good feelings, not only of his own flock, but of the whole of the townspeople. In what esteem he was held was shown on the day of his funeral. His mortal remains, by special permission granted by the Home Secretary, were interred in the adjoining church grounds: Amidst a huge concourse of people, his body was borne to its last resting-place by the sailors of H.M.S.Rupert, port guardship at that time in Milford Haven. The band of the Welsh regiment played the Dead March in Saul. So large was the crowd on the occasion of this good man's funeral that at least two people died from the results of the crush. On the headstone which marks the grave of the Rev.Father Murphy, are these words:

In Affectionate Remembrance of The REV. FATHER OLIVER MURPHY

Born at Kilkenny, 17th March,1825. Ordained priest at Kilkenny, May, 1850.

Pastor at St.Mary's Catholic Church, Pembroke Dock from 1850 until his death, 14th March,1894.

R.I.P. De Profundis. 'Eternal rest give unto him, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon him'.

1900 The officiating and resident priest of St.Mary's Roman Catholic Church is the Very Rev.DeanV.J.Kelly. He came to Pembroke Dock February, 1900. The Dean is a cultured writer and scholar. He studied at Ushaw College, Durham, and at the English College, Rome.

1875 It was described in 1875 by Findley as a chapel and a small stone edifice which could accommodate between 200 and 300.

1884 Kelly's Directory 1884The Catholic church, Meyrick street, dedicated to St Mary, is a commodious building of stone, erected in 1846, by the late Rev. Father Lewis; and in 1862; the Rev Oliver Murphy, the present priest, enlarged the church, and thoroughly renovated it, at a cost of over £300, and it will now seat about 350.

It was started in 1846 due to the work of Rev. Father Lewis who was from Williamston. Previously there had been since 1840 a large number of Irish immigrants settling in Pembroke Dock who had come over with the start of Irish Mail Boats to Hobbs Point. A private house had been in King St had been rented to meet and hold services in but the need for a church was felt greatly. A piece of land was leased from the Bush Estate in 1846 and work started. It was dedicated August 29th 1847 capacity 150 +30 standing ,average attendance 110 in the morning and 50 in the afternoon according to the priest Rev. Maybury The original church was much smaller than the present building and was enlarged and renovated in 1862 by the Rev. Father Oliver Murphy. The original Church only extended as far as the present altar rails. At the same time the altar was replaced with a stone one and the Sacristy was built. A large mission room attached to the church on the north side was built in the early 1900's.

The Dockyard Chapel

The first Services were held on the frigate Lapwing which had been run aground and was used as offices and storerooms. Up to about 1820 these were conducted by the Vicar of Pembroke. After this ship was broken up in 1828 the Services were held in a wooden building but the increase in the numbers made it imperative that a larger building be constructed. The site chosen was in the north east corner of the Yard and work started in 1831. Consideration was given to future installation of heating by banking up the site before constructing the building. The design was very plain with very large windows. The three west doors are approached by two flights of steps. The interior had a gallery on each side and at the west end, the main floor had a nave, two side aisles, chancel with choir stalls and a sanctuary in a recess. It was capable of seating 1100. Most of the pews were box pews with doors. The reading desk was a two decker, the Chaplain reading the prayers from the upper box and the clerk leading the responses from the lower. The pulpit was very high, reached by a winding staircase and when in it the preacher was at the same height as the gallery. Up till 1857 it was the custom for the Chaplain to read the prayers in a white surplice and during the singing of the psalm before the sermon change into a black cassock to preach. Right from the very beginning the Chapel was renowned for its choir, and sang at the visit of the Duke of Clarence in 1827. The choir occupied the west end gallery and in 1836 an organ was installed in this gallery. A large painting representing a dove descending from the clouds towards a chalice obscured the east window. In later years a stain glass window replaced this painting.

It was expected that the marines and Dockyard Policemen not on duty marched to the chapel every Sunday morning as well as the crews the "Royal Sovereign" and the Irish Mail steamers in harbour. All Dockyard apprentices were expected to attend and after the opening of the National School the Master, Mistress, and pupil teachers. In the early days of the Sunday school held in the national school all the pupils after attending Sunday school were marched down to the chapel for the morning service.

In 1844 Mr William Edye Master shipwright drew up plans for landscaping the grounds around the Chapel with trees and shrubs.

A Coat of Arms belonging to the yacht Royal Sovereign was affixed to the west gallery in 1850 when that yacht formerly the Royal Yacht of William IV was broken up. The bell was taken from the captured Spanish cruiser El Phoenix (renamed Gibraltar) It appears that the building was never actually consecrated during the time it was used by the Admiralty but it is said this omission was rectified in 1927 but no trace can be found

According to the census of Religious Buildings in 1851 the Dockyard Chapel could accommodate 800. This census also lists it as not being consecrated or licensed with an average attendance of 250 in the morning and 100 in the afternoon. The Chaplain of Her Majesty's Dockyard was J H Mallet

.A Tablet in memory of Edward Laws who died in 1854 was placed on the south wall. This was destroyed in the 1970's

Gas lighting was installed in 1874 and the afternoon services replaced by evening services.

A small font was installed at the entrance to the south aisle in 1875

A Description of 1875

A spacious stone building. It is entered by 3 doors at the Western end which are approached by flights of stone steps. Above the centre entrance is a small square set tower having a hemispherical summit surmounted by a cross within is one small bell. The church consists of a nave, a singularly small chancel, side aisles and galleries. In the west gallery there is a fine organ in front of which the members of the choir sit. The interior has an exceedingly neat and pleasing appearance, the roof is lofty and having a large flat ceiling unsupported by pillars, it is well worthy of attention. Above the communion table, and covering the east window is a handsome painted screen, its subject intended to be emblematical of Christianity. There is also a handsome pulpit reached by a winding staircase and balustrade. There is one tablet affixed to the south wall.

.Kelly's Directory 1884

The Dockyard church is a plain building, erected inside the walls of the Royal dockyard, and consisting of a small chancel, nave, aisles, with galleries, the west gallery containing a fine organ : above the centre entrance is a small square tower, surmounted by a cross : the church was built for the officers and workmen of the dockyard, for whom seats were' appropriated in the area : the north and south galleries are set apart for the sailors and soldiers of the garrison , the public are permitted to attend any of the services , there are seats for about 1100 persons. The Rev. Fredrick William Nickoll M.A. is the chaplain, appointed in 1881

From 1885 onwards various alterations to the internal arrangements took place and included reducing the height of the pulpit, doing away with the clerk leading the responses, panels on which were painted the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer were removed. The Choir and organ moved to the main body of the church, galleries shortened and pews removed and replaced.

While Captain Kelly was Superintendent of the Yard the Training Ship "Atlanta" which had originally been built in Pembroke Dockyard was lost at sea with a tremendous loss of life and a collection was organised for a memorial window to those lost. £75 was raised by Mrs Kelly in the Yard and a stain glass window was installed at the east end of the Chapel depicting Christ in the ship rebuking the wind and saying "Peace be still" at the base was the dedication "To the Officers and ship's Company H.M.S. "Atalanta" Perished A.D., 1879 in 1887.

NB This window was removed at the closing of the Dockyard and all trace lost.

Dockyard Chapel

As a Government building it neither secures nor claims episcopal oversight and consequently has never been consecrated. Baptisms celebrated there, were registered in the Parish Church Register.

Electric light was introduced in 1905 and all gas fittings removed.

Frank Owen remembered the Chapel

Situated at the east end of the Royal Dockyard , standing in its own grounds and approached from the corner of Commercial Row stood the Royal Dockyard Church. It could be easily identified from sea or land by the domed tower at its west end. The Church stood at the end of the Senior Officers Houses and was approached by a road flanked by high trees. This road terminated in a wide forecourt presenting a tall building with wide steps which led to the bell Tower and the entrance. here , right up to the closure of the Dockyard Mr. Lewis would welcome you with dignity and present you with your hymn book and psalter --- this between his duties as verger and Bell Ringer. The church possessed only one bell, as apposed to St John's which had eight. The building was always referred to as a church but in some quarters is only recognized as a chapel and not consecrated.

The last resident Royal Naval Chaplain was the Rev. R D Gilbertson MA whose father was well known in Pembroke as a solicitor and clerk to the Castlemartin Division which covered an area from Angle to Penally. Understandably, most of those who worshiped at the Church were associated with the Dockyard and on Sunday mornings, the front rows were occupied by uniformed officers of the Royal Navy, the Resident Officers and their families. The remainder of the congregation consisted of the lower ranks and various officials of the civilian branches seated strictly according to rank. This may sound rather snooty but the Dockyard boasted some of the finest craftsmen in the country and there was enormous pride attached to a man's craft or trade.

When all were assembled there would be heard the stirring sound of the band of the resident battalion which was stationed at Llanion Barracks. Led by the Drum Major and to the tune of its Regimental march the detachment detailed for Church parade would march with pride along the Avenue then enter the Church and occupy the pews at either side, towards the rear to allow for reassembly after the service. The band would be in the balcony and play for the service, accompanied by the civilian organist and by instrumentalists who were associated with the choir. The choir was made up of many of the most talented vocalists and musicians in the area under their Choir Master, Mr. Thomas Handcock of Cheriton House, Water st. Mr. Hancock was an imposing gentleman of great personality and musical genius, Stocky with wild hair and goatee beard, he controlled his choir with a baton of iron. Known as "T G" he inspected applicants for the choir, tested them and then gave them a trial run. Boys on acceptance were paid 2s and 6d per quarter - It worked out that if a boy gave 1d per service for the collection, he just about broke even at the end of the quarter but if he spent his money on Mrs Rogers home made toffee on the way to Church then he had to be well practised in the art of shaking the collection bag to give the impression that he had dropped in a few coins.

Although Mr. Hancock was Organist and Choirmaster, other talented musicians, Mr. Reginald Calver, Mr. Frank James and Miss Ivy Lewis -- all first class organists, assisted him. There were also a number of ladies choristers.

At the closing of the Dockyard and the Church all these fine trained choristers were in great demand and invited to join the choirs of other churches and other denominations carrying on the traditions which they had learned.

Later the building became the Garrison Theatre and even later a Motor Museum. Now part of the Enterprise Zone and plans are being submitted to turn it into a warehouse.

NB It was always said that if you wanted promotion in the Yard you had to regularly attend the Church (or Chapel) that your supervisor attended.

Trinity Wesley Chapel, Pembroke Ferry

In the 1870's some of the Wesleyans again commenced regular services, and formed a society at Pembroke Ferry

Mr. W. Lawrence, of Queen Street East, had the interest of the work at this place greatly at heart, and by his unwearied efforts the present little place of worship, Trinity Chapel, was built at a cost, exclusive of the school-room, of £170.

The corner-stones of this chapel were laid on November 10, 1879, by the late Mrs. Evans, of Trinity Wharf, Mrs. W. Lawrence, Miss. Trayler, and Miss Green, each lady giving a donation of £5.

The late Mr.Ladd was the architect, and the late Mr.Thomas Thomas, of Queen Street East, was the builder.

The first service was held in the chapel on August 12, 1880. The sermon was preached on the occasion by the Rev.Josiah Cox, who was at that time superintendent of Tenby Circuit.

The late Mr.Lawrence, superintended the good work carried on at Trinity Chapel for many years, and gained for himself the title of 'the Bishop of tne Ferry,' by which name he is still affectionally remembered by very many.

He was succeeded by Mr.Miller, who during his time did much good work then Mr.Roblin.

At the March Quarterly meeting of the Pembroke Wesleyan Circuit-. in 1878 four men, W. Lawrence, G.T. Davies, W.G. Copplestone -and W Dawkins, were instructed "to select a site and make the necessary- preliminary enquiries as to .ground: rent; with .a view to building. a chapel .at Pembroke Ferry, the present place of worship being . small and inconvenient" . They were to report back but no further action was taken until 1879 . In 1878 the membership was recorded at 12.

A cottage had been opened for the purposes of public services and Sunday School previously but it was damp and considered unsuitable. The congregation became affiliated to the Wesleyan Methodist Society of Pembroke Dock and a fund was started to raise money to build a chapel. The building cost £176. The plans were prepared by Mr. Ladd the cost was cut to the bare minimum even to the extent that no money was to be spent on flooring etc. in the lower part of the building. The plans had to be altered by reducing the length to avoid interference with other buildings adjacent. Mr. W John agreed to do all woodwork.

The building was registered for public worship on 20th July 1880 and the official opening was on Wednesday 4th August 1880 when Rev. J Cox of Tenby preached

In November 1880 work was started on completing the lower room as a schoolroom.

In 1920 the freehold was purchased for £5 plus £2 . 10. 0d solicitors and auctioneers fee.

The first woman trustee was Constance Hughes in 1940

Electricity was installed in 1969, in 1989 the Chapel was re-roofed and the next year the interior was renovated including two new windows being installed.

Gershom Calvinistic Methodist

In 1837 some of the members and adherents of the West Gate Church, Pembroke, who resided at Pembroke Dock began to hold services in a private house belonging to one of their number in Market Street, and afterwards in a large room in Melville Street. These services were conducted alternately by the Rev.John Davies, of Mead Lodge, and the Rev.William Powell, of Pembroke. Steps, however, were taken to build a chapel, and a site was obtained in Queen Street East. The responsibility of this undertaking fell chiefly on the Rev.John Davies, who was appointed in 1835 home missionary for Pembroke and its neighbourhood by the South Wales Association of the Calvinistic Methodist.

This chapel, which is known as Gershom, was opened on Christmas day, 1838. It was a quaint little building, standing a short distance off from the street, with, to the modern eye, a somewhat strange arrangement of pews. In 1844 Mr.Davies became its recognised and settled minister. He remained at Pembroke Dock until 1852 and was most faithful in his labours. After his removal, he served various churches, and died at Newport, Monmouthshire, 1870.

Early in 1853 the Rev. Lewis Evans became pastor of the church, and faithfully fulfilled this duty for nearly eleven years. He died October, 1863. The congregation, who mourned the loss of a Christian minister, placed a tablet to his memory on the south wall of St.Andrew's Chapel, which bears the following inscription: who presided over this Church during a period of eleven years and entered into his rest October 16th, 1863 aged 41 years.

In Memory o f

This Tablet is erected by the church and congregation aided by his brother ministers, as a token of the love and esteem which they cherish for him. In life he was faithful, diligent, and blameless, always abounding in the work of the Lord; and in death he was more than conqueror, through Him that loved him and gave Himself for him: changing the cross for the crown, and the sword for the palm of victory.

When St. Andrew's chapel was built, this memorial was removed from the old chapel, and placed on the south end wall of the new place of worship.

The Rev. William Evans, M.A. commenced his labours on January 1, 1865, having previously served at St. John's Church, Runcorn, for nearly two years and a half.

The Rev. William Evans is a native of Glamorganshire, and is the grandson of the late venerable William Evans, of Tonyrefail, a name that is known and honoured throughout Wales. This much revered and good man died in 1891 at the great age of ninety six. His grandson was educated for the ministry at Swansea, the University of Glasgow, and Cheshunt College. He matriculated in London in 1855, obtained one of Dr. Williams' scholarships in 1857, graduated B.A. in 1860, and M.A. in 1861.

The original meetings were held in the school room at Mr Allan's house three nights a week and also a Sunday school. Sunday Services were then held in a room of Mr George Morgan's house in Market St. In 1837 a long room was taken by Rev John Davies in the Melville Hotel in Melville St. but the congregations had increased to such an extent that it was decided to build a Chapel. situated in Queen Street East. Members of the congregation supplied much of the labour and it was opened on Christmas day 1838. Like many of the other early chapels it had a fine orchestra which included violins, double bass, flutes and clarionets. There was also a fine choir. Members from this chapel also carried out missionary work and help found the Zion Chapel in Neyland.

This chapel was then found to be too small and work started to build a new Chapel St Andrew's

St Andrew's

Calvanistic Methodist -- now United Reform

Andrews Calvinistic Methodist

Soon after Mr.Evans' settlement it was decided to erect a larger place of worship. Accordingly, St.Andrew's Chapel was built. The foundation-stone of this beautiful church, which is built in the Italian style, was laid in August, 1865, by Mrs. Ezra Roberts, wife of one of the firm of Davies and Roberts, who constructed the Pembroke and Tenby Railway. The chapel was opened in November, 1866. Mr.Evans continued his ministry at St.Andrew's until 1875; when he removed to Aberystwyth, where he remained six years as pastor of the English Calvinistic Church. During his absence the Rev.John H.Griffiths, M.A., officiated as minister for the greater part of the time. He is now in the United States of America.

The Rev.W.Evans, M.A., returned to his former sphere at Pembroke

Dock in April, 1881, and continued to faithfully serve St Andrew's Church as minister until he resigned the pastorate, preaching his farewell sermon on the evening of Christmas Day, 1904.

Mr.Evans has, however, signified his intention of still identifying himself closely with the work, particularly in connection with the small Calvinistic Chapel at Llanreath.

Evans is widely and worthily known as a scholar, and has written two or three books. He has occupied most of the places of honour in his church, and was appointed Moderator in 1897.

At the south end of St.Andrew's Chapel is a very beautiful stained-glass window representing the Prodigal Son meeting his Father. This window was given in 1882 by the late Captain Cocks, who attended this place of worship. In addition to the tablet raised in remembrance of the Rev. Lewis Evans, there is a brass ' memorial tablet placed on the walls to the late Mr.James Owen.

On it these words are engraved:

In Memcry of

JAMES OWEN, R.C.N.C,

A Member and Office-bearer of this Church, who died 20th June, 1902, aged 55 years.

Erected by the Officers of the Chief Constructor's Department, H.M.Dockyard, as a mark of respect and esteem.

During the latter part of the past year another tablet has been placed in this chapel:

In Loving memory of JAMES DAVIES ,

For many years a Member and Deacon of this Church, and a faithful Sunday school Superintendent, Who died 28th September, 1900 aged 61.

This Tablet is erected by his two daughters.

The organ was built in 1896. The organist is Miiss.Gertrude Webb, of Bush Street, who is a young lady of much musical ability.

Originally a chapel was built in 1837 called Gershom. This was then found to be too small and then in 1866 a new chapel was built on the present site. The foundation stone was laid by Mrs Roberts wife of Ezra Roberts a Railway Contractor whose firm constructed the Railway line from Whitland to Pembroke Dock, and after the service gold and silver offerings were laid on the foundation stone by those present. Mr Roberts gave laid what was described as a very large cheque. The architect was Mr K Ladd and the contractor Mr Joseph Tregenna. It was constructed to seat 800 people but unfortunately there was a design fault in the roof , the span being too great for the weight on it and the side walls started to spread outwards while the roof subsided. The original cost had been £3000 but the additional remedial work undertaken by Mr K McAlpin involved the rebuilding of a large portion of the outer walls with a new roof of a different design at a cost of £800. At the same time he redesigned a large part of the interior. While this work was being undertaken the services were held in the Schoolroom underneath.

In 1875 it is described as of ornamental design and is a handsome edifice.

Captain James Cocks, a member of the congregation, offered in 1882, to have erected a stain glass window depicting the Prodigal Son. This offer was accepted and Mr K McAlpin designed the window and directed the making and installation at a cost of £80.

.Kelly's Directory 1884

St. Andrew's Calvinistic Methodist chapel, Bush street, is in the Italian style, and was erected in 1866; it is capable of seating 800 ~ and has a beautiful stained window behind the pulpit. The interior was again renovated in 1896. Among the work undertaken was the installation of a new organ, ironwork tracery in the galleries, the renovation of the schoolroom and the installation of heating.

Primitive Methodists Gershom Chapel

When the Calvinistic Methodists vacated Gershom Chapel in September 1866, it was taken over after a time by the Primitive Methodists, who hitherto had worshipped in a little chapel at the top of South Park Street, which was approached by a flight of steps. This chapel was afterwards sold, and turned into a public-house known as Temple Bar. Prior to this, a few of these Methodists met for worship, in Park Street North, two cottages being converted into one room for the purpose. The minister at that time was the Rev. Mr. Maynard, and it was through his influence that the early chapel at the top of Park Street was built. Acc/to Kelly's Directory 1884

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in Queen street which, seats 500.

Llanreath Calvinistic Methodist Chapel

A Sunday school was formed before 1885 under the pastorate of Mr Evans and a chapel built about that time it, was rebuilt in 1910.

Extra land adjacent to the chapel was purchased for the sum of £20 from the Admiralty 27th September 1911 by the congregation for the building of a schoolroom Rev W Evans 97 Laws St was the minister

According to the Pembroke Dock and Pembroke Gazette Friday 21 September 1917.

At the anniversary Service the previous Sunday the preacher in the morning was the Rev E H Merchant of Tenby and in the afternoon Rev J T Davies of Gilgal The singing was hearty. Mr Richard John acted as usual as precentor and Miss Mary John was the organist.

Acc to Mrs Peters

In 1883 a branch Sunday-school was opened at Llanreath, in the house of Mr. Peter L. Jones, now of Belmont House. In 1885 a chapel was opened for Divine worship, when the Rev. D. Saunders, D.D., preached, who had also preached at the opening of St. Andrew's Chapel. Since then the Llanreath chapel has been enlarged, and there is now a prosperous church, with a flourishing Sunday-school, there, and the good work carried on is universally admitted to be of great blessing to the growing village on the hill.

The Chapel has now been converted into a house.

Bethel Baptist Church

Bethel

In the early forties, owing to a misunderstanding between the late Rev. John Morgan and his people, a great many of the members of the church and congregation left during his pastorate. There being no other Baptist chapel in the place, they held their meetings, at first in the malt-house, now the Criterion, at the corner of Llanion Terrace, and afterwards in a billiard room on the premises of :Mr.William Robertson, timber-merchant and shipbuilders, in the lower part of North Meyrick Street, near the site of the sawmills so long belonging to the firm of :McMaster and Co. The room remains to this day, but is now converted into business premises.

This part of the town at that time was commonly known as The Quarry. A church was formed, and deacons were elected, whose names were Messrs. W.John senior, Samuel Allen, George H.Davies, Thomas Brown, John Peters, and W.John junior. In 1844 the church was admitted into the Baptist Association of the county. The late Rev.John Rees, of Upton, and the Rev W.H.Thomas of Water Holmes, took great interest in the young cause, and frequently preached in the room at The Quarry . Bethel Chapel was built in 1845. The first minister was the Rev.D.L.Pughe, who is reputed to have been an able preacher. He remained about four years, and removed to Builth, Breconshire. He was succeeded by the Rev.Evan Davies, whose stay was only two years ; he was followed by the Rev. T. Thomas , whose brief pastorate terminated in 1854. In October, 1855, the Rev.W.F.Bliss entered upon his pastoral charge of Bethel. He laboured with much acceptance in the church for ten years. Mr. Bliss was a very cultured man. He kept a middle-class school for boys in the town which proved to be of great service. From 1865 to 1868 the Rev.J.D.Williams was minister. He was followed by the Rev.E.Roberts, who came in 1869 and removed in 1873.

There was an interval of three years before the calling of another minister, and during that period the chapel was rebuilt.

During the erection of the new building, before the old ceiling could be removed, some of the supports gave way, and it fell in. Fortunately, the accident occurred in the dinner-hour, when there were but few workmen on the spot, or the consequences must have been very serious indeed; as it was, among a few who were present, two or three men were severely injured.

The beauty of the new chapel certainly far exceeds that of the former structure.

The present minister of Bethel is the Rev.R.C.Roberts, who was educated in Llangollen College. He came here in 1876 and has perseveringly carried on his duties since then without a break. The organist of Bethel Chapel is Mr.John Hancock, of Queen Street West, who is well known as a musician of great ability .

1851 According to the Census of Religious Buildings it had an average congregation of 250 + 70 scholars in the morning 81 scholars in the afternoon and an evening congregation of 400
A description in 1875 after the rebuilding in 1874 on the same site says, "It is a very handsome stone building accommodating about 800 persons

BETHEL

In the year 1843, a number of members withdrew from Bethany Baptist Church, Pembroke Dock, The cause is not known but it appeared that they had become dissatisfied with the Minister and failing to bring about a better understanding, they split away. The numbers given were 104 members which was actually the majority of the Bethany congregation. At first they met in a room in North Meyrick Street, on the west side which they hired. It was behind the Edinburgh Hotel and known as Robinson's Billiard Room. There they assembled together for Divine worship. They presented a letter to the County Association held at Bethany on 4th June 1844 which said that "Formerly we constituted a part of the Church meeting for Divine worship at Bethany in the town, of which Church many of us are the original members, and with which we have continued in fellowship since its formation until a few months ago, when we felt that our further communion with it under certain circumstances must cease.

Immediately after our withdrawalment we rented a house for Divine worship, where we still meet in union and harmony.

At a quarterly meeting held at Ffynon on 6th November 1843, our case was submitted to the consideration of the ministers present, when our separation was allowed and sanctioned, since which time we have been regularly and acceptably supplied with preachers, and it is with devout and adoring gratitude, we record that the Lord has been graciously pleased to own the services of his servants, in the conversion of sinners, the decision of the halting, and the edification of our hearts. As to the present prospects, they are cheering. Our congregation exceeds what our place of worship will comfortably contain. We have among us a few enquirers. We have in contemplation the erection of a more commodious place of worship, for which we are making provision

They became constituted into a separate church under the temporary pastorate of the Rev. John Rees, of Upton who took a deep interest in this cause preaching frequently and administering the Christian ordinances when required, and at the Annual Assembly of the Churches of the county held at Bethany, June 1844, this Church was cordially received into the Association. The candidates for membership were baptised in the Haven off Front St. The first being Mr Thomas Brown and his wife of Laws St and Mrs Phoebe Peters of Queen St.

In 1844 they leased a plot of land from the Bush Estate at the junction of Bush St and Meyrick St south, the site were the present Chapel stands. The new Chapel was built described as very comfortable and commodious able to seat 400 to 450 people. The exterior was plain with very large windows; semi circular at the top and the front had a moulded design. The interior had a plain flat ceiling, and on the floor were fitted rising seats on either side and at the east end, facing two of seats fitted on the flat in the centre. The pulpit platform was at the west end, and the baptistry under the pulpit pew. There was no gallery. A small schoolroom was built against the west end of the chapel. The Chapel was opened for public worship in June 1845. The choir occupied the centre pews of the rising portion at the east end assisted by various instrumentalists. In 1855 the chapel was registered for marriages, the first being that of Mr S W Willing to Miss Amelia Allen. A harmonium was installed in 1857 played by Mr W Hancock member of a very musical family. His three sons also played the harmonium and organ in various Chapels and his nephew was the organist at the Dockyard Chapel.

Some members of this Chapel held cottage meetings at Lower Pennar. The numbers attending these meeting increased and it was decided to convert an old farm cowshed into a chapel. Mr David Jones and others loaned the money and Services and a Sunday School were started led by Mr Bliss. Those helping at Pennar often had to trudge through ankle deep mud to get to Lower Pennar as at that time there was no proper road only a track.

The congregation had increased at Bethel to such an extent that consideration was given in 1867 to enlarging the building or rebuilding. Unfortunately as the fundraising started there was falling off of shipbuilding leading to massive job losses in the Yard. At the time the feeling was that the Yard would be closed. Proposed building plans were shelved until November 1872 when there was a terrible storm which blew off most of the Chapel roof. The congregation had to hire the Temperance Hall for Sunday services and Sunday School for the next two years while weekday meetings were held in the Chapel in Upper Meyrick St the congregation of which had kindly offered assistance. In 1873 an extension on the lease was obtained for a further 99 years and the congregation returned to the old Chapel for one last Service on May 31st 1873. The next week it was demolished and a new Chapel designed by Mr Hans Price and constructed by Mr Isaac Hughes (who also built Pennar school) was accepted. The old building was in such a dangerous state that while demolishing it two labourers were seriously injured by part of the wall falling in on them. The congregation raised enough funds to give the men 8s per week for several months and when they were fit the rest of the money was divided between them. Mr W Davies who placed a cheque for £25 towards the building fund on it laid the Foundation stone. The building work proceeded but very slowly, then in April 1874 the builder died. The roof timbers had not been completed and no progress was made till the Autumn. Messrs Jones and John agreed to complete the contract on a additional payment over the contract price with Mr Hughes of £100

The walls of the Chapel are of dressed limestone with bathstone facings it has been described as a squat building. The interior contains pitch pine pews on the ground floor with galleries on either side and the west end on which there is the organ and the choir places. . The platform pulpit is at the west end with the baptistry below the pulpit seat. The large two story schoolroom is attached to the west end and the upper floor has large doorways leading into the west gallery which can be opened so as to increase the capacity of the Chapel.

The chapel had no boundary wall but Messrs Jones and John were employed to erect a wall, railings and gates at a cost of £200.

A pipe organ was installed in September 1883 on the gallery at the east end. The actual work of fitting and fixing was done free of charge. Mr Millard a Constructor in the Dockyard was responsible for organising this. The schoolroom and the chapel were completely renovated in 1901 and a new classroom built.

The Baptist chapel, South Meyrick street, is a stone building, erected in 1874, having seats for about 800 persons : a very fine organ has been add

Meyrick St Chapel (Trinity)

This Congregational Chapel was formed in 1849 after a disagreement at Tabernacle Albion Square. The foundation Stone was laid by W F Mount of London who gave £105 towards the building costs. Mr John Road, a draughtsman in the Dockyard, designed it. Dockyard tradesmen carried out the majority of the woodwork voluntarily. The Chapel was opened on 3rd December 1851 Rev J Davies Albany Chapel London preached and the harmonium was played by Mr Thomas Eastlake while Mr James Richards was choirmaster. Records show that it had 100 members in 1864. Restoration work was carried out in 1871. It was described very briefly in 1875 as "Chapel is a plain stone building erected in the year 1851 It accommodates about 700 persons and possesses an organ.

Acc/to. Kelly's Directory 1884

The Congregational chapel South Meyrick street, is a plain stone building for about 700 persons, and was built in 1851

The Chapel was altered and renovated in 1899. New pitch pine pews were installed, a porch on the west side as well as a new rostrum.

Zion

A small society of Primitive Methodists originally meet in members houses around the 1840's. They built a small chapel at the top of Park St in 1849 capable of holding about 50 people. It was built in a recess cut in the bank and the entrance was on the west side. The cause moved to an Calvinistic Methodist Chapel -- Gershom when that congregation built St Andrews 1867-8. The old chapel was sold to a Mr Samuel Sloggett who rebuilt it, raising it up to two stories, and opened it as the "Temple Bar" Hotel.

It had 40 members in 1850 although in the census of 1851 John Maylard (Minister) records that in the morning the average attendance was 40 scholars, the afternoon 150 + 50 scholars and in the evening 150. (It would seem that in the afternoon they were sitting on each others laps). Records only go up till 1907.

Wesleyan Chapel – Ebenezer Chapel – Barrack Hill

Long before Pater existed, John Wesley had visited Pembroke several times, and preached at St. Daniel's Church and in the Town Hall, Main Street, about the year 1763. Pembrokeshire and Brecknockshire were then divided into two circuits, really the only two in Wales.

Shortly after the formation of the Dockyard, the Wesleyan Methodists began to hold meetings in a house at Pembroke Ferry, under the leadership of Mr. Richard Allen, father of the late Richard Allen, shipbuilder. Mr. R. Allen senior was the first follower of John Wesley in the immediate district, and was a man of strong personality. Among others who preached at the Ferry was the notable Billy Dawson, who, detained there on his way to Haverfordwest by the inclemency of the weather, gave his memorable sermon from the subject, 'Death on the Pale Horse'.

Ebenezer

A 'society' which consisted of sixteen members was formed, and afterwards met in the house of Mr. James Allen, Front Street until Ebenezer Chapel was built, when this small band joined themselves to the Wesleyans who worshipped in the little 'chapel on the hill'. This chapel was built on a piece of ground at Treowen, now known as Wesley Row, very shortly after the Baptists had erected Bethany. The Wesleyans obtained their lease from Sir John Owen on the same terms as the Baptists, and when the ground was taken over by the Government £30~ was given to the trustees of the chapel in lieu of the lease.

This small chapel, which was named Ebenezer, was opened for Divine worship in 1820, having been in building about two years. All the work that could be possibly done by those interested in it was voluntarily given.

At its opening it had a church-roll of something like sixty members. The singing was a special feature in the services. Mrs. John Rixon, of Pembroke, widow of the late Mr. John Rixon, Mayor of the borough 1899-1900, sang as a girl in the choir, which was led by a band of instrumentalists. Every effort was put forth by its members to be in their places in time, for to be five minutes late or to be absent without leave meant a possible penny fine. The preachers who at first conducted the services in this little chapel were itinerant ministers, who rode long distances from one mission station to another, and whose property oftentimes consisted of but little more than was contained in their saddle-bags.

Other Methodists who had come to work in the dockyard from Cornwall first met in 36 King St in 1818. At that time their numbers totalled 16. Public worship was established in this house as was a Sunday School and their numbers increased. It was decided to build a chapel but they were unable to obtain a site in town due to Mr Meyrick's policy regarding leasing land for building non Conformist Churches.

They obtained the lease of a piece of land were the on the north side of what is now Preselly View at its junction with Tregennis Hill. Sir John Owen granted the lease from 1820 for 99 years at an annual rent of 1 shilling. The building was small plain and rectangular with a gallery at the one end for the choir and musicians. The Chapel was opened in 1820 by the Rev J Wood, Phillip Rawlins and Samuel Dunn. The Musicians consisted of Mr John Dyer; first violin and leader, George Lifton; violin, Thomas Chunn; cello, James Bateman and William Davies; flutes, Thomas Phillips; (who kept a grocery shop), clarionet, John Bolch, double bass. The Choir included Miss Jane Tregenna, Mary A Nicholls, Mary Fender, Ann Roads, Betsey Reynolds, Mary Jackett, Jane Allen, Bessie Lifton, Elizabeth Seccombe, M and J Thomas, E and M Davies, Mr Thomas Blake, William Bateman, W Tapp, Samuel Tregenna, William Saunders, George Bateman, William Lifton and John Adams. The number of Church members was 54. A Sunday school was also formed at the new church and Mr Richard Tregenna was the superintendent. Originally the ministers who took the services came from Pembroke but as the importance of the chapel grew they lodged in Mr Phillips house near the Chapel.

By 1843 the congregation had grown to such an extent that the chapel was too small. There was ample ground to enlarge the chapel on the present site under the lease granted by Sir John Owen but the War Department had purchased the land on which the chapel stood subsequently to the granting of the lease and were in the course of construction of the Defensible Barracks. This needed, according to the original plans a clear field of fire with no buildings encroaching on it surrounding the Barracks. The War department drew up proposals to clear all building to Llanreath at the west, to the stream of water running at the south and east of Cross Park, to the road at Tregennis Hill (all the houses built on the west side) and down to Victoria Rd on the north. Mason suggests that the Chapel Committee found difficulty in getting approval for any extension to be carried out, from the War Department, and were offered £350 compensation by the War Department to move. They looked round for a new site and one was found in Meyrick St. There were no longer any problems with leasing from the Bush estate so the new Chapel was built and the old one demolished by the War Department.

Wesleyan Methodist Chapel -- Meyrick St

Wesley Chapel Meyrick St Mrs S Peters

In space of time the worshippers at Ebenezer increased to such an extent that sufficient sitting accommodation could not be found It was therefore thought advisable to build a more commodious place of worship, so in 1846 a site was obtained in Meyrick Street North. The foundation-stone of the new chapel was laid by Mrs. John Road, and it was opened for Divine worship on April 21 (Good Friday), 1848, the Revs. Mr. Wood and Dr. Beaumont officiating on the occasion. During the erection of the chapel a prominent Wesleyan, Mr. John Bolch senior, who gave gratuitous labour on the building, fell from the scaffolding and was killed.

The first marriage in Wesley Chapel took place on August 27, 1850. Mr. and Mrs. Jones, the bride and bridegroom, were presented with a Bible, a hymn-book, and one sovereign on the occasion. In the year 1865 Wesley Chapel was extended westwards. At the time the foundation-stone of this extension was being laid which ceremony was performed by Mrs. Jonas Dawkins - an accident occurred. The platform which had been erected for the purpose gave way, and many were precipitated to the ground. A few people were slightly hurt, but, happily, no serious results followed from the mishap.

It was thought wise to get a renewal of the lease at this time, and it was granted by the trustees of the Bush estate for ninety nine years.

The enlargement of the chapel was not completed until 1867.

The chapel was further improved between the years 1882 and 1885 by the construction of a new entrance-lobby, by the alteration of the old fashioned high-backed seats, and in many other ways, which rendered it more comfortable for the worshippers. It is the largest place of worship in the town. The ministers, according to the Wesleyan system, remain only three years in the church. The present pastor is the Rev. Isaac Newton. Miss. Jenkins, daughter of the late Mr. David Jenkins, who was a prominent Wesleyan, is the chapel organist.

The Chapel was 74 feet long by 57 feet wide with galleries at one end and on both sides. It could seat 856 and apart from those seats reserved for the choir and Army and Navy most of them were rented in advance of the Chapel being completed. There were a schoolroom, three vestries underneath and a house for the Minister on the south side. The total cost was less than £1800 but much of the work was done by volunteers many Dockyard tradesmen who gave their time free

Rev Josiah Evans described the times and the men who built this chapel.

It was the day of the smaller wages and longer hours of dearer provisions, the time of the duty on corn – I well remember seeing the road menders sitting by the roadside eating their black barley bread. It was the day when tea was 8s or 10s a pound, and sugar and salt were taxed and they had to look round to see how far a shilling would go. They gave nobly and sacrificed to give. They gave and raised upwards of £1300 in cash but they gave considerably more in work. The working day was long but they managed to put in time before and after work in the Yard. As early as 4am some of them were on the spot, whilst in the evenings as soon as they could they were they were busy. The walls, slating and plastering were all given out to contract but all the woodwork – flooring, pews, pillars, etc. was sawn, planed and fitted up by them. While working on the roof one, Mr Bolch fell to his death but his death only seemed to inspire the workers to work on.

A communion service of silver was given by Mrs Rodgers the wife of a Dockyard Official and was inscribed accordingly. The Clock from the old chapel made in 1820 by J Barrett of Pembroke was placed in the Schoolroom and the two communion table candlesticks which had held the dip candles at the old chapel were also preserved and locked away in the plate chest of the new chapel.

In 1848 had 200 members and this had risen to 255 by 1867

According to the census of Religious Buildings 1851 it had 346 free seats and 574 others. The average congregation is given as 389 +191 scholars in the morning and 545 + 80 scholars in the evening

Gas lighting was installed in the Chapel in 1852 and in 1862 the organ

It was enlarged in 1867. There had been much discussion about extending but the Chapel had a debt of £433 so until this could be cleared there was little possibility of proceeding. In 1866 the way was clear and a committee was set up who undertook the responsibility if the work. An extension of the lease was obtained for 99 years at a rent of 1s 6d per foot. The Chapel was extended westward by 32 feet to provide extra vestries, an organ gallery at the back of the pulpit and additional gallery space. Increasing the seating from 856 to 1,348. The cost was £1,669. 9s .6d of which £779 9s 6d had been raised. The outstanding debt was cleared by 1876

The feathered mahogany panels used as part of the front of the rostrum are part of the first pulpit which was removed during the extensions

In 1875 Findlay says the within the last few years it has been considerably enlarged. It is well fitted up internally and has spacious galleries It possesses a good organ . It is capable of accommodating 1400 persons.

Further renovations and improvements were carried out between 1881 and 1885 and in 1889 the heating system was installed.

Acc/to .Kelly's Directory 1884

Mormons

In the 1850's the Mormons help open air meetings at the bottom of Bellvue Terrace, The farmyard of Pennar Old Farm Ferry Rd. and in Albion Square. They made some converts who left the town and joined the cause in America.

Mormans – Very active Pembroke Dock certainly from 1847 onwards when Elder Evans was baptizing said to have held meetings at Albion Square.

Plymouth Brethren

A small body of the Plymouth Brethren meet for worship in an anteroom of the Temperance Hall, and also a few of the same denomination hold meetings in a room in the lower part of Commercial Row which they call the Gospel Hall.

A group of members of this sect came to work in the Dockyard on the closing of the yard at Woolwich in 1870, The leader was Mr Edward Parrett. Originally they met in the Temperance Hall till 1905 when they moved to a house in High St. Another branch used to meet in the "Gospel Hall" Commercial Row.

Salvation Army

The Salvation Army's advent to this town took place on January 21, 1883. The first Captain's name was Henry Gover.

For many years the Army held their meetings in the Albion Hall which had formerly been the old Tabernacle of the Congregationalists. The hall has now disappeared, and houses have been erected on the site. The Salvation Army now hold services in a large room attached to the Albion House. On May 1, 1883, General Booth visited the town, and spoke in Albion Square Chapel. The building was so crowded that many failed to gain admission. Since the formation of the Army in the town it has done, and is still doing, much good.

January 1883 Commissioner Cooms, Captain Harry Gover and his wife set up a Salvation Army Barracks in the Albion Hall (the old Tabernacle Chapel). Quickly the number of converts grew until the building was packed to overflowing at services. The town was visited by General Booth and his staff in 1886 and although the Albion Chapel was borrowed for the Service at which the General preached, such were the numbers that although it would hold 1500 people, many who wanted to, could not get in. After the Albion Hall was pulled down, the meetings were held in the Temperance Hall.

Kelly's Directory 1884

The Military Cemetery is situated to the east of the Hut Encampment, a short distance from it, and is appropriated to the garrison.

Education

Until the creation of the Dockyard the only schools in the area would have been in Pembroke. A Grammar School was established there in 1690 and was housed in part of the old Town Hall (pulled down in 1820). It was a "free" school usually the schoolmasters were clerics and was described as "excellent" in the eighteenth century.

With the new influx of population in the early nineteenth century, there rose a demand for education. Several small private schools were set up including two by what is now Bethany Corner but which used to be Bethany Square

1847 There was an inspection of all the Schools in Wales (Report on the State of Education in Wales)

Mr. John Allen's School

1815 school opened by Mr. J Allen assisted by his son John and daughter Elizabeth, who taught the girls, in King's St

The first schoolmaster in the town was a Mr. John Allen, and his school was started in the following way: After the Battle of Waterloo in 1815, the prospects of the farmers were gloomy indeed.

Mr. Allen, who at that time farmed the whole of Mr. Barlow's parklands at Lawrenny, seeing that his agricultural occupation was but a waste of time and energy, moved into the small town of Pater, and opened a school in Middle or King Street, assisted by his son John and his daughter Elizabeth, who took charge of the girls.

The school flourished well, and the tuition given to the scholars was much in advance of the times. Very many were the boys who were taught at Mr. Allen's school that afterwards passed into the Dockyard and successfully, John Allen junior, after the death of his father, continued to run the school

In 1847 the Inspectors report says:-

A long room of the master's dwelling house on the first floor is the place where this school is kept, and is exceedingly well adapted for the purpose. The master is experienced in teaching but his course is very limited.

The furniture consisted of one desk for the master with four long desks and twelve benches for the scholars but no blackboard or maps of any description.

The house is in good repair but the schoolroom and furniture had the appearance of having been much used. The parents of his scholars were tradesmen, mechanics, farmers and a very few of them labourers. Matthew 5 was read well by many of his pupils and questions answered. Some arithmetic questions were worked out and many of the copybooks were exceedingly well written and clean.

School at the bottom of Charlton Place Mr. Issacs

School in very large room built for the purpose opposite Bethany Chapel by Mr. Tregenna, premises later used by a Mr. Jane and then a Mr. Whale

Then Mr. Tregenna opened a school in a very large room built for the purpose opposite Bethany Chapel. His school-room at that time was the largest building in the town; temperance festivals, chapel tea-meetings, and other large gatherings, were held there. A Mr. Jane afterwards occupied the premises and kept a school of some note; he dignified the place by giving it the name of 'Jane's Academy'

Also a Mr. Whale conducted a school for a short time in the same place.

Mr. Barclay's School

Mr. Barclay was a man of scientific and advanced ideas. His school was where the Caledonian Inn, High Street, now is. He had a galvanic battery which he used occasionally to allow the boys to try. He oftentimes talked to them about electricity, and told them that this force had great possibilities which he would never see come to light, but that they might.

In 1847 it was inspected.

The school was held in Mr. Barclay's dwelling house in a back room. The furniture consisted of 3 desks, 1 table 6 benches 1 small map of the world and a blackboard. He said that he had more maps, a pair of globes and astronomical apparatus. Mr. Barclay had received a good education and had, many years ago, been delivering lectures on astronomy and natural philosophy in the principal towns of Great Britain and Ireland.

His scholars are limited to twenty and consisted of farmers, trademen and mechanics sons. There was one adult here studying navigation who seemed to have made considerable progress considering the short time he had been under instruction. The manners of the lads were very rude and they amused themselves by mimicking their Master

All in the school read Matthew Chapter 4 The copybooks of some of them were exceedingly well written Could answer questions on Astronomy and navigation as well as trigonometry. Some of them exhibited a good taste in linear drawing.

Following these schools were other minor ones kept respectively by Miss. Copplestone, Miss. Harrison, Miss. Furlong, Miss. James, and Mr. Hitchings.

A quaint old schoolmaster, Mr. Newman, kept a school for boys in North Park Street. He had a wooden leg, having lost his own in the American War during an engagement between the British frigate Shannon and the American vessel the Chesapeake, which proved one of the most noted naval duels ever fought, and which terminated in a victory for the British.

A dame-school conducted by a Mrs. Bennett flourished, too, at this time in the Middle Street.

Mr. Tom Morris kept a school near the old Fountain Well in Upper Park Street; he afterwards removed to Queen Street, and there a large loft at the bottom of his garden was used as his schoolroom, and was approached by a ladder from the back

Mr. William Thomas also kept a school, and was sometimes assisted by his brother, who afterwards became a well-known preacher in the Calvinistic Methodist denomination - the late Rev. John Thomas, B.A., of Liverpool. The school was situated in Middle Prospect Place, and was of superior standing.

Mrs. Raynes kept a mixed school in Commercial Row.

Miss. Pearn had a school for girls.

Mrs. Ellard also kept a school for both boys and girls in Princes Street.

Technical knowledge, apparently, was not unknown in those long ago days, for the children taught by Miss. Slocombe, North Park Street, were expected to 'ball' her fire, and to assist in the washing-up of dishes and other household duties.

Mr. Gayton, also, who lived in Laws Street North, in the house of his brother-in-law (who was a retired boatswain from the Royal Sovereign), is remembered to have imparted knowledge in the same practical way. His boys sometimes helped to mix the culm and slime by way of profitable exercise.

In the house immediately next Wesley Chapel, where for many years the Wesleyan ministers resided, a man named James formerly kept a school for boys.

Other private schools were those of Mrs. Groves, Bellevue Terrace; the Rev. W.B. Bliss; Miss Canham, afterwards Mrs. Venning; the Misses Burgess, in Bush Street; and Miss. Christie. Some years later, upon the retirement of Mrs. Raynes, the daughters removed to the house now occupied by Dr. Reynolds, then known as Macfarlane House, and opened a high-class boarding and day school. The Misses Raynes subsequently kept their establishment in the house where Lipton's shop was

In the same house at one time there was a boys school with a Mr. Quatermain as master.

For some time a Miss King kept a school in Meyrick Street, and afterwards in Queen Street East.

A good school was conducted by the Misses. Edwards at the bottom of Tregenna's Hill. They subsequently removed it to Lower Meyrick Street.

In the same street, also, Miss Barclay, daughter of the Mr. Barclay already mentioned, had a flourishing school.

Well-known schools for girls were presided over by Mrs. Eastlake, in the upper house in Charlton Place; Miss Ruth Allen, in Lewis Street; Miss Rowe, in Laws Street, subsequently in Bush Street; also by the Misses Davies of Upper Meyrick Street, as well as the Misses Davies of Cleddau House, Bush Street, who afterwards removed to Water Street.

Mr. Hickson kept a boys' school in Water Street for a short time.

Miss Capplestone's School 1847

The schoolroom was part of a wellbuilt house, in excellent repair. The furniture was composed of a square table, 5 benches and three chairs also in good repair. Neither maps, prints nor lessons on a boards were to be seen.

The scholars were tradesmen and mechanics children but not one was capable of reading in the Scriptures. Those present were mere infants.

Miss Furlong's School 1847

This is held in the room of an inn, which is in good repair. The furniture in the schoolroom consists of three tables, six chairs, five benches and a sofa but no maps of any description. The mistress is the innkeepers daughter. The scholars are for the most part tradesmen's children and very young. A part of the Romans chapter 4 was read. The copybooks were tolerably well written considering that the scholars were so young.

Miss Harrison's School 1847

This school is conducted in the first-floor room of a well-built and substantial house ; but the room is by far too small to contain all the scholar . Few were present, in consequence of the severe weather.

The furniture consisted of one large box, one square table, and six benches, but no maps of any description, nor lessons on boards.

Tradesmen and mechanics' children were the scholars. Considerable time is devoted in this school to sewing. Writing is not taught.

The 5th chapter of Romans was read, but not with ease.

George Hitchin's School

.-This school is kept in a very dirty room on the first floor of the master's house. The grate and many parts of the wall were very much out of repair.

The furniture consisted of a small desk for the master, three broken desks for the scholars, and five equally bad benches, at the sides and in the middle of the room. The master made great exertions to keep his scholars quiet and silent, while I was there, but they cared little for him, though he used the flat ruler upon some of them. The scholars were the children of mechanics and labourers.

They read the 12th chapter of Romans. There are 12 months in a year-- named them correctly, and the number of days in each month, but did not know the number of days in February when it is leap-year--nor the reason of leap-year.

Only one copy-book of those I saw was well written.

Miss James School. 1847

This school is kept on the ground-floor of a dwelling-house, here the mistress lives with her mother. Sewing and reading only are taught. Very few were present, in consequence of the severity of the weather.

The furniture consisted of seven chairs, two benches, and many kitchen articles, but no cards, lessons on boards, prints, nor maps of any kind.

The greater part of the scholars are of the labouring class.

A part of the second chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel was read, but imperfectly and no answer could be had to any question proposed by the mistress or myself upon it. Writing is not taught.

The scholars present were young children

Mr. Neuman's School. 1847

This school is held on the ground-floor room in the master's dwelling-house. The house and especially the schoolroom were in bad repair. I found the master who has a wooden leg, without a coat, and four scholars without shoes sitting near a small fire.

The school furniture consisted of two tables and four benches; in another part of the room were jugs, fuel, baskets, turnips, and many other miscellaneous articles.

The scholars were labourers' children; none present could read in the Testament. copy-books were very ill written.

Miss Pearn's School 1847

This school is held on the ground-floor in a well-built house.

The school furniture consisted only of a few low benches, a large table, but no maps nor any lessons for the use of infant-schools.

The mistress is a young woman living with her parents, and teaches sewing as well as reading.

There was not one present that could read in the Testament, and, on my requesting, the mistress to put some questions to them her mother said "They are little bits of things they cannot answer any questions."

Miss Pinch's School. 1847

A back room in her parents' dwelling-house is the schoolroom. Five small benches composed all the furniture.

Mechanics and labourers' children were the scholars, with one or two tradesmen's.

None present could read the Scriptures, or answer any questions except repeating a few religious sentences by rote, and reciting some short pieces of poetry, which last they did correctly. Writing is not taught.

Miss Slocombs School. 1847

When I entered this school I saw the mistress busily engaged with a trowel in her hand, plastering the partition- wall, which was quite out of repair, and the scholars, without any books in their hands looking at her. The schoolroom is a ground room in her father's dwelling-house. One table, two benches, three chairs, and a coffer made up the furniture.

The scholars were labourers' children. None present could read the Testament; those who were reading in the Spelling -book had a variety of books, and no class could be formed. The mistress said they were too young to be questioned, and declined putting any questions to them.

Mr. Wm. Thomas's School . 1847

This school is kept in two rooms at the back of the dwelling- house in which the mother of the master lives. The furniture consisted of four tables, two small benches, three chairs, but no maps or lessons on boards of any kind.

The master commenced his vocation of teaching at the early age of thirteen, in consequence of his father's death. He continues to attend Mr. Barclay's school in the evening. He had a good control over his pupils, and is assisted by his mother when all his scholars are present.

His scholars are tradesmen, mechanics, and labourers' children many of them are very young. ; A part of the 1st chapter of St. John was read tolerably well by many.

1870 In the 1870's Mr.Nathan John, B.A. Lond., started a commercial and preparatory school for boys, which had been a much-felt need ever since Mr.Bliss's school had been closed. Mr.John first opened his school in Meyrick Street North; from thence he removed to the house which was once the Victoria Hotel; subsequently he transferred his school to Meyrick Street South. He afterwards gave up his private school. When the Intermediate School was established, he was appointed one of the classical masters, where he continued until he was elected Headmaster at Brecon County School.

In 1905 there were only four private schools in the town namely, one kept by Miss. Radmore, established many years ago in Laws Street South; also in the same street Miss. Jenkins conducted a school for girls; and Miss B.Grieve had a school for small children in Bush Street. In an anteroom of the Temperance Hall there was a school for boys; Mr.F.Bowden was the master.

Sunday Schools.-

Bethel School. 1847

I visited this school on the 27th December, in the after noon. It appeared well conducted, and the teachers of a superior class. I saw hardly any lads above 13 or 14 years old among the scholars. I was told that at that age they expect to become teachers directly, and left in disgust if not appointed. They appeared all to be reading They showed a good deal of Scriptural knowledge in their answers, but not much intelligence.- The school appeared to be well conducted.

Tabernacle School 1847

I visited this school, after leaving Bethel - Sunday-school, from which it differed little.

Wesleyan School. 1847

I visited this school, in the morning The business of the school was commenced at 10 minutes past 9 by singing a hymn. The 18th Psalm was then read, and an extempore prayer delivered, as such prayers always are, very fluently ,by one of the teachers. nearly, if not quite, all the children could read. I saw no ill-clad children. those who cannot afford decent. or even good, clothes for their children, will not send them to school: there are a good many such.

National Schools

From what has been stated, it will be seen that good private schools were not lacking from an early period in the history of the town; but it came to be felt more than sixty years ago that there was a necessity for an efficient public elementary school, and a movement was set on foot to establish such. Accordingly, committee was formed, and to this committee, which included Captain S.Jackson, who was the Superintendent of the Dockyard at that time, Messrs. William Edye (the Master Shipwright), Thomas Pretious, John Adams, the Revs.R.Bloxham, C.Phillips and others, the Government granted the lease of a piece of land at the base of the Barrack Hill for the purpose of erecting a National School. The deed of conveyance was, made on June 1, 1841, and the ground was let at a peppercorn rent for 1,000 years.

When the Superb was launched on September 6, 1842, a grand bazaar was held in the Dockyard in order to raise funds towards the building of this school. Captain Jackson and Builder Edye were the principal promoters of this bazaar, and interested themselves in it accordingly.

Long single story building on left of picture is the old National school which had a large basement underneath and a playground to the rear.

In or about the year 1845 the National School was opened. The first master of the boys was Mr.Francis Allen, and the first mistress of the girls was Mrs .Maria Allen, his wife, with a staff of monitors to assist them.

From this time the educational state of affairs in the town made great progress, and from this school many lads were turned forth who subsequently gained high positions in life.

Many of the Kensington students obtained their successes through the grounding received in the National School.

This was a Public Elementary School and the Committee consisted of:

Captain S Jackson (Superintendent of the Dockyard)

William Edye (Master Shipwright)

Edward Laws (Storekeeper)

Thomas Pretious (Timber Inspector)

Thomas Cook Jones (Naval Surgeon)

John Adams

Rev. C Phillips (Vicar of St Mary's Pembroke)

James and E B Soden

The Education Department voted a Grant of £462 and the Lord's Commissioners of the Admiralty supplemented this with a grant of £200. The rest of the cost was raised by public subscription largely from the officials of the Dockyard and the workers with the local townspeople. A large bazaar was held which raised a considerable sum to help clear the debt.

The school was very popular and soon became overcrowded partly because of the belief that as the Dockyard Officials had so much influence in the running of the school future apprentices would be selected from among its pupils.

From 1844 to 1848 Church of England services were held in the schoolroom.

1847 The inspection into the State of Education in Wales 1847 recorded

I visited these schools (for the boys and girls separately) on the 18th of January. The Schoolhouse, which is of two stories, is built against the hill on which the Barracks stands. The ground being higher on one side of the building than on the other rooms which appear from the front to be upon the ground-floor appear from the back to be upon the first floor, and those which from the back appear to be upon the ground-floor from the front are underground. Hitherto the two schoolrooms have occupied the upper floor, one at each end with separate entrance, and the master and mistress have lived on the ground-floor; a change was however being made by which the whole of the upper floor will be appropriated to the boys' schoolroom, what is now the Master's house converted into a girl's schoolroom and a new house for the master erected on the east side of the present one. The ground at the back is terraced, and contains the master's garden, the out buildings (which are very inconvenient) and a small-enclosed yard for the children.

Boys School. I was present when this school was opened for the day. A hymn was sung, having been first repeated by a couple of lines at a time, from the master's dictation. The prayers were few and short and the manner of the children very good. The numbers present at prayers were then taken. Such as had arrived too late for the commencement were admitted into the school and noticed. The business of the day began (in the senior class) with a spelling lesson conducted by monitors. This lesson had been learnt at home. Places were taken, and general animation prevailed. The same class read a chapter from the History of the land ' published by the Christian Knowledge Society, about 'William Rufus. They then spelt and explained different words occurring in it. The mode of spelling followed was for each boy to repeat a syllable of the word ; when each syllable, had been in this way repeated separately, the next boy repeated the entire word: the succeeding boys spelt and repeated the word syllable by syllable, and then the entire word, in the same manner and order as the preceding - ones had repeated it. The writing from dictation, which follows, was in general well done;

The Twelve monitors all read extremely well and answered with intelligence questions from early English history

I attended a little to some of the other classes while at their work. They appeared to be going well. The master had a good method of conducting the school. All the scholars were kept employed. The master's manner appeared to me to be rather confused and nervous at times.

After the monitors had collected books and slates, and given in the numbers present of their classes some explanation of absence was asked and the school class by class dismissed.

The school has some tendency to become a preparatory school for the Apprentices school in the Royal Dockyard. Many of the scholars are the children of Shipwrights as such are eligible to be apprentices.

The boys school could accommodate 295 with an average attendance in 1904 of 180. The Headmaster in that year was Mr H Hinchliffe assisted by Mr H M Milburn, J Griffiths, W G Griffiths, and H Williams.

Girls School

The 1847 Inspection records:-

I was present at the opening of this school in the afternoon. The girls entered very slowly and quietly. They began by repeating Grace after meat. The afternoon was given up entirely to sewing except for the teachers who sew for the first hour and a half-then cipher and write for the last hour. I hear 24 girls read from Acts they read slowly, distinctly and well. They answered questions well especially their senior teacher who appears to me in every way qualified to make an excellent schoolmistress. A few sums were worked both on slate and mentally quickly and correctly. They sang in very good time. Nothing could exceed the neatness and regularity, which appears to pervade this school.

The girl's school was held in the downstairs or basement area of the building and will accommodate 225 girls. In 1904 the average attendance was 153. The headmistress was Miss D Edwards and the assistant mistresses Miss M Fisher, E Griffiths, and E Davies.

Infants School

Mason says that this was held in a new wing that had been built in the playground in 1894. He describes it as a spacious room partitioned off for the convenience of teaching and it would accommodate 220. Miss M Jenkins was the headmistress assisted by Miss M Grimes, C Roch, M Ogleby.

British School (Coronation)

Partly because of overcrowding at the National school where very many boys under the age of seven had to be sent home for want of room - and partly because the Church of England principles taught at the National School were disturbing to the minds of many Nonconformists, steps were taken to establish a British School. The suggestion of forming this school was heartily taken up, especially by the workmen of the Dockyard. A committee was formed, with Mr. Bonniwell at its head. A site was secured in South Meyrick Street, where the Coronation School now stands (later used as a further Education Centre) and the British School was erected together with the school house. The Dockyard men gave voluntary labour, and in addition to this subscribed money according to their means, which money was collected fortnightly.

On May 1, 1846 a concert, at which several selections from Handel and other masters were rendered, was given in the Temperance Hall in order to aid the funds of the proposed new British School. The concert was conducted by Mr. John Radmore. It is recorded that there was a large audience present, including Mr. Davies, then Mayor of the Borough of Pembroke.

Bethel Chapel was in building at the same time as the school, and between the site of that and of the school two sawpits were made respectively for each place, where planks were sawn for the erection of the buildings. The school was built with ordinary stone and mortar. During the latter part of the year 1847 a terrific storm raged over the town, and the west pine end of the British School fell down; owing to the roof not being completed and the newly-made mortar not being dry, the wind had full play to loosen the wall, and caused this catastrophe. But willing hands soon repaired the damage, and the school was opened in May 1848. Mr. John Adams was the head master of the boys, and Mrs. Adams headmistress of the girls. Sliding shutters divided the boys' part of the school from the girls'.

Mr John Adams had a reputation of being very quick tempered and fond of the use of a ruler although regarded as an excellent headmaster. There were four pupil teachers, Thomas Watkins, John Jenkins, Ebenezer Jones and Henry Roach. Mrs Adams was headmistress of the Girl's school assisted by three pupil teachers, Jane Phillips, Jane Thomas and Jane Thomas.

When inspected by Mathew Arnold, then Inspector of Schools, it was pronounced the first school in Wales in maths.

In 1854 Mr Adams was appointed headmaster of the Goat St School Swansea and Mr and Mrs Cocks replaced the Adams's. Mr Cocks was appointed Postmaster of Pembroke Dock in 1871 and Mr William Williams became Headmaster and Miss Mumford headmistress. In 1872 the British schools (but not the National school) became Board schools under the provisions of the Education Act of 1870.

It was found that the numbers of children in the area who had been excluded from education because of the lack of funds was quite large when the numbers in Pembroke were taken into consideration. Until 1889 the syllabus at this and the National school, especially for the boys, was built around the subjects required to pass the examination papers set in the dockyard for entering as apprentices. In 1889 the Schools Board, despite great opposition, introduced a wider syllabus to include more commercial subjects as not all pupils were able to gain employment in the dockyard.

During the autumn of the year 1901 the old British School in South Meyrick Street was taken down, and the freehold of an adjacent house was purchased with a view to erect on the enlarged site. This became necessary on account of the inadequate accommodation in the Albion Square School, which is proved by the fact that for some time many of the children of the higher grade were taught in the schoolroom of Albion Square Chapel.

The new school was designed by Messrs. George Morgan and Son, Carmarthen. The contractor was Mr.C.Young, of Gwyther Street, and the cost of the building was rather over £9,000. During the time this school was in course of erection the girls and infants were instructed in Wesley and Meyrick Street Congregational Sunday schools respectively, until the new building was completed. The structure, which is named the Coronation School, was opened on May 4, 1904, by Miss. Grace Smith, daughter of Mr.William Smith, chairman of the Pembroke Borough Education Committee. The building is of a handsome character, and consists of two stories. The upper one is given to the higher grade section, and the lower one to the junior portion of the school.

On the day it was opened the children of the various schools, wearing distinctive ribbons, assembled in Albion Square, from whence, accompanied by the teachers and headed by the temperance band, they marched in procession to Meyrick Street, where they were presented with round tins of chocolate which bore a portrait of the King. After receiving these children dispersed. The Mayor of the borough (Mr.W.M.Griffiths, 1903-1904), the members of the Corporation, as well as many of the members of the old School Board, marched from the Council-chambers in the market house. Upon their arrival the opening ceremony took place. Brief speeches were made by the Mayor and others, amongst whom were Sir Lewis Morris and Mr.Bancroft, H.M. Inspector of Schools. Sir Lewis Morris presented medals to some of the children for regular attendance.

Mr.A.J.Adams and Mr.W. Williams are the headmasters of the Coronation School.

After the opening of the new school, the girls and the infants were transferred to Albion Square, and the boys to the Coronation School

Education after 1873

By January 7, 1873, the Borough of Pembroke School Board had taken over the British School. On account of the increase in the population of Pembroke Dock and its neighbourhood, it became necessary to erect more schools; consequently a girls' and infants' school was opened in Pennar on January 5, 1874, and in 1877 a school, with several class rooms, was opened for boys only, in Albion Square.

1892, a school was built in Llanion, which has proved of great service to that district.

After the boys left the British School in Meyrick Street for Albion Square, the British School was improved and enlarged for the girls and infants. Miss. Rogers, of Church Street, has for many years been headmistress of the infants' school.

1890 Albion Square School became so crowded that it was thought expedient to divide it into two sections, and the upper standards were made into a higher grade school. The school was enlarged in 1896, and it was further enlarged at a later date.

County Intermediate School

This was founded under the Welsh Intermediate Education Act of 1889. Despite massive fundraising by way of bazaars, concerts etc. insufficient funds were available to build a new school at first and it was agreed to utilise the old assembly rooms of the Victoria Hotel near the National School at the top of Pembroke S. These rooms were fitted out and refurbished but were not ideal. There was no proper playground although the stable yard below the building and the Barrack Hill provided a substitute. The school was opened in January 1895 and the Headmaster was Mr T R Dawes M.A.(Lond), the senior mistress was Miss I A Perman M.A. (Lond).

A new school was built at the east end of Bush St and opened on the 27th June 1899. The cost was £3000. It consisted of an assembly hall, chemical and physics laboratories, science lecture room, six classrooms, kitchen and manual workshop. The grounds extended to approximately two acres with facilities for hockey, football, cricket and tennis. It was built to accommodate 250 pupils and in 1904 the average attendance was 170. The premises were also used in the evenings for the Evening Technical and Science Schools which had been based at the Mechanics Institute in Meyrick's St.

Pennar School see under Pennar

Albion Square School

Built by the School Board in 1876 and opened in 1877. This was one of the schools built to cope with the large numbers of children who had not been able to obtain education due to financial reasons. It had originally been intended to build it in Upper Gwyther St to cater for the children from the east end of the town but suitable arrangements for the land could not be agreed on and the present site was offered by the Admiralty for a sum of £240. Originally this was a boy's school. In 1889, when the School Board introduced the new curriculum, this school was divided in two. The "Higher Grade" for boys, with Mr W Clemmow B.A. as Headmaster, included among the subjects taught were book-keeping, French, shorthand, and chemistry. The Junior school again for boys, had Mr W Williams as Senior Master. It was enlarged eastwards in 1896. With the building of the Coronation Schools the boys were transferred there and Albion Square School became a Girl's School. The part used by the senior girls will accommodate 180 with an average attendance in 1904 of 162. Miss C J Griffiths was the Headmistress and Misses A C Cullen, E Eynon and A R Evans were the assistant mistresses. The infants portion could accommodate 230 with an average attendance in 1904 of 167 Miss P C Rogers was the headmistress and Misses F Devonald and F Davies were the assistant mistresses.

Llanion School

Acc to Mrs S Peters

The school was built on the London Rd. in 1892 for girls and infants. In 1904 Mason records that children from as far away as Cosheston and Slade used to attend this school and that it had a very good reputation. The school was built to accommodate 140 pupils in the girls school and had an average attendance of 127, while the infants which was built to accommodate 80 actually had an average attendance of 82. The infant's school was enlarged at about that time. The Headmistress in 1904 was Miss M C beer and the assistant mistress was Miss M Howell.

Coronation Council School

This school was opened on the site of the old British School May 4th 1904. At the time Mason described it as "a magnificent building of commanding proportions composed of trimmed limestone and ornamented with bath stone mullions

It occupies the site of the old British school's, Meyricks, Street south. The rooms are capacious and calculated to promote all the conditions of health, necessary in keeping the brain active for teaching and learning. The playground is rather small for a large number of boys but the street outside happens to be a very wide one, providing room to relieve the crowding inside. The school bears on its front the date 1902, but it was not opened for teaching until the 9th May 1904. The upper portion of the school allotted to the senior boys will accommodate 400 The average attendance in 1904 was 322. Mr A J Adams the headmaster and Messrs J R Norris, J S James, W W Winbury, E Griffiths, W Smith, and G F Davies the assistant masters.

The junior boys take the lower part of the building capable of accommodation 400. The average attendance was 290 in 1904. Mr W Williams is the Headmaster and Messrs G P Davies, G L Edwards E L P George and J Fisher are the assistant masters. If the Central Hall is brought into use then a total of 1200 boys could be accommodated".

The 1970s also witnessed a re-organisation of secondary education in the area. Pembroke Grammar School and the Coronation Secondary School, Pembroke Dock, merged to become a comprehensive school on the Bush site, where there is also now a sports centre. Most of the Coronation School building in Argyle Street was demolished and the pupils and staff of Albion Square and Llanion Junior Schools were moved there to a new purpose-built school

Hospitals and Sickness

Hospitals

Sick and injured workers at the Dockyard were hospitalised aboard the Saturn, a ship moored in the Haven. What conditions were like on this hulk is anybody's guess. Even in the nineteenth century, amputations took place without a general anaesthetic, nursing care was perfunctory, and the state of medical science (while improved) was primitive by today's standards.

The appointment of a medical officer to the Dockyard was not an unmixed blessing for the men. His duties included checking absences from work claimed through ill-health. During potato time, some employees would absent themselves from work at the Dockyard and work on their own plot of land. It is easy to imagine the confusion caused by the arrival of the medical officer in circumstances where absence was due to a need to dig the garden!

Pembroke Dock grew rapidly and delivered prosperity to the south side of the Haven. Conditions for the residents of the new town, however, were far from ideal. In common with many towns that underwent rapid expansion, Pembroke Dock's infrastructure was not up to supporting the speed of initial development.

Water supplies in the town were eventually drawn from storage reservoirs, but some areas still depended on communal wells for their water supply. Conditions in Bush Street were so foul that the area became known as Pig's Parade.

The Dockyard Surgeon's office was within the dockyard walls. During the Crimean War, an army camp was built at Llanion. This also had a hospital and an attendant medical officer. It is fair to say, however, that the next big step forward was the opening of the Pembroke, Pembroke Dock and District Infirmary in 1862 at East Back Pembroke. It was supported by voluntary contributions and public subscription. Later known as Pembroke Cottage Hospital until its closure in 1961, the hospital provided services for the people of Pembroke and Pembroke Dock. It had beds for approximately 20 patients. Other facilities existed at the workhouse in Pembroke which provided the only welfare available for the desperate and needy.

Used from 1866 until 1895, the Nankin replaced the old Saturn as hospital ship. This facility was only available for the treatment of Dockyard employees, and chiefly dealt with industrial injuries. Such injuries proliferated as industrial practices evolved from the use of wood and nails to build ships to the use of metal and rivets.

While falling from the ships on which they worked remained a common cause of injury and death for the workers, there were now the additional risks associated with the use of machinery. After the Nankin was sold and broken up in 1895, those taken ill or injured while working at the Dockyard were cared for in a small hospital within the Yard.

In this period, the unsanitary conditions of life contributed greatly to the spread of disease. Terraced housing built communities, and improved transport links ensured prosperity - but they also made it easier for sickness to spread rapidly. To control the dissemination of dangerous diseases, much depended on the vigilance of the public health officers and the vaccination doctor,

Following the spread of vaccination programmes, smallpox is now extinct in Britain. Before Edward Jenner's pioneering work, however, smallpox was a disease that could kill, permanently scar or blind its victims. The disease broke out in Pembroke Dock on three separate occasions. The first outbreak centred on Queen Street in the 1850's, and was thought to come from the sale of secondhand clothes brought from Swansea.

The Pennar district of the town seems to have been particularly affected by poor social conditions and inadequate sanitation. There were severe outbreaks of cholera in the mid-1860's.

Writing in 1905, Mrs. S. Peters colourfully notes that:

"So malignant was the complaint that mourners not infrequently returned from the funeral of one relative to find another of the family had been stricken by the dread disease."

Scarlet fever shortly followed and, in 1892, smallpox broke out.

A parish magazine dating from January 1880 reports, in relation to an outbreak of typhoid,

"We are most thankful to be able to state that this district is now convalescent. By God's mercy we have been saved from any fatal ending to a most pernicious fever."

Pennar was struck heavily by the influenza epidemic of 1919 that followed the end of the First World War. A record of baptisms carried out at St Patrick's Church Pennar shows that, most unusually, two were carried out by a nurse rather than a minister.

The private dockyard situated at Jacob's Pill went bankrupt in 1885 and part of the buildings were later used as an isolation hospital. This facility was particularly busy during the mid-1920's, when diphtheria struck Pennar. The isolation hospital closed before 1940, and the site is now derelict,

Meyrick Hospital

1898 To commemorate the late Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee at Pembroke Dock, the Nurses' Home and Meyrick Wards were erected in North Park Street. Alderman S.J.Allen, of Cresswell Buildings, was Mayor at that time, and to him the credit of the institution must chiefly be given. The foundation-stone of the building was laid on April 12, 1898, by Sir Thomas Meyrick, who gave the wing of the building which bears his name. Three memorial stones were also laid at the same time, which are engraved with the names respectively, of the following ladies: the Lady Victoria Lambton, sister of Earl Cawdor; Mrs. Burges-Watson, whose husband was at that time Captain Superintendent of the Dockyard; and Mrs. S. J. Allen.

Its design was obsolete before its completion. Furthermore, with sixteen beds, the hospital was scarcely adequate to meet all the town health needs. In fairness, however, its builders never perceived it as likely to fill that role and such accommodations as existed provided a much needed inpatient facility in Pembroke Dock. After its closure as a hospital in 1961, the building was used as a clinic for some years until these functions were taken over by more modern facilities. Eventually, however, the hospital building itself suffered the fate of much of Pembroke Dock's Victorian heritage. Unused, and becoming increasingly dilapidated, the property was sold, the building demolished and the site redeveloped. Today the place where it stood is occupied by sheltered accommodation for the elderly.

South Pembrokeshire Hospital

1902 The hospital, on the Fort Road, stands on an area of 6 acres 13 perches.

It was completed in 1902 at an estimated cost of £17,500 and was the property of the Admiralty. Before it was erected, the sick and injured Dockyard men, who were hurt or taken ill during service hours, were attended to in a small hospital in the Yard, which was used after the old Nankin was discarded. The Nankin was a wooden two-decker fifty gun frigate. It displaced the old Saturn, which had formerly been used as a hospital ship. In 1867 the Nankin was docked and fitted up for hospital purposes, and was used to this end for many years; lying off in the stream, she was long a familiar and picturesque object. The Nankin was eventually sold out of the service to Mr.George Harris, broker, of Bristol, for the sum of £2,200, and left her old moorings on April 18, 1895, for Milford, where she was dismantled.

Four years after the foundation stone was laid at Park Street, the Admiralty began work at Fort Road in constructing the building that was eventually to become the South Pembrokeshire Hospital. The hospital is now a much-loved part of the town. But at the time of its construction, members of the Pembroke Town Council objected to the public losing the right of access to a popular walk to the sea

The site of the hospital has an interesting story. When the original Dockyard Walls were built in 1844 the workmen discovered many skeletal remains during their excavations. These remains certainly very old may have belonged to the families which owned the property of Paterchurch but apart from one old damaged stone in St Mary's church Pembroke I could find no records. The workers' grisly finds were interred opposite the walls on the area subsequently covered by the old gasworks, adjacent to the hospital site: their resting place marked by an inscribed plinth. These remains were probably moved by the Admiralty when they levelled the site to make the ground for the hospital. Whatever happened, it is certain that no trace of the bodies or the memorial plinth remained by the time Mason wrote his guidebook to Pembroke Dock in 1905.

In the same guidebook, Mason recounts the fascinating story of how workers digging the foundations uncovered a paved road and claims to have spoken to eyewitnesses to this remarkable discovery. In an act of astounding archaeological vandalism, he relates that the workmen broke up the road's remains.

The hospital, completed in 1902, covered an area of approximately six acres. Writing a few years later, Mrs. Peters reports that the estimated cost of construction was £17,500. Modern, and using state of the art nursing methods, the hospital was then the most advanced health care facility in Pembrokeshire.

It is important to remember that the hospital replaced hospital provision for Admiralty employees. The new facilities were not available for the population of Pembroke and Pembroke Dock. Despite the Dockyard's closure in 1926, the Fort Road hospital remained under Admiralty control. In 1930, part of the hospital was used as an isolation unit for scarlet fever and diphtheria patients. During the war, when Pembroke Dock became a target for German bombing raids, patients treated at the hospital (and at the Sir Thomas Meyrick Hospital) were transferred to Pembroke Cottage Hospital and Riverside. The Fort Road hospital was then used as a Royal Navy hospital, while the RAF used treatment facilities within the Dockyard walls.

From 1948 until the site's redevelopment in 1959/60, facilities at the hospital enter a period of comparative neglect. The building that had been sufficient to care for those injured at the Dockyard was unable to cope with the demands placed upon it. In 1953, after the transfer of maternity care to Riverside, the hospital housed female chronically sick patients in its 16 beds. A succession of forlorn entries in the annual reports of the West Wales Hospital Management Committee throw the condition of the hospital into stark relief.

Things changed for the better at South Pembrokeshire Hospital when the West Wales Hospital Management Committee took note of the condition of public health care in the south of the county. The Thomas Meyrick Hospital, Pembroke Cottage Hospital, South Pembrokeshire Hospital and Riverside Joint User Institution, while admirable in their own way, were scarcely sufficient to deal with the needs of the population of Pembroke and Pembroke Dock in the second half of the twentieth century. Apart from the South Pembrokeshire Hospital, all these buildings were of nineteenth century origin and South Pembs itself was built at the century's turn,

At that time, the prevailing trend in hospital provision was to centralise health care in larger institutions. In terms of development potential, only Riverside and the South Pembrokeshire Hospital could be expanded. For some time, the Hospitals' Management Committee deliberated upon the merits of both sites, but finally plumped for South Pembrokeshire Hospital on grounds of cost and available space. When redevelopment came to the South Pembs site, it was rapid and considerable. Whereas, in 1958, the hospital had sixteen beds that were hard pushed to cope with the demands upon them, the redeveloped hospital had eighty-three. The "new" hospital, which was opened September 1961 by the Minister of Health J. Enoch Powell, received outpatients, maternity cases and some acute patients and was equipped with a new operating theatre.

In the 1970's, both the building of Withybush General Hospital and the concentration of non-acute outpatient care in community-based clinics posed a threat to the South Pembrokeshire Hospital's future. Despite its extensive refit at the start of the previous decade, the running costs of South Pembs were higher than those of the new unit. The fight to retain maternity facilities failed. But in January 1977 the vigorous campaign by the Friends of South Pembrokeshire Hospital wrung out a promise to retain hospital facilities at Fort Road.

It remains standing now: a familiar redbrick building on the approach to the sea. The site has had many additions made to it in recent years. The Pater Close Units and the Psychiatric Unit at Haven Way perform important functions for the local community, the interior has been redecorated and a new boiler house built,

No operations are performed there, and acute care now takes place at Withybush Hospital, but it remains a focus for the community, held in great affection and staunchly defended by its many friends.

Sickness

There was an outbreak of Smallpox in 1857. Eight people died in Pembroke Dock, the first being Mrs Evans of Queen St. An investigation was carried out by Medical and Senior Officers from the Dockyard into the causes of the outbreak and the conclusion was reached that all those who died had acquired second hand clothing from a street hawker who had originated in Swansea.

Pennar from the 1850's seemed to have been hit by several epidemics of infectious diseases. Cholera in 1853 which was so severe that a public letter was written on the subject by Lord Palmeston, Cholera struck again in August 1866 spreading throughout Pennar, but is alleged not out of the area because the people of Pennar sealed themselves off. The first person to die was a man named Peter Morris age 48. The victims had to be buried within twelve hours and such was the rapid spread of the infection that on 29th August 1866 as well as Peter Morris, also buried were Emma Jones age 28, Margaret Griffiths 11 months, and I .Day age 29. On the 2nd September Thomas Charles Powell age 32 months, Seth John Stephens, age 12 months, and George Jenkins age 12 months were buried. The next day only one, William Wilcox age 25yrs, and Ann Preese age 40 on the 5th, but by the sixth of September the death toll had again risen, Maria Morgan age 6 years, Anne Stephens age 26 years, and John Ormond age 28 months. The Ormond family was again bereaved with Elizabeth Ormond being buried the next day. The 8th of September was the worst day with five victims being buried, like all the others in Park St Cemetery by the Curate of Pembroke Dock, Rev. George Edward McHugh, they were Michael Birmingham age 5 years, Mary Williams, age 57, George Davies age 5 months, Elizabeth Price age 75years and Mary May age 56 years. This was the peak but there was to be still more bereaved families as on the 10th September Ann Jones age 39, Stephen Morgan age 9years, and Jane Preese age 59 were buried. The Jones family suffered more losses with Ann Jones age 48 being buried on the 14th, John Jones age 72 on the 15th, Mary Ann Jones and Fanny Jones both age 14 years on the 16th and Mary Ann Jones age 74 as well as Elizabeth Vaulk on the 17th. The last two of the victims to be buried were Thomas Mabe age 62 and Mary Griffiths age 23 on the 19th September. A year later scarlet fever raged, it struck again in 1909. Typhoid was present in 1879/80 with over twenty people being affected but fortunately all recovered and the Curate of the time records in the Church Magazine that the problem with the health in Pennar was, that, although these diseases were preventable and that warnings had been given both after the 1853 and the 1866 outbreak, " We would again call attention to the water supply, which is generally admitted to be the viaticum of typhoid fever, and which we hear is in a worse state than ever". Findlay wrote in 1875 of the water supply to the town in general that "save that of the Government dwellings, occupying two or three small streets near the dockyard, and which are supplied from the reservoirs the water supply is furnished by wells in different parts of the town, and by tanks attached to most of the houses. This supply is believed to be adequate to the wants of the community (remarks made by members of the Town Council at a meeting to discuss the sufficiency of the water supply of Pembroke and Pembroke Dock) but it is fairly open to doubt whether it would be found equal to the demands of exceptional dry seasons, which may reasonably be expected, and for which it should be the object of the Town Council to provide"

In 1892 smallpox was present, many children, and parents who could, went away, others were re-vaccinated. With the turn of the century came measles and influenza, the latter was exceptionally severe in 1915 and 1919 when the Baptismal Register for St Patrick's Church records young babies being baptised by the Nurse. Then in the 1920's after the closure of the Dockyard the area was hit with a diphtheria epidemic - The old offices of the Shipbuilding Company by Jacob's Pill being used as an isolation Hospital. After that time these scourges seem to have been less violent, probably because of better health care and an improved water supply.

Railway

Originally Brunel planned to lay his main railway line to the small village of Fishguard, on the north coast of the county, while to serve the southern parts a branch was planned from near Whitland to the town of Pembroke. Tenby was then little more than a village, but this too was to be served by a branch line connecting with the Pembroke line.

The Irish potato famine of 1846, coupled with a general trade depression, caused the company to reconsider its proposals, and after several changes of plan it was decided to proceed with the main line, but to take it through the county town of Haverfordwest to Neyland, where a harbour was to be built on the shores of Milford Haven. There was, at that time, no provision made for a line to the south part of the Haven

The line reached Haverfordwest in January 1854, and the extension to Neyland was opened on 15th April 1856, harbour works being established there as planned. The new terminus at Neyland was named New Milford by the SWR, and remained the Irish port of the GWR until the building of Fishguard Harbour in 1906,

In 1853 the SWR obtained an Act to build a line to the south of the county serving the holiday resort of Tenby and the dockyard town of Pembroke Dock terminating at Pennar Gut but no work was carried out

In 1859 a Company was formed the South Wales, Pembroke and Tenby Junction Railway and an Act of Parliament to build was obtained on 21st July 1859

The title was later shortened to Pembroke & Tenby Railway. The intention was to link Pembroke Dock, Pembroke and Tenby with Brunel's line near Narberth and Mr J S Surke was appointed Engineer. The intention was to build a standard gauge line rather than broad gauge

It was two years before the company was able to raise sufficient capital to start the work David Davies a reputable contractor who had worked on what was later called the Cambrian Railway formed a partnership with Ezra Roberts, to construct the line for £106,000. The agreement was signed on 4th July 1862, with a completion date of 21st July 1864. Construction started in September 1862

The stretch between Pembroke and Tenby was completed by 30th July 1863 with the first train to Pembroke departed at 7.30 a.m, the final train of the day left Pembroke at 9.10 p.m.

There was a coach connection from Pembroke station to Hobbs Point where passengers could board the ferry Neyland and the SWR terminal.

Work was in progress on extending the line to Pembroke Dock and on by the end of December 1863 a breakthrough had been achieved in the tunnel between Pembroke and Pembroke Dock however it took some time before work on the tunnel was completed.

The first station at Pembroke Dock was near the route to Hobbs Point and remains can be found between the Co-operative filling station and Lidl's store. The first train reached Pembroke Dock on 9th August 1864

From the first the line proved profitable In 1865 the present Pembroke Dock station was opened and became the largest station on the line with two platforms, a turntable and loco shed

An Act of Parliament was obtained in June 1864 to extend the line from Tenby to Whitland and work started in August 1864, The contract for £200,000 was again awarded to Davies & Roberts.

Work included a siding to Moreton Colliery enabling coal to be transported to Pembroke and Pembroke The official opening took place on 4th September 1866. Because of the differences in gauges of the two railway systems it was not possible to physically link the two systems.

By 1st June 1868 the GWR had converted one line from Whitland to Carmathen from broad gauge to the standard gauge and goods trains started to use this new section. Passenger traffic was allowed from August 1869

Pembroke & Tenby trains could now use the GWR station at Whitland where arrival and departure bay platforms were provided for their use.

Not long after the opening of the line to Whitland that their Lordships approached the P&T with regard to extending the line into the Dockyard, agreement was reached and an Act of Parliament of 1870 authorised the construction of the line, to run from the Railway station, through the town into the Dockyard where sidings were to be constructed. This involved the demolition of some of the properties in the town. The new extension was worked and maintained by the Pembroke and Tenby Railway Company and carried coal, iron steel and timber for the Dockyard

. In 1891 the Admiralty decided to purchase the line and work it themselves, paying the Railway company £23000

In 1926 the Royal Dockyard Pembroke Dock closed and the rail traffic through the town for a time ceased only to start again on a smaller scale with the re-opening up of the area as a RAF seaplane base.

After the closing of the Seaplane base in 1955 the extension fell into disuse and in 1969 the connection with Pembroke dock railway station was taken up and in subsequent years much of the old track removed.

Originally the Pembroke and Tenby Railway company intended to build a wharf at Hobbs Point and in 1868 authority was given for this line, and a wharf as well as permission to dredge. The Railway line which opened in 1872 ran from the original terminus to a stone-built wharf jutting out into the Haven, Sidings were laid out and a wagon turntable built. There were three steam cranes and the majority of the freight using the line was coal shipments which were transferred to lighters. Later freight for the army garrison at Llanion was carried but with the closing to the Barracks this trade ceased and the track also removed in 1969

Negotiations began in 1894 to sell the line to the GWR and a lease was signed effected from 1st July 1896, and Pembroke & Tenby Railway ceased to exist from 1st July 1897. In 1902 Pembroke Dock Railway station had a new turntable installed as well as new sidings and signal box. Before the First World war there were six passenger trains a day in each direction between Pembroke Dock and Whitland as well as goods trains. In 1905 a halt was opened at Llanion. There were further extensions in 1942 to cope with the military traffic

In 1953 the Pembroke Coast Express was introduced, a daily service between Pembroke Dock and Paddington

In the winter of 1963 a new service of diesel multiple units was introduced running between Whitland and Pembroke Dock with no through trains from Paddington. Brin Hall (Councillor Brian Hall's father) was the engine driver of the last steam passenger train out of Pembroke Dock on Sunday 8th September departing at 5.55pm. With the departure of the steam trains came the closure of Pembroke Dock loco shed and one of the platforms.

End of the Dockyard Era

Over the course of the century Pembroke Dock's population grew far outstripping the neighbouring town of Pembroke. It had a very mixed population in terms of origin in that while a large part of it was drawn from the locality - born and bred Pembrokeshire people - there were significant numbers of families from much further afield, particularly those with craft skills who had come from other dockyards in Britain, and those who were billeted at the barracks and remained.

1914 However, all was not well in 1914, when the centenary of the town was marked by a programme of celebrations, which included the unveiling of a monument in Albion Square on 15 July.

It seemed likely to many that Pembroke Dock would join what was to become a very large band of towns in Britain which had experienced sustained investment and development in the nineteenth century but, faced with changed circumstances in the twentieth century, were, sooner or later, to decline. Fundamental changes were occurring in the British fleet which were to have severe repercussions locally. Large dreadnought battleships came into favour and supplanted the lighter gunboats and smaller vessels associated with Pembroke Dock. The facilities of the old dockyard were inadequate to handle these new battleships, and the Royal Navy looked to its own and other commercial yards elsewhere.

Encouraged by the Great War, there was a continuing - albeit smaller - demand for cruisers and a call for submarines, to which Pembroke Dock responded, but that was a short-lived fillip to its fortunes.

1925 The announcement was made on 2 September 1925 that the dockyard would close and, despite protests and deputation's, the closure order was implemented the following year. The impact was considerable - the raison d'être of the settlement had been eliminated.

The closing of the Yard in 1926 hit Pembroke Dock hard. Many of the skilled craftsmen left the area, unemployment was rife and there was less opportunity for the trade training of the young men of the area as well as the loss of the educational excellence of the Royal Dockyard School. Even before that time the reduction in employment had been so drastic that the Mayor had organised events such as half a mile of pennies and Fete's and Gala's to raise money for the unemployment fund

Some skilled tradesmen were taken on by other dockyards while many others drifted away in search of work.

Amongst those who remained, unemployment was rife, for there was no real substitute for the dockyard. Partial salvation came in the early 1930s with the establishment of an RAF flying-boat base there. But, even in 1937, the number of insured persons registered at the Labour Exchange was 2,590 and of these 53.7 per cent were unemployed. The whole town had looked to the Dockyard and only three areas in South Wales had higher percentages of unemployment

The New Era

Fortunately, the military presence was retained, and strengthened in one respect with the conversion of the eastern part of the yard into a flying boat base by the Royal Air Force in 1930.

Lord Haw Haw

The town attracted one visitor who we probably could have done without. He stayed awhile was the German Spy William Joyce (Lord Haw Haw) who lodged at 26 London Rd. How much knowledge of the towns capabilities and lack of defences did he pass on and how many died because of the knowledge he gained. He lodged overlooking the main road into the town and near the entrance to Llanion Barracks. The old dockyard being converted to an RAF flying base was clearly visible as was the massive tank farm at Pennar and there were little or no defences. At the Flying Boats Photographic exhibitions we saw many examples of the detailed aerial maps that were supplied to German aircrew.

The Second World War consolidated the town's military role with all of the armed services using it as a base or as a fuel depot. This military function was a double-edged sword for it attracted the attention of the German airforce, and the town and its fuel tanks suffered badly from bombing. Pembroke Dock, with Swansea and Cardiff, was repeatedly and savagely attacked by the Luftwaffe. The war left the town with many scars; 122 houses were not rebuilt out of 203 severely damaged by bombing. Considerable repair work was carried out with the help of the War Damage Commission

Royal Air Force

A portent of the military flying use of the Haven came in May 1912, when the Royal Navy brought a unique monoplane to Dale. This was the Burney X2, an advanced design equipped with hydrofoils. Tests were carried out through out the summer in the sheltered Haven waters, these coming to a premature end in September when the aeroplane, with Lieutenant G. Bentley Darce in the cockpit, stalled and crashed while being towed aloft, happily without injury to Darce. The following summer an improved version, the X3, was brought to Dale and initial tests proved satisfactory. However, while engaged in taxiing trials the X3 was wrecked on a Haven sandbank, so effectively ending these experiments - the first recorded uses of the Haven for military aviation. The outbreak of war in August 1914 brought a new menace to the fore, namely, the efficient and ruthless German U-Boat fleet which had great success against Britain's maritime trade. To counter this major threat and to protect the merchantmen - and later the convoys - close to shore, air stations were set up all around the British coast. Pembrokeshire, strategically located at the junction of some of the most vital sea trade routes, was well placed to provide a measure of protection to shipping, and the war years saw the establishment of two Royal Naval Air Stations within the County's boundary.

MAS Pembroke 1916

First to be set up was the air station at Sageston, near Milton - this became known as MAS Pembroke - and it provided much needed air cover over the south-western approaches.

1916 Initially equipped only with airships, the station became operational in early 1916, the first ascent being made on 25 April by Commander Fuller as observer and Midshipman Colson as pilot. MAS Pembroke operated various types of non-rigid 'blimps', the first Submarine Scout (SS) type being equipped with an aircraft fuselage slung underneath as accommodation for the crew of two. Later, the more efficient and better equipped Coastal type airships - with twin engines and a purpose built 'car' for the crew of three - were introduced at the station.

1917 land planes were added to the complement, the first flight being made by Sub Lieutenant Allaway on 29 April in a Sopwith 12 Strutter biplane. Allaway became a casualty later in the year, lost on a flight from the station, and there were also losses among the airships, both aloft and on the ground.

The second air station was established at Fishguard in 1917 and operated seaplanes - initially Fairey Hamble Babies and Short 184s - on similar patrols. Attacks on U-Boats were made by aircraft from both stations and in May 1918 Pembroke's airships flew 15,000 miles of patrols. An additional type of aircraft was introduced at Pembroke in 1918, namely, DH6 training machines which, although unarmed, added to the deterrent against the U-Boats. MAS Pembroke had a complement of over 400, plus a contingent of some fifty women personnel. With the Armistice, both Pembrokeshire air stations were run down and subsequently closed, but it was not until March 1920 that the last servicemen left the Pembroke station. The site returned to agriculture, only to be re-claimed for service use as another great war loomed less than twenty years later.

Military Aviation post World War 1

During the lean post-war years of the 1920s Pembrokeshire saw little aviation activity, the occasional flights through to the newly-independent Ireland providing some local interest. As the decade progressed speculation grew locally on the use of the sheltered Milford Haven waters for military 'sea planes', this term being used instead of the more correct flying-boat.

1925 Pointers to the future came in September 1925 when one of the first of the Royal Air Force's new Southampton twin-engined flying-boats visited Pembroke Dock on trials. After leaving the Haven the flying-boat forced landed in the sea off Ireland and had to be towed into Belfast.

1927 In November 1927, the West Wales Guardian was confidently predicting that in the near future a seaplane base would be established at Pembroke Dock with a RAF strength of about a 1,000, speculation fuelled by the arrival of flying-boats on exercise that same month and in June the following year.

1929 County MP. Major C.W.M. Price, in the House of Commons in March 1929, prompted the Financial Secretary to the Admiralty to disclose that negotiations were in progress for the transfer of the Dockyard from the Admiralty to the RAF.

The Air Base question rumbled on in the newspapers throughout 1929, it becoming something of a local issue in the General Election in which Major Price was defeated by Major Gwilym Lloyd George. The new M.P- warned in the August that "the civilian population (of Pembroke Dock) will not find compensating employment in the substitution of the air base for the Dockyard".

1930 The local Press quoted the Observer in April as saying "Pembroke Dockyard will henceforth be an RAF station .. The Air Ministry will use the place as a base for flying-boats and seaplanes".

1930, April the new RAF Pembroke Dock station was established under the RAF's Coastal Area. The embryo station had an engineering officer, Flight Lieutenant Bill Liniker, as its first CO. A small contingent of RAF airmen, several RAF Police and Air Ministry officials made up the rest of the RAF's initial presence. From these small beginnings RAF Pembroke Dock was to develop into a major flying-boat station, responsible for guarding the vitally important Western Approaches to Britain. The neutrality of Eire meant that the vital trade routes had to be protected from the western seaboard of Britain, and Pembroke Dock and the Haven Waterway proved to be ideal for the operation of flying-boats. Conditions were primitive and accommodation for the men was initially found in the dirty and derelict sail loft. With true service ingenuity the airmen soon made themselves at home and the town of Pembroke Dock - so hard hit by the closure of the Dockyard - welcomed its new service residents with open arms.

1931 Pembrokeshire s Press, quoting no less an authority than a June 1931, issue of the London Times, reported that a flying-boat squadron, No. 210, had been 'temporarily removed from Felixstowe, Suffolk, to Pembroke Dock where it will be based until 30th September

1931 June a newly-formed squadron, No 210, moved from Felixstowe to Pembroke Dock, bringing two Southamptons to the Haven. These were permanently moored off the station as there were no slipway facilities to bring the machines ashore. The temporary nature of 210's move became permanent late in the year and Wing Commander Robert Leckie, a pilot with a distinguished war record from the 1914-18 conflict, assumed command of both the squadron and the station This squadron was to look upon Pembroke Dock as its main 'home base' for more than a decade, finally bidding farewell to the West Wales RAF Station in the dark days of 1943.

1931 March 1931, figures were being quoted, £107,000 for the accommodation of flying-boats at Pembroke Dock. The 'Labour Notes' column in the Guardian commented: "The sum is not a large one to a town that has been used to receiving £200,000 a year from the Admiralty, but the really important point about it is that this is a beginning".

When the main contingent of No- 210 Squadron arrived in June it was met at the railway station by a large number of town's people, anxious to see the new men in blue. The RAF, as with all servicemen, soon settled into their new surroundings, forming sports teams and beginning a series of dances at the Temperance Hall. These were immediately popular, attracting patrons in their hundreds, with the Arcadian Dance Band (directed by Roy Roberts) providing the music.

1932 No. 210 Squadron's 'temporary stay was, in January 1932 made permanent and soon afterwards the unique floating dock, used for maintenance of flying-boats on the water, was towed into the Haven. It was to be a feature of the waterway for over six years.

1932 September, the Guardian was able to report that tenders were being invited for new barrack blocks at the station, This work requiring considerable demolition of old Dockyard buildings The much-needed slipway was built the following year and the first of the huge hangars, was to rise above the waterfront soon after.

There was a gradual rise in the numbers of personnel at the station which in its early years, was commanded successively by:-

Wing Commander Bob Leckie, Wing Commander Arthur Harris (Later famous as Bomber Harris) and Wing Commander R.H. Kershaw.

1934 May Pembroke Dock's first Empire Air Day was held at the RAF Station and attracted a very encouraging attendance of over 5,000

1935 Singapores and Southamptons took part in the 1935 Empire air Day attended by 2,000 people, the floating dock being one of the main attractions. The long-promised second squadron, No. 230, had by now joined 210, but the new unit was soon to leave, ultimately for the Far East, and towards the end of the year only one flying-boat remained at PD.

1936 With war clouds looming on the European horizon the pace of activity quickened at RAF Pembroke Dock with much building work being carried out. Late 1936 saw the emergence of No.

228 Squadron, a unit which was to be long associated with PD. Also 'back in commission in 1937 was the Dockyard Chapel located within the RAF station and which was to become well-known to thousands of servicemen as the Garrison Theatre. The church had been closed since 1926.

1937 Empire Air Day attracted between 4,000 and 5,000 people, many of them travelling in the 500 cars which passed through the Dockyard gates.

1937 August Caledonia, one of the first of the Empire Class of flying-boats, touched down on the Haven during a proving flight around the U. K. The large metal Seaplane was the forerunner of her military sister, the Sunderland, which itself was soon to make a maiden flight. Caledonia made PD's biplane flying-boats look old fashioned.

1938 March the Guardian reported the arrival of four of the latest type of flying-boats Supermarine Stranraers for No. 228 Squadron.

1938 Empire Day first Sunderland, which had been at Pembroke Dock during the previous week, returned to the station on Air Day morning and took off and landed several times.

The Air Day Sunderland left PD soon after and was delivered to No. 230 Squadron in Singapore, on the way breaking all records for the flight.

1938 September A Sunderland of No. 210 Squadron crashed in the Haven with the loss of two lives. Later that year the Commanding Officer of 210, Wing Commander W. N. Plenderleith, collapsed and died suddenly age of 39. The military funeral was held at Llanion Cemetery.

1939 Empire Air Day the Sunderland and one of the RAF new eight gun fighters - the Hurricane - stole the show. The Hurricane approaching from the Llanion Barracks direction, "roared low over the station at over 300 m.p.h., and then a few minutes later returned at its lowest safe speed .. Many spectators would have liked to have seen more of this plane ." reported the Guardian.

1939 June the Press recorded that "the new wireless station near Imble Lane is nearly completed. The towering pylon have had lighting equipment fixed and can now be seen for miles on both day and night", just in time as in September war was declared.

8th September 1939

Afar so many days of tension the announcement on Sunday morning did not come as a surprise. So reflected the West Wales Guardian of 8th September 1939 as Pembroke and Pembroke Dock geared themselves for war.

1939 September 18th RAF Pembroke Dock's first fatal wartime Sunderland night time crash of the 210 Squadron aircraft on 18th September was not reported at all because of censorship, but the succession of funerals with full military honours at Llanion Cemetery, were reported in the Press.

1939 October. Rescue of the 34 man crew of the steamship, Kensington Court, in October 1939. Two Sunderlands landed in the open sea to pick up the crew from a lifeboat, after the vessel had been shelled by a German U-Boat, the pilots Flight Lieutenants Thurston Smith (228 Squadron) and Jackie Barrett (204 Squadron), were awarded D.F.C.s.

1939 December 200 Australian airmen who arrived at the RAF Station PD to join the new Aussie-manned Sunderland 10 squadron.

"Gee, it's cold in this place' said one Aussie . ' we don't mind the rain but this frost, ugh! .. 'Then there's this crook blackout -that's one of our grouses', commented another. 'But for all that I sampled a few of the 'beauties' of the locality these last few nights".

The declaration of war on 3 September 1939 saw RAF Pembroke Dock already on a war-footing, its Sunderlands engaged on patrols to protect the newly-organised convoys. Pembroke Dock was no longer Pembrokeshire's only air base; just five miles to the east the former World War One airship station at Milton was being hastily transformed into RAF Carew Cheriton. This was the first of several land stations to be built within the county during the war years. Yet, for all its military importance, the Haven - with its flying boats, naval base, fishing fleet and convoy assembly point - was totally undefended. No anti-aircraft guns were in position locally as the war progressed to its first anniversary, a fact cruelly exposed by the Luftwaffe

1940 19 August three Junkers Ju88 dive bombers flew with impunity up the Haven and bombed the Admiralty oil tanks at Llanreath. The resulting conflagration was the largest oil fire ever seen in Britain, and cost the lives of four firemen as it raged for many days. WW2

Quote from Churchill's Speech on the Eire Bill May 5 1938

" If we are denied Berehaven and Queenstown, and have to work from Pembroke Dock, we would strike 400 miles from their effective radius out and home. These ports are, in fact, the sentinel towers of the western approaches, by which the 45,000,000 people in this Island so enormously depend on foreign food for their daily bread, and by which they can carry on their trade, which is equally important to their existence.

The Navy still retained a small presence at the Yard and combined with Fliers from all over the world and Army Barracks at Llanion and Pennar, Pembroke Dock had a very busy and cosmopolitan war.

Wartime was also unkind to the town. The Luftwaffe found Pembroke Dock to be both a prime and easy target, and during August 1940 the oil tanks at Llanreath were bombed, starting one of the most serious oil fires ever witnessed in Britain. Many civilian casualties were suffered, and the housing stock was severely affected with over 200 houses destroyed.

The town was the main Atlantic Sunderland flying boat base plus part of the dockyard used for ship repairs Atlantic convoys assembled much minelaying, minesweeping, and escort work co-ordinated from Dockyard HQ. It is estimated that some 17,000-cargo vessels sailed from Haven It was also an important storage fuel storage depot and had sizeable garrison which attracted enemy bombing attacks causing great destruction and loss of life in the town particularly between July 1940 and June 1941

About 2 o'clock on Friday July 5th, 1940, the air raid siren sounded in Pembroke Dock. It was the first air raid warning to be sounded in earnest, the vast majority of people seemed convinced that Pembrokeshire would never hear a bomb explode. The West Wales Guardian stated:- "On a certain afternoon recently an air raid warning was sounded in a certain town". At the time there was no reason to think the siren was anything other than a genuine warning of the approach of enemy aircraft. From early July, 1940, until June, 1941, Pembrokeshire was subjected to many air raids. Throughout the period Pembroke Dock was the centre of the attack. The damage inflicted in Pembroke Dock was as great as that in any blitzed town in the country, every house in the place was damaged to some extent, while the death roll for one raid was as high in proportion as that of most of the big towns. On Wednesday, July 10th, 1940, at precisely 10.12 a.m. without any warning, the whole town was rocked by a terrific explosion. Then, at 10.20, all speculation was ended-by the sounding of the siren in the R.A.F. Station. It was an air raid all right. A few minutes later the raider came in again across the town. There it was for all to see, a big, black Junkers 88, flying from east to west, high. During the next few minutes there were further explosions. Some ten minutes later the Junkers flew away down south to return to its base, where, according to a later German news bulletin, the pilot reported "a heavy raid on Pembroke where large fires were started. The first bomb which so shook the town, fell in the harbour between Neyland and Pembroke Dock. The ferry-boat with a full complement of passengers had just passed within a few yards of where the bomb hit the water! People at Hobbs Point and the Neyland pontoon were dazed by the explosion. The other bombs, four or five in number and of smaller calibre, fell in and around Llanreath. The enemy was evidently after the oil tanks and, one bomb found its mark but it was a dud.

The anti-aircraft defences in Pembrokeshire were almost non-existent and that the system of warning was to take many months to become efficient.

On Monday, July 15th, 1940, the enemy made his second visit. Shortly after noon a 'plane could be heard, flying very high, but, if it was the enemy, it must have continued on its way, for the all-clear went without event. An hour afterwards, however, when most people had just finished their lunch, a noisy 'plane was heard coming in low across the town, followed in a few seconds by three or four explosions in quick succession. The bombs had exploded and the intruder was well on his way out of the locality before the siren was heard, and then it was the siren belonging to the R.A.F. The town's public siren came into its own half-an-hour later to sound the all-clear.

The bombs fell in the field by the Birdcage Walk and did no damage; they were probably aimed at the railway bridge over Ferry Lane or at the railway line itself.

At the meetings of the Borough Council demands were made for defences for the area and for the scheduling of Pembroke Dock as a danger zone so that Anderson shelters could be obtained with Government assistance. Because of the tremendous losses at Dunkirk the whole country, including was practically defenceless; it was decided to urge the County Council to delegate powers to the local authority so that the matter of air raid shelters, etc., could be proceeded with without delay. It was also decided that Mr. Kavanagh, the engineer, should carry out an inspection of houses for the purpose of strengthening domestic air raid shelters.

On July 22nd, a week after the attempted bombing (presumably) of the Ferry Lane railway bridge, the ex-dockyard town experienced its first night raid. It was a Monday night, according to one report, at least eighteen bombs were dropped that night. One bomb dropped between Front Street and the dockyard railway causing a great deal of damage in nearby houses. A large, gaping hole was blasted in the dividing wall between two houses in Front Street. In the house most damaged the family with friends, numbering nine altogether, sheltered beneath the staircase while the building tottered about them. They escaped unhurt.

Another bomb came down between King Street and the railway and a third exploded in the gardens between Market Street and Pembroke Street. Other bombs fell in the Haven, some near the R.N. Mines Depot, and two at Hobbs Point; five exploded between Carew and Cosheston; four at West Williamston; another behind Lawrenny Castle, and two on Mr. Rock's farm at Waterston.

After the first night raid people began to go out of the town to sleep. It started in a small way but as the raids grew in severity developed into a veritable exodus until in May, 1941. In August, the then Fire Chief, Mr. Arthur Morris, reported to the Council that five members of the Auxiliary Fire Service had failed to turn out upon a "red" message. Four of the men appeared before the Council and three gave explanations, which were accepted. The fourth said he had to see that his wife and children were all right. He also contended that there was insufficient protection and said frankly he was not prepared to turn out in a raid. His resignation and that of the fifth fireman, who wrote that his wife had collapsed when the warning was given, were accepted.

At a meeting of the County Council on 23rd July, the programme for the construction of public air raid shelters in the county was presented and approved. This provided hope to Pembroke Dock people as there was concern at the absence of public shelters. At one meeting of the Borough Council early in August the complaint was made that public shelters were almost complete in raid-free Haverfordwest while in Pembroke and Pembroke Dock they had hardly been started.

The next raid was just over a week later. There was a hit and run raid on August 1st by a lone 'plane which dropped ten bombs across Llanion Barracks. Although the bombs fell right across the barracks, surprisingly little damage was done. One bomb, however, killed a soldier. The unfortunate soldier, twenty-year-old Ronald Johnston, of Manchester, was standing up at the time and was struck in the stomach by a piece of shrapnel. This was the first fatal casualty to have occurred by enemy action in the county.

Pembroke Dock had not been deemed worthy of much consideration in the country's defence arrangements or even of a mention in the national news bulletins-until on Monday, August 19th, a German 'plane flew up the harbour and dropped a bomb plumb on one of the Llanreath oil tanks. Two local children living in Bufferland actually waved to the pilot whom they could see and whom they believe waved back. The blaze, which followed, was one of the biggest in the history of Britain and consequently anti-aircraft guns began to arrive in the locality and barrage balloons appeared in the sky over Pembroke Dock. The raid occurred about 3.15 on the Monday afternoon and was made by three aircraft. They flew up the harbour very low and in quite leisurely fashion, turning south before reaching Pembroke Dock and then coming in again to approach the tanks from the direction of Monkton.

Workmen engaged on trenching around the tanks looked up at the approaching `planes and thought they were British. Then the bomber dived in and the men ran for shelter. Firebombs were dropped and a hit was obtained on a tank holding 12,000 tons of oil. A great tongue of flame shot up and clouds of black, thick, oily smoke billowed high into the sky. Within seconds it was obvious for many miles around that the tanks were burning. The flames and smoke could be seen from as far away as Haverfordwest. The workmen escaped without injury, the only initial was Mr. Fred Phillips, who was treated for shock. The people living in Military Road right alongside the tanks had a severe fright and worse was to come as the wind carried flames and great volumes of smoke in the direction of their homes.

The walls of some of the houses became too hot to touch and the oil-laden smoke percolated into many rooms leaving a trail of ruin. Some of the residents of Military Rd and Owen St worried that the fire would spread during the night and set the street alight took to leaving their houses when darkness fell and snatching as much sleep as they could out on the Barrack Hill.

Very soon after the attack the Pembroke Dock Fire Brigade was on the scene under Mr. Arthur Morris, tackled what they knew was going to be a formidable task with insufficient resources. . The Pembroke and Pembroke Dock brigades were largely responsible for preventing the flames spreading to the nearby houses. .Help was requested from all parts of the country and brigades from many areas came to join in the fight.

Acc to Mr Richards

The tanks fire raged in full fury for eighteen days. During that period over six hundred firemen from all parts of the country fought the flames; eleven tanks each with a capacity of 12,000 tons were destroyed; and firemen lost their lives; the enemy made further savage but fruitless attacks, and the whole town and countryside bore traces of oil carried by the smoke which billowed far and wide. Auxiliary firemen from all parts of the county were on the scene a few hours after the attack and within the next two or three days they were re-enforced by brigades from Carmarthen, Swansea, Cardiff, Bristol, Birmingham, Newport and other parts of the country. Altogether twenty-two brigades took part in the colossal task. These men faced one of the grimmest fights of their lives. No battlefield ever presented a more ghastly picture. Flames sprang hundreds of feet into the air and, every few minutes, shot outwards treacherously from the tanks in great enveloping sheets; the heat was overpowering and the smoke blinding, choking, stupefying. Yet the firemen stuck to their task, and in that terrible holocaust sweated and strained until at last, at long last, they got control of the great conflagration. Even on the eighteenth day, when success was in sight, the pumps broke down and an alarming situation developed for several hours. A tank collapsed causing a terrific flare-up which led to the explosion of an adjoining tank. Eventually, when the oil became exhausted the flames died down and at last the fire was under control.

Five firemen lost their lives all belonging to the Cardiff Brigade. They were Clifford Mills (31), 118 Brunswick Street, Canton, a son of Mr. Jack Mills, the Welsh Rugby Union referee; Frederick George Davies (31), 6 Llanbradach Street; Ivor John Kilby (29), 44 Gelligaer Street; Trevor Charles Morgan (31), 46 Mey Street, and John Frederick Thomas (30), Elaine Street. These men were working a jet on the tanks just after 1 p.m. on 22nd August, when a large burst of flame enveloped them. Capt. Tom Breakes, Chief Inspector of the Fire Brigades Division of the Home Office, who was standing twenty feet behind the men, stated afterwards that when he last saw them they were trying to retreat. The spurt of flame was caused by a big quantity of oil escaping from the tank where the heat had caused the metal wall to become soft and burst.

On the Tuesday morning less than twenty-four hours after the blaze had been started a German `plane dived through the pall of thick black smoke and dropped four bombs. Fortunately the bombs exploding half a mile away. A few minutes later the `plane returned and machine gunned the firemen. There was a stampede for safety, most of the firemen diving beneath the fire engines. A dozen men crouching beneath one engine saw a large number of holes appear in a piece of zinc lying a few feet from them. The zinc had been completely riddled with machine-gun bullets! One fireman was taken to hospital with an injury which was not serious.

On Wednesday, the third day of the fire, an enemy machine approached Pembroke Dock from the south-west but three Spitfires went up to intercept and it was driven off. Again, two days later the enemy was in the vicinity but due to our fighter interception no raid developed. . On the night of Saturday, August 24th, bombs were dropped and caused damage to hose lines and appliances. There were also some minor casualties but no serious interruption of operations

There were air raids on the town on September 1 st and 2nd but no attempt was made to bomb the tanks.

Of the seventeen tanks at Llanreath, holding approximately 45,000,000 gallons of oil, eleven were destroyed, representing a loss of 33,000,000 gallons. The twenty-two brigades in attendance used 600 men, 53 pumps, nine miles of hose and 2,000 gallons of water per minute. Feeding the men during the eighteen days cost £840. Apart from the five fatal casualties, the numbers receiving treatment were as follows:-

Serious cases treated in hospital, 38;
minor cases (mostly eyes), 241;
burns to the hands, face and neck, 180;
sprains and strains, 12;
septic feet, 2;
foot treatment {due to oil entering boots), 560;
cuts and abrasions, 22;
gastric cases, 13-
a total of 1,153.

Every man who helped to fight that fire was a hero; certain it is that they all shared the tremendous hazards and they all contributed to the splendid combined effort which saved eight oil tanks and possibly a part of the town from destruction. Who, then, decided that certain Firemen's services were more valuable than others, that their bravery was greater, that their daring was more glorious Who decided that George Medals should be awarded to a handful of firemen out of the six hundred If awards for gallantry had to be made in connection with such an epic battle action -for such it was - the only fair way to have done it would have been to present the chief officer of each brigade engaged with a medal in recognition of the services of his unit. It was no wonder that the deepest dissatisfaction was occasioned locally when the tank fire awards were announced later on.

Pembroke, evidently unable to pull the right strings, received no recognition, but a George Medal and a British Empire Medal went to Milford Haven. The indignation of Pembroke and Pembroke Dock people was expressed on all sides and in no uncertain terms, especially with regard to the B.E.M. award to a Milford official who, it was alleged, spent only a short time at the scene of the fire. There was an insistent demand for recognition for Pembroke's Fire Chief Mr. Arthur Morris, and there is no doubt that if anyone was deserving of a medal it was Mr. Morris who, with his men, was the first on the scene, and did not go to bed for seventeen days. All who were there agreed that he worked without relaxation and regardless of personal risk, setting a splendid example to all. Yet all he received was some minor certificate commending him for his gallantry. Those who attended a special meeting of the Pembroke Borough Council a week after the tanks were bombed will never forget the appearance of Mr. Morris, who took an hour off from his grim task to report to the Council. Beneath the grime which he had not had time to wash off, his pale, drawn face, told eloquently of the ordeal the men were suffering. He was unshaven and his eyes were heavy and red-rimmed. As the meeting progressed it was noticed that on several occasions he almost fell asleep. Next to the yeoman service of the firemen, perhaps the greatest feature of the historic fire was the magnificent response of the townspeople and members of the Civil Defence Services to the needs of the unprecedented emergency. Wherever one turned men and women of Pembroke Dock were giving their services eagerly -providing accommodation for the firemen, helping feed them, wash them, dress their burns and provide them with a score of needs. There were ample gifts of towels, soap clothes, linen, etc., while some ladies, mostly those of the local Red Cross Detachment and St. John Ambulance Nursing Division, spent hour after hour, day and night, carrying out first-aid work at St. Patrick's Schoolroom, They were described as Angels of Mercy, which, indeed, they were, The following message which the officer in charge of the Bristol contingent asked the Guardian to publish at the time provides an indication of how much the local people's efforts from Bristol feel. "The reception we had and the attentions which have been showered upon us by you wonderful people have really been stupendous. When we left Bristol we knew we were going to a difficult and dangerous task. We expected that we would have to endure all kinds of hardships, that we would have to sleep out 'on the job' in all sorts of conditions and that we would have to exist on the iron rations which we had with us. Instead, we were given the most overwhelming hospitality. Everything was done for us, we were given every comfort and the good ladies even went so far as to bathe our feet. In all our experience we have never known such kindness and we do ask you to accept thanks which come from the very bottom of our hearts".

A memorial service to the five unfortunate men was held in St, Patrick's Church, within a few hundred yards of the blazing inferno, on the following Sunday. There was a large attendance of firemen and of Pembroke Dock people, who felt deeply the loss of the five brave men.

Tank Fire Memorial

On August 19th, 1940, the oil tanks at Pennar were attacked by Junkers 88s, starting a huge fire which burned for 17 days and left a pall of thick oily smoke over the town.

55 years later in August 1995 a memorial was unveiled to the five Cardiff firemen who lost their lives fighting the fire on Friday 23rd August 1940 on the site of the tank farm. The names were:-

Fredrick George Davies age 31

Ivor John Kilby age 29

Clifford Mills age 31

Trevor Charles Morgan age 31

John Fredrick Thomas age 30.

Vemon Scott has described this event graphically in his book Infemo 1940. Pennar was heavily involved many houses were destroyed or damaged, Both the School and the Church Hall where occupied by Firemen fighting the fires at the tanks despite the fact that if the Germans attacked either of those buildings there were no Air Raid Shelters at the time although part of the room underneath the stage at the Church hall was reinforced so as to provide some sort of shelter. In fact when the school classes did resume the senior pupils attended in the mornings and the junior's in the afternoon because of lack of Shelters, although a committee had attended the school to consider plans for shelters on September 25th 1939.

Despite several Air Raid alerts the shelters were not completed till February 1941 and for the next few months, until May, pupils spent much time in those shelters, After the bombing of the Town on May 12th the school was closed for 6 weeks. Attacks and alerts continued for quite a period with many houses damaged, people killed and children having to be evacuated.

Another author W L Richards gives a very detailed description of these events in his book Pembrokeshire Under Fire.

On May 12th the following year, 33 people lost their lives and 21 were injured in a savage raid on the town with the streets of Gwyther, Laws, Bush, Market and Melville being the worst hit. Indeed, up to May 1943, Pembroke Dock had 253 air raid warnings and 19 bombings.

The war years saw the town packed with personnel from all three Services and of many nationalities, including the Dutch Australians, Canadians, New Zealanders

And, with the war came new and strict regulations over and above the blackout. One who fell foul of these was keen amateur photographer Albert Williams, of Chapel Street, Hakin, Milford Haven, who in May 1940, was fined £3 for 'making a photograph of a seaplane without a permit from the Secretary of State for War'. Mr. Williams got off lightly, he could have been fined up to £100 or gone to prison for three months!

Also before the courts in that momentous summer of 1940 was a 16 year-old youth who on a June Sunday had persisted in a story that he had seen two parachutists land near Trewent, Freshwater East. This had resulted in all the defence forces in the county being called out. The un-named lad was fined £3 and "severely" reprimanded.

From the skies in 1940 came danger for Pembrokeshire and Pembroke Dock in particular. Veiled stories in the local Press of air raids over a town in West Wales' or 'a dock town' were all that was allowed, but they were the forerunners of much more dramatic incidents and indeed Pembroke Dock's most testing ordeal.

The Western Telegraph headlined 'Dock Attacked by Bombers -One Tank Set on Fire' over its lengthy report of the 19th August, 1940, raid when oil tanks at Llanreath were set ablaze by Junkers Ju 88s. The 'dock' location was not mentioned, but the towering pall of black oily smoke over South Pembrokeshire testified to the success of the raid and the intensity of the huge fire.

Oil Investigation Tank Fire 1940. Pembroke,

INTERIM REPORT.

INTRODUCTION.

This interim report is issued at the request of the farmers and others concerned. It will be appreciated that no scientific investigation can be conducted to a time-table; and in this particular instance, the unprecedented nature of the case has necessitated a more than usual amount of specialised and prolonged study.

From the strictly scientific and academic points of view the investigation is not yet concluded, but it is considered that sufficient data have been collected to justify the issue of this interim statement.

HISTORY.

The tanks were bombed at 3 p.m. on the 19th August, 1940; the fire resulting therefrom burned for 18 days being extinguished on September 5th. From August 19th to August 24th, the direction of the wind varied between north and north-west, with the result that oil and smoke were carried, and deposited over, a belt of land extending across south Pembrokeshire in a south-westerly direction. This area (which will be referred to as the "oil belt") was comparatively well defined, and measured approximately 6 miles in length by 1 1/2 to 2 miles in width.

In the oil belt, buildings, agricultural machinery, gate-posts, and vegetation of all kinds, were heavily bespattered and contaminated with oil. Produce of market gardens was entirely spoilt, and the leaves of such vegetables as sugar beet were severely damaged in the fields. Serious losses of sheep occurred throughout the belt, and a number of cattle also died. The condition of the surviving animals which had been on "oiled" pastures was markedly reduced; and the milk yield dropped suddenly and heavily.

The weather had been excessively dry for many weeks previous to the bombing; and the first real rain fell during the night of September 19th-20th.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION.

Chemical analyses and animal feeding experiments were carried out by Mr.R.O.Davies, M.Sc., University College of Wales, Aberystwyth; and general observations in the field, postmortem, pathological and bacteriological examinations were conducted by the writer.

Contents of tanks:- Crude Fuel Oil.

Origin of oil:- Trinidad. (as stated by the Admiralty)

Analysis (as supplied by Admiralty):

Specific Gravity @ 60 F. 0.9565.

Flash point (Pensley-Martens) 194 F.

Viscosity (Redwood. in secs.

	@ 60 F	194.
	@ 32 F.	919.
Sulphur	1.17%
Water.	0.5 %

Degrees of Contamination:

Contamination of vegetation in market gardens and fields was, of course, particularly severe in the immediate vicinity of the tanks; but stock were removed from the pastures as quickly as possible. Deposition of oil drops commenced on the day of the fire, and continued for 24-72 hours, the longest period of downpour being at a distance of 3-5 miles from the tanks.

At 3 miles distance the produce of a large market garden was completely ruined in spite of a 12 foot high wall surrounding it. At a distance of 6 miles, i.e. towards the end of the belt, deposition persisted for several days

On certain farms in the oil belt a number of fields escaped the oil fall. This could be verified by observation of the unspattered appearance of the gate-posts and fences; and the fact would appear to be of some significance in connection with animal losses (see below).

Scale:-

Quantities of grey-blue, flaky 'scale' were deposited with the oil up to a distance of 5 miles from the tanks. This material consisted of iron,iron oxide, and paint; but special analysis revealed small proportions of lead and copper. There was no trace of arsenic

DAMAGE TO CROPS ETC .

Full details will be given in the final report, but the following facts have emerged during the investigation:

Apart from the immediate vicinity of the tanks, the greatest contamination of crops took place at Valasthill, some 4 miles from them.

Barley after threshing was dark in colour, and difficulty was experienced in disposing of it. This matter was, however, further complicated by the fatal effect of oil contaminated food on experimental guinea-pigs. In view of these experiments, it was considered necessary to notify all concerned that feeding stuffs contaminated by oil must be considered unsatisfactory for stock-feeding, if not actually dangerous.

Note ;

It must be pointed out that the oil used in the above experiments was obtained from a tank, the greater part of the contents of which had been burnt.

Germination tests of barley were carried out at Aberystwyth in October. The results were satisfactory, but further tests were advised nearer sowing time, in case of possible "delayed action" on the part of the oil.

In view of the feeding experiments, and other evidence which accumulated in connection with losses of farm animals, contaminated grain could not be conscientiously recommended for anything but seed; and then only if further germination tests proved satisfactory, Considerable quantities of grain (chiefly barley) were affected throughout the oil belt.

On the leaves of vegetables such as sugar beet, the, oil appeared to exercise a corrosive and withering effect. This was very evident on a field of sugar beet at Buckspool (inspected on October 18th) where the oil had fallen on only one part of the field. The contaminated leaves showed distinct withering, the affected area being noticeable on the first glance over the field.

On close inspection the leaves seemed to be "eaten" in places. The holes appeared to be due to the oil drops, as many showed a shining black oily rim. No parasites could be found.

rain appeared to have practically no effect in washing the oil off the herbage. Grass taken on November 26th from part of a field which had remained ungrazed since the oil fell, was found to be contaminated to the extent of over three per cent, in spite of extremely heavy rain during previous weeks.

EFFECT OF OIL ON ANIMALS.

Condition:

Within a few days after the bombing, sheep and cattle throughout the oil belt began to lose condition, and became progressively, and fairly rapidly, emaciated. This loss of condition was quite obvious in October, even after supplementary feeding.

Milk Yield:

The milk yield dropped within 3 days from the bombing to from one-half to one-third of the previous total.

Owing to the excessively dry summer, the yield had been gradually diminishing, but such a sudden and severe drop could not be attributed to the same cause.

Examples :-

At Valasthill, the gallonage dropped from 283 gallons in August to 86 gallons in September.

At Buckspool, 12 gallons were sent off on August 18th and only 3 gallons on the 21st

At Sampson the gallonage sent down from 19 gallons to 10 gallons during the same Period

Compararable diminution occurred on other farms in the area,

ANIMAL LOSSES

Again, the following is a summary of results.

General :

The most serious losses occurred among sheep. These began in September and cases had been examined by Mr.E.P.M. Drewett, M.R.C.V S., Pembroke, and Mr Watson, M R.C.V.S., Haverfordwest, who had come to the conclusion that the condition was of an obscure nature, but were inclined finally to suspect the oil. For some time, however, the oil was not suspected, and the actual investigation was not commenced until the beginning of October; but cases were still occurring, so that it was possible to observe the course of the condition, and to make postmortem and other examinations, Affected sheep all showed similar symptoms and postmortem appearance. A number of cattle also died in the area concerned. These did not show the same symptoms exactly as did the sheep, but all showed identical and somewhat unusual post-mortem appearances.

1. Sheep Losses:

The following points are worthy of note :

- (a) No similar cases have occurred within the experience of local farmers or veterinary practitioners; nor, indeed, within the experience of the writer.
- (b) No case showing the characteristic symptoms occurred outside the confines of the oil belt.
- (c) In the case of adjacent farms where one escaped the oil, and the pastures of the other were contaminated only the sheep on the contaminated farm were affected.
- (d) In the case of farms on which certain fields escaped the oil, only those sheep in the contaminated fields were affected. The difference in condition between sheep on 'clean' and 'oiled' fields was particularly well marked on the farm of Brownslate.
- (e) All sheep in the oil belt were reported to have been in good, saleable condition previous to August 19th. This statement was substantiated by inspection of the flocks on Brownslate and other farms.
- (f) The most serious losses occurred on the farm of Valasthill where analysis had shown the greatest crop contamination apart from the immediate vicinity of the tanks, from which area stock were removed.
- (g) A slight reversion of the condition occurred on the farm of Lyserry after some trouble-free weeks, subsequent to the pasturing of sheep on part of a field which had remained ungrazed since the oil fell.

Analysis of grass from the part of the field in question revealed 3.12% oil contamination

Sheep involved:

Ewes, lambs and rams were affected. Out of a total of 223 deaths, the proportions were as follows:

Ewes 90

Lambs 123

Rams 5

The above figures are affected by the findings in para (d) above

Percentage losses:

On 8 farms in the oil belt the percentage losses varied from 2.4% to 80.8% in flocks numbering from 30 to 194. sheep. The higher percentage refers, of course, to Valasthill, where 76 sheep were lost out of 94. (see above).

The losses diminished from Valasthill south-eastwards, as the oil fall lessened. (see page 2).

Limits of "outbreak":

As far as could be ascertained by questioning farmers and veterinary practitioners, and by reference to diaries etc., the condition was first observed on September 3rd, i.e. 15 days after the oil commenced to fall; again at Valasthill.

Approximately three-quarters of the losses occurred during September, before the investigation actually commenced; but information from the most reliable sources left no doubt that the sheep examined in October were similarly affected to those of the previous month; indeed, a considerable number of the former first showed symptoms towards the end of September.

The condition had practically disappeared by the end of the third week in October. Two sheep developed typical symptoms on November 26th, after spending 14 days on pasture ungrazed since the oil fell.

The flock had been personally inspected on November 11th, when all sheep appeared normal, except for loss in condition. They were put on the pasture in question the next day.

Apart from the above cases, a few isolated ones were encountered in November and December, but these were not quite typical in certain respects (see below),

Course of Condition:

The period between the appearance of symptoms and death was variable. A comparatively small minority died within a week, but others took 4 weeks and even longer. The average interval might be put at 14 days. Some animals recovered spontaneously, and others after treatment.

Symptom:

The principal symptom was ascites (accumulation of fluid in the peritoneal cavity). This was, indeed, almost the only symptom, apart from evidence of jaundice in the later stages. There was no evidence of pain, fever or nervous disorder; nor was there diarrhoea. The ascites was progressive, and the amount of fluid varied from one to between 3 and 4 gallons; but even severely dropsical sheep were remarkably lively and difficult to catch. The swelling was confined to the abdomen, there being no sub-maxillary or sub-thoracic oedema.

Acceleration of pulse and respirations was observed as the ascites progressed. Generally speaking, death supervened within 24 hours from the time the sheep was unable to rise.

Post-mortem:

The fluid was quite clear, almost colourless and germ-free. There was no peritonitis. The liver was the chief organ affected. The capsule was smooth, with no evidence whatever of injury. There was some enlargement of the gall bladder in the later stages. On incision of the liver, the cut surface showed, as it were, a network of blood-red 'threads' throughout the tissue. Microscopic examinations revealed an extensive focal necrosis.

It may here be mentioned that, after returning to Cardiff the writer submitted a stained liver section to the Pathology Department of the Welsh National School of Medicine, with a request for diagnosis. No personal opinion, and no history or background of any kind were given. The report concluded with the following statement;

“The liver lesion may be regarded as a toxic focal necrosis of the type produced by chemical poisoning. It especially resembles the lesions produced by some of the toxic hydrocarbons”

In some of the older ewes, slight gastritis was observed. Only portions of the edges of the abomasal (4th stomach) folds were involved. In the case of an apparently recovered animal, which was later killed, scars were present on the edges of the folds.

The blood and lymph glands showed no apparent changes, and the remaining organs were comparatively normal. The kidneys were pale in cases of comparatively long standing.

The attempts on the part of the body to repair damage in the case of both liver and stomach lining were noticed almost exclusively in the sheep examined in November and December.

Determination of Cause:

The following possible causes would appear to have been eliminated by analytical and other examinations:

- 1 Bacteria.
- 2 Metallic poisons, including lead.
3. Plant Poisons, including ragwort.
4. Internal Parasites, including Liver Fluke and Stomach Worms.

Special attention was paid to the possibility of fluke, in view of the dropsical condition.

2. Cattle Losses:

Post-mortem examinations were conducted on a number of cattle which died during October and November, after showing; symptoms of liver trouble.

In every instance, enlargement of the liver and gall-bladder and enlargement and impaction of the omasum (3rd stomach), were constant features.

The enlargement of the gall-bladder was very marked; in one instance, the contents amounted to just under one gallon of bile. The macroscopic appearance of the liver was not similar to that in the sheep; and, for various reasons, it was not possible to make microscopic examinations; but the general appearance was that of fatty degeneration, rather than "liver rot". In some cases, but not in all, biliary cirrhosis was evident; and in those cases a few flukes (not more than 12) were found.

The enlargement of the omasum was also very pronounced, as well as the impaction; and this was present in 11 cases, irrespective of flukes or apparent fluke damage.

In one case, scars similar to those in the abomasum of the sheep above mentioned, were observed,. There were no dropsical symptoms; but, as no cases with similar post-mortem appearances were encountered outside the oil belt, either by the writer or, from all accounts, by local veterinary practitioners, they were regarded with considerable suspicion.

DISCUSSION.

The following is a summary of the collected evidence relating to the various possible causes; with special reference to sheep.

. NB The facts that

(a) no similar cases had previously occurred; and that

(b) All cases were confined to the oil belt, should be borne in mind.

I. Bacteria:- The distribution and course of the condition, as well as the general condition of affected sheep, and absence of pathogenic organisms, are against this cause.

2. Metallic Poisoning:

In view of the possibility of poisoning from the 'scale' analyses of various organs were carried out special attention being paid to lead.

No lead was found in any sheep liver; and under 2 parts per million of copper in one case (i.e. within normal limits).

Minute quantities of lead and copper were found in the liver of a bullock, but, again, the copper was within the normal limits, and there was reason to suspect that the lead might have come from the metal container in which the sample was sent. '

Sheep were affected beyond the limits of the 'scale' deposition.

3. Plant Poisoning:

No poisonous plants likely to cause the condition were found in the area, (either fresh or dried). The two points in the introduction to this section of the report, are also against this cause.

4. Internal Parasites:

(a) Fluke. No flukes, either mature or immature, and no fluke eggs, could be found either macroscopically or microscopically; with the exception of two November cases. In one of these 6 parasites were found; and in the other, a single fluke only was found.

There was no damage to the liver capsule, and no biliary cirrhosis; nor was there any sub-maxillary or sub thoracic oedema. The absence of depression, the remarkable retention of vitality in many cases, and the recoveries, are against this cause.

Furthermore, the condition occurred on farms previously considered 'safe' and which or personal

Inspection did not seem in the least likely to harbour the intermediate hosts of the parasites. It is well known that massive infestation with immature flukes may cause comparatively sudden and decidedly severe, ascites, with death after a fairly short interval; but such a state of affairs postulate a previous mild winter and wet summer, whereas the opposite was the case in this instance. The condition of the liver and ascitic fluid, were also opposed to this theory; and it is impossible to believe that any fluke, however immature, could have escaped detection,

(b) Stomach Worms. The number of these parasites was negligible. Routine dosing against them is generally practised in the district; and this was certainly carried out at Valasthill on August 28th.

5. The Oil and or Products of its Combustion:

The distinction is an important one, to which full reference will be made in the final report; and it is in this connection that the investigation is still in progress.

In this sub-section, the term "oil" will imply both the oil and/or products of combustion.

(a) Circumstantial evidence:-

(b) The circumstantial evidence against the oil appears almost conclusive as far as the sheep are concerned. Most of it has already been given, but will be recapitulated here:

1. Absence of previous cases with the characteristic symptoms and post-mortem appearances.
2. Cases entirely confined to the oil belt.
3. In the case of adjacent farms where one escaped the oil and the pastures of the other were contaminated, only those sheep on the contaminated fields were affected.
4. In the case of farms on which certain fields escaped the oil, only those sheep on the contaminated fields were affected.
5. The most serious losses occurred on the farm where analysis had shown the greatest crop contamination, (apart from the immediate vicinity of the tanks, from which stock were removed) .
6. Recrudescence of the condition in sheep pastured on heavily "oiled" grass, ungrazed since the oil fell; after the flock had been normal (except for loss of condition) for several weeks.
7. Diminution in losses as oil fall lessened.
8. No other cause discoverable.

(b) Direct Evidence:- Work to this end is still in progress; but oil from one of the tanks, in which the bulk of it had burnt away before the fire was extinguished, has proved fatal to guinea-pigs.

The entirely ex parte statement of the Pathology Department of the 'Welsh National School of Medicine concerning the nature, and implications, of the liver lesion, is significant.

Some delay was experienced in obtaining sample of oil for experimental purposes, but this was overcome, and experiments are now being conducted on sheep.

CONCLUSION

In view of the evidence, incomplete though it is and on consideration of all the factors involved, the conviction that the oil and /or products of its combustion, is the cause of the losses among sheep would appear to be conclusive

The responsibility of the oil for the cattle losses is not so definite; but, in view of the apparent predilection of the oil for the liver in the case of sheep, one is inclined to regard it with grave suspicion.

The rapid loss in condition of animals on contaminated fields, and the sudden and heavy drop in the milk yield can not, as far as can be ascertained, be attributed to anything but the oil, '

The oil damage to crops and vegetables is obvious; and the feeding experiments point the danger of the Contamination

FINANCIAL LOSSES TO THE AREA

This matter was thoroughly gone into in the course of the investigation; and it is quite evident that the financial losses will seriously handicap food production in the area concerned .

Some farmers have lost several years rent, and have been forced to purchase cake and other supplementary feeding stuffs to try to restore condition and milk production. Others cannot afford to buy artificial manure necessary for certain crops: and others, again, who would have normally bought cows in order to keep up the milk supply, are now unable to do so.

In view of the urgent necessity for food production of every kind at the present time and of the impracticability of producing even peace-time quantities in the, area concerned, owing to the losses, one would emphatically suggest that compensation would be, sound investment on the part of the -----(document torn)

N.B. This interim report has been so urgently requested, in order that claims may not be prejudiced by undue delay, that there has been no time to communicate with Mr R.O.Davies, who is responsible for a considerable part of the investigation. Some of his work (from preliminary report) is contained in this statement i.e. those parts relating to analyses and seeding experiments .

Acc to Mr Richards

That day, August 22nd, was the most critical of the eighteen days. The death of the five men greatly distressed their colleagues and the spread of raging flames which followed the escape of oil did nothing to re-assure anyone. In fact, there was near-panic for a short time and this spread to the civil population as the fire ran with devilish speed across adjoining countryside, making Military Road impassable and damaging extensively a cottage, farm buildings and crops. In the evening there was another large escape of oil to add to the almost unbelievable difficulties under which the men worked. This produced another wave of alarm amongst the townspeople and started a rumour that another sixty firemen had been burnt to death, So much credence was placed upon this rumour that ambulances rushed to the scene, as well as police, firemen who were off duty and scores of townspeople. Assurances that there had been no further deaths restored public confidence, and the arrival shortly afterwards of re-inforcements from England was a Godsend to the men on the job whose stupendous task was almost beyond endurance.

While the firemen went about their hazardous work in the 1st hours of the fire they realised acutely that heat and flames and boiling-oil were not the only dangers which beset them. They knew that at any moment the enemy might return to try and exact a toll of death from their ranks.

The Germans described it as a great success by the Luftwaffe. It was a serious blow to Britain's war effort, probably the most serious of the early air raids. The fire destroyed an immense quantity of precious heavy oil. Lord Haw Haw, who used to live in the town, gloated over it and threatened that the whole town would be destroyed by fire. The Germans said that the pilot was only sixteen and that he had failed to return.

On the afternoon of Sunday, August 25th, when the great Pennar fire had been burning for six days, a German `plane flew over and dropped two bombs in the vicinity. It was a bold attack, evidently aimed at producing confusion and adding difficulty to the firemen's great task, but again the enemy's bad marksmanship proved a blessing. Both bombs fell near the tanks but caused no military damage although a few firemen received injuries and had to be treated at the Meyrick Hospital. The first bomb fell near a gate at the top of Military Road and uprooted a telegraph pole which flew through the air and, by a freak, landed point downwards a few yards away where it resumed its upright position. The other bomb exploded harmlessly in an open space. Ground defences opened up spiritedly and after unloading its cargo the intruder made hastily out to sea. People who were in Dimond Street as the plane flew over witnessed a very unusual occurrence. An army officer was walking down the street and as the bombs whistled down he stopped, unslung a rifle he was carrying over his shoulder, loaded it and took a shot at the `plane. What he expected to gain by this action is difficult to imagine unless he had hopes of a lucky shot striking a vital part of the aircraft and bringing it down. If he expected to gain the plaudits of the onlookers for a brave act of defiance he was disappointed, for the majority were openly critical of his "sniping" and moved away quickly in case raider flew round to seek revenge for the lone rifle shot, which in the excitement of the moment they thought to be a distinct possibility !

The tanks fire gave rise to the first suspicions that spies were lurking in South Pembrokeshire, Inevitably there were many wild and exaggerated stories of suspicious characters flashing lights, secret transmitting sets, raids and arrests by the police, mysterious midnight movements and so on. Ninety per cent of such assertions can safely be written down as being pure assumption produced by the general uneasiness of the times; the remaining ten per cent might have had some foundation in fact. There is every reason to believe, for instance, that enemy agencies were at work during the time of the tanks fire. One night when the blaze was at its height a big car coming from the direction of the tanks pulled up beside half-a-dozen local residents who were talking at the bottom of Military Road. A man, a complete stranger, put his head out of the window and said "Isn't it terrible, twenty men have been burnt to death up there". Then he drove away, never to be seen by any of that half dozen people again. His story was entirely without foundation. It could not have been due to confusion with the incident in which the five Cardiff firemen lost their lives for it was before that occurrence. Of course, it might have been due to a misunderstanding or a mishearing or it might have been one of those stories which start mysteriously but quite innocently upon such occasions. But those who saw the man in the car were unanimous that there was something suspicious about him. In any event the story he told was one well calculated to produce distress and weakened morale. It was well in keeping with the Goebbels formula later to become so well-known. One spy story which gained much credence a few weeks later concerned lights which some people vowed they had seen flashing a few miles south of Pembroke on nights when enemy aircraft were in the vicinity. Indeed there were people who began to see lights everywhere, even in Freshwater East, a haven of safety for scores of Pembroke Dock folk. On one memorable night towards the end of the year a few privileged people at The Grotto, that cosy Freshwater rendezvous, where so many from Pembroke Dock were wont to spend their evenings, were let into the secret that two or three Army officers were going out into the darkness to settle once and for all the matter of the lights said to be winking skywards at the bottom of the village. To add drama to the occasion one officer showed his loaded revolver round before buttoning up his trench coat and venturing forth. It was rather in the nature of an anti-climax when they returned to their expectant friends with nothing to report. They had not seen a soul and the black-out was perfect everywhere!

Pembrokeshire people and those in the south of the county in particular were getting precious little rest at nights at this period. Nearly every night the sirens would sound and even if no attack developed the drone of aircraft almost invariably followed which, though it might be in the distance, was sufficient to keep people on the qui vive. And when the sirens were silent sleep was still an uneasy thing, in Pembroke Dock at least, where it had been learnt by grim experience that it was upon such occasions that real attacks occurred. Then there were the 'planes which flew round and round sometimes for an hour and more on end, without any object apparent to the uneasy folk below, unless it was to keep them awake, More often than not, the siren not having sounded, no one knew whether the plane was friendly or hostile, and people used to stand on their doorsteps hoping for the best and staring up into the sky watching the long, pointing fingers of the searchlights as they "passed the sound" from one to the other, Upon one such occasion a 'plane flew back and fore over Pembroke Dock quite unmolested for surely an hour. Then someone's patience must have snapped because an anti aircraft gun went off with a great bang-and the 'plane was not heard again. These, presumably, were the nuisance raiders. They undoubtedly served a purpose.

People's nerves were beginning to get ragged, as was evidenced by the demand made towards the end of August for the removal of the flag flying over Pembroke Castle which, it was contended, might help enemy 'planes to locate Pembroke Dock ! Looking back, the absurdity of the request is apparent. While the castle itself, the harbour and a dozen other aids to navigation remained the flag itself was of no consequence as a guide to the enemy. It is probable that not one enemy airman ever noticed it.

During August a number of bombs were dropped on open spaces and caused no harm. Several fell in the marshland and at Caswell, outside Tenby, on August 17th, while on the last day of the month Morvil Mountain, near Maenclochog, in North Pembrokeshire, was a target. Three of these bombs straddled the Fishguard-Maenclochog road about four miles from the village.

Pembroke Dock's lucky star must have been well in the ascendant on Monday, September 2nd, 1940. In the early hours of that morning a raider roared in from the east and, with utter indiscrimination, unloaded a cargo of incendiary and high explosive bombs which completely demolished a number of houses, extensively damaged scores of others, wreaked havoc along the main thoroughfares, scored a direct hit on the Temperance Hall but did not kill a soul! It was the enemy's second visit that night and the majority of Pembroke Dock people had fallen into uneasy sleep when, some time after 1 o'clock, without any warning siren, the low flying `plane awakened them. Almost immediately the bombs crashed down. In Gwyther Street people were scrambling out of bed and running for shelter downstairs when a breathstopping, air-splitting explosion threw them against walls, on to floors, downstairs and, in some cases, out of beds, as their houses heaved and tottered. One bomb had scored a direct hit on the wing at the back of No. 23, Lower Gwyther Street, and another had dropped on No. 32 on the opposite side of the road. No. 32 was completely demolished while the houses each side of it, Nos. 30 and 34, were reduced to shambles, as also was No. 23 on the other side. By remarkable good fortune three of these four houses were empty and the fourth was occupied by only two people who had reached shelter beneath the staircase and escaped unscathed,

No. 32 was the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Young, who had left on the previous Saturday for a holiday by the sea. Had they been at home they could not have escaped death or serious injury. The house next door above, No. 34, was the home of Mr. Roch, a lighthousekeeper, his wife and two children. Mr. Roch was away on duty while his wife and children were staying with friends in another district. The house below, No. 30, was occupied by Mr. W. J. J. Phillips, the Pembroke Dock stationmaster, and a former member of the Pembroke Town Council. Mr. Phillips, a Special Constable, was out on duty, but Mrs. Phillips and their daughter were in the house, and when they heard the `plane they rushed down and under the stairs in their nightclothes -just in the nick of time. No. 23, on the other side, was the home of Mr. Wyrriot Owen, who with his family was staying out of the town.

Neighbours rushed out and stumbling through debris and blinding dust reached the wrecked houses where they immediately commenced rescue work. Mrs. and Miss Phillips were soon located and with little difficulty were brought to safety. White with dust from head to foot, they were taken to Mr. and Mrs. Hordley's house opposite where they soon recovered from their unnerving experience. Later they were joined by friends in the street who, satisfied there was nothing more they could do until morning, spent the remaining hours of darkness singing popular songs with Mr. Fred Hordley, home on leave from the Army, at the piano. Had not the three houses been empty there would almost certainly have been a death roll, which would have added dismay, confusion and difficulty to the havoc of the attack. Yet there were people who continued to campaign bitterly against those who sought safety outside the town.

While the town was still rocking to the explosion of the Gwyther Street bombs, more H.E.'s were falling in the Lewis Street area. One exploded alongside No. 8 Lewis Street, another at the rear of the Bird-in-Hand and another scored a direct hit on the Temperance Hall. The raider's machine guns were blazing but, miraculously no one was hit. Hundreds of small marks noticed next day on the Lewis Street wall of the Temperance Hall were thought to be caused by machine-gun bullets. In the Temperance Hall a number of firemen engaged on the tanks fire were sleeping and eighteen of them received injuries. Two were seriously injured. Fortunately the bomb which struck the hall was a small one and the four main walls of the building withstood the blast. All the same, it was nothing but sheer luck that prevented a heavy death roll. On the other side of the road. the Bird-in-Hand and the houses below it were practically wrecked. Alderman Joe Gibby, landlord of the inn, was trapped by falling masonry, etc., and it was some time before he was released. However, he suffered nothing more than an injury to the foot from which he recovered within a few days. Police and A.R.P. rescue workers performed excellent service that night, especially at the Temperance Hall where the casualties received quick and efficient ; attention. It was reliably reported that the only mishap occurred when a well known doctor engaged in giving injections to the wounded had a hypodermic ' needle accidentally (?) driven into a tender part of his anatomy by a layman assistant standing behind him!

A number of bombs had been dropped previously, a direct hit being scored upon Mrs. Lemon's house on the left hand side going up Tremeyrick Street. Mrs. Lemon, a middle-aged lady, was in the house and when she heard the bomb coming dived under the table for shelter. The house collapsed around her with a sickening crash and she was trapped beneath the debris. Rescue workers were quickly on the scene and after a long and difficult task, made all the worse by the uncertainty as to whether Mrs. Lemon was alive or not, the lady was brought to safety. She was injured and badly shaken but could hardly believe her luck in being alive when she saw the ruins of her home which had been levelled to the ground.

The incendiary bombs used were of the oil type but they did little damage. One fell in the park and another on the corner of Argyle Street-Bush Street, where for months afterwards the walls were covered with black, smelly oil.

The enemy had been busy in the Tenby area earlier that night. Approximately a hundred incendiary bombs were dropped on Kingsmoor Common - miles away from any military objective. Hayricks were set on fire at Enox Hill Farm, Saundersfoot, and Little Kilowen, while between thirty and forty incendiaries were dropped near Netherwood House, Saundersfoot. The Narberth Fire Brigade was soon in action and the fires were extinguished.

Three nights later "Jerry" came again a `plane flew over Pembroke Dock and dropped a number of bombs which fell in a field on Bierspool Farm, killing three cows and injuring nine others, the property of Mr. Edward Gibby. Some of the bombs fell quite near to Bierspool House, but did little damage. Mr. and Mrs. Gibby were away from home for the night. Another bomb exploded on the other side of the road near Llanion School and smashed all the windows, while another did similar damage to a number of Llanion houses.

Pembroke Borough continued to call out for adequate air raid shelters. While the shelters being erected for the schools were described as the best in Wales there was the utmost dissatisfaction at the County Council s communal shelters. It was stated in responsible quarters that they could be knocked over with a seven-pound hammer and spirited protests were made to the appropriate quarters.

Discontent at the arrangements for sounding the siren reached a critical pitch in Pembroke Dock following two raids which occurred without warning, within an hour of each other on the night of Wednesday, October 16th. The first raid was shortly before 9 o'clock. It was made by a single `plane which after dropping a number of flares released a string of high explosive and incendiary bombs. Some people in the streets had seen the flares and were prepared for trouble but to the majority the sickening crash of the bombs, now all too familiar, was the first intimation that "'Jerry' was over again". A devil's chorus of explosions and machine gun fire continued for several minutes and then there was silence. After half-an-hour or so the more venturesome left their shelter, persuaded by the quietness which then reigned, that it was all clear. But within ten minutes the raider was back and caught scores of people in the streets as he released another load of bombs.

Again there was hurrying into shelters and in the absence of anything to assure them that the danger was over many people remained in refuge, cold, shivering and apprehensive, for hours, some until the first streaks of dawn had shot across the sky. The next morning irate citizens went to the A.R.P. report centre to know why no siren had been sounded, firstly to give warning of the raid and secondly to show that the raid was over. They were told that officially there had been no raid, an answer which provoked some interesting comment as the enquirers made their way home through the glass strewn streets. If this was an unofficial raid what, asked one, would an official raid be like? Other suggestions were that the siren should be taken down and presented to the nation as disused iron and that other uses should be made of the materials which went to build the public shelters as the doors of these much maligned little structures were found to be padlocked when people ran to them during the second attack. Another suggestion, and one that was made quite seriously, was that the County A.R.P. headquarters should move from Haverfordwest to Pembroke Dock which was obviously the centre of attraction to the Germans. It was thought that the town's grievances would then have some attention!

So great was the public discontent that the Borough Council decided to communicate with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Home Security, the War Office and the Regional A.R.P.

Commissioner on the matter. A public protest meeting in Pembroke Dock was also arranged but it had to be abandoned because no suitable building with an adequate black-out was available. While there is no doubt that Pembroke Dock had every reason for its concern, in retrospect it is obvious that a system permitting warnings at local discretion, which was much in demand, would not have been a satisfactory solution of the problem. On the contrary it is possible that such a system would only have produced greater confusion and added to the perils of the people. There was a general tendency to blame the County A.R.P. system for all the troubles, but the fact was that the County officials were quite powerless, being entirely under the control of Cardiff. In turn, Cardiff, was dependent upon Fighter Command who should have been in a better position than anyone in Pembroke Dock to know the movement of enemy planes over the country. That Fighter Command "fell down on the job" on so many occasions in the early days was doubtless due to the fact that the system had not by then adjusted itself to the unexpected conditions caused by the French surrender. Between twenty and thirty H.E. bombs, some of them of the delayed action type, and several incendiaries fell at widespread points that Wednesday night. Several long bursts of machine-gun fire featured the attack and it is thought that on one occasion at least, the raider was firing into the streets. But it was another night of good fortune: no one was killed; only one man was slightly injured, no damage of military importance was done and damage to civilian property was comparatively slight. The explosive bombs landed in King Street Lane, Wellington Street, Milton Terrace and the top of the town, one in the cemetery in Upper Park Street and another (delayed action type) in Hawkestone Road. The Bomb Disposal Squad set to work on the time bomb without delay and the following day it was driven away on a lorry before a little crowd of spectators, very interested and still just a little apprehensive!

If the raider had dropped a bomb on Albion Square during its second visit, Pembroke Dock would have lost several distinguished inhabitants. Quite a crowd of people, including a few members of the Town Council who had been inspecting the damage caused by the bomb which fell at the top of Wellington Street half an-hour before, were gathered about the square when the 'plane returned. Indeed, all over the town people were standing on the pavement talking about the raid and, it can safely be surmised, making caustic comments about the siren arrangements. Then came the roar of aero engines again and there was a stampede for shelter into doorways and gutters, under walls and out into the open. On the strength of the fallacious theory that a bomb never drops in the same place twice, a number of people, including the author and at least one member of the Borough Council, Alderman J. R. Williams, jumped into the crater at the top of Wellington Street and there lay face downwards as hell broke loose around. As the bombs whistled somebody shouted a warning and girls crouching in the doorways down Wellington Street began to scream. The 'plane, big and black against the moonlit sky came tearing low overhead, its machine-guns blazing. At the same time a lively defence was put up by the guns in the Air Station, the tracers streaking up and down the sky, creating a pattern at once beautiful and terrifying. Then the raider was gone and all was quiet again. Another attack on Pembroke Dock occurred on the following Sunday night. Only incendiaries were dropped, and two houses were set on fire, one at the corner of Bush Street and Gwyther Street and the other in Laws Street. The other incendiaries were quickly and effectively dealt with, some in the streets, others in gardens and fields and one or two on doorsteps. On the same night some explosive bombs fell harmlessly between Monkton and Hundleton and incendiaries at Monkton, West Pennar, Hakin and Haycastle, all without any serious effect. On the previous Sunday six high explosives were dropped at Milton Aerodrome, damaging one hangar, the N.A.A.F.I. buildings and some huts, A Dutch officer received some injuries ,

Pembroke Dock's almost phenomenal run of luck in sustaining repeated air attacks without any fatal civilian casualties came to an end on November 6th 1940. Shortly after 6 o'clock that morning a number of `planes raided the town and killed three civilians and one Serviceman. The victims were Mr. and Mrs. W. Kinton who carried on an old established grocery business in Bush Street, Mrs. Harvey, whose husband, Dr. Harvey, had only just taken over the practice of the late Dr. Rufus Rees and who lived next door; and a young R.A.F. man who was lodging with Mr. and Mrs. Kinton. Dr. Harvey was seriously injured but their small baby had a miraculous escape. The trail of death left by the raid created a profound impression throughout the Borough. Mr. and Mrs. Kinton were well known inhabitants of advanced years whose old-world charm and kindness had endeared them to scores of friends. It was indeed a cruel twist of fate that the violence of war should end two such serene and peaceful lives,

The chill and darkness of a November morning had not begun to dissolve when the siren wailed its mournful warning. Almost at once the drone of aeroplanes filled the air. It was a peculiar sound; the note of the engines seemed different from that heard on previous occasions and later there was considerable speculation as to what type of aircraft was used, some suggesting that they were Italian machines. Whatever they were, there were several of them, and they carried out a violent and indiscriminate attack. It is estimated that nearly thirty high explosives were dropped and most of them were of heavy calibre, causing huge craters. Eight of these bombs fell in the County School playing field, three in the Memorial Park and one (unexploded) near the Llanion tanks. Others dropped in Bush Street, scoring a direct hit on Mr. and Mrs. Kinton's house, in the Co-op. Lane, Prince's Street, Dockyard Avenue and alongside the Military Hospital, where there were some casualties and considerable damage.

Mr. and Mrs. Kinton's house was completely demolished, burying them beneath the stairs where apparently they were sleeping. Demolition and rescue workers rushed to the scene and worked feverishly for over two hours to extricate the unfortunate people. It was hoped that Mrs. Kinton would be saved as she was heard to speak when the rescue work was in progress, but when extricated it was found she had passed away. By this time a large crowd had gathered and the people watched silently and with bowed heads as the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Kinton were carried away to the mortuary. The body of the young Air Force man, in night clothing, was found on the pavement outside the premises. He was beyond human aid. Another lodger, Mr. T. H. Clement, a clerk in the Pembroke Dock branch of Barclays Bank, escaped with serious injuries and was taken to the Meyrick Hospital.

Heroic work by rescuers failed to save Mrs. Harvey next door, where a fire was burning, due, it is thought, to the domestic fire in the house spreading when the house collapsed. Dr. Harvey was extricated badly injured and was removed to hospital, while the baby escaped unscathed due to the presence of mind of Mrs. Harvey, who although partly buried by the debris, and on the point of collapse, threw the child clear of the fire into the passage. There it was found uninjured hanging by its clothing to a clothes peg on the wall! Bush Street from the junction of Park Street to Albion Square, was a veritable shambles. All the shops and houses around were extensively damaged, windows being shattered, doors blown in and roofs crushed by falling stones. People living in the locality had wonderful escapes, many being unhurt although parts of their houses fell in on them. The bravery of A.R.P., fire-fighting and police personnel in the Bush Street rescue efforts won the commendation of everyone and two police officers, Sergt. Bodman and P.C. Humphreys, subsequently received decorations for their outstanding work.

On the following Sunday night, November 10th, when the enemy made his next visit, a local Civil Defence worker, exasperated at what he considered to be red tape obstructing common-sense procedure, put the siren off without permission - and got into hot water with the authorities. But he was on perfectly safe ground. The voice of the people rose up in his defence and he was acclaimed a hero. His unauthorised action undoubtedly saved several people from injury or death and had the threats of dire punishment, including imprisonment, been carried out there would most assuredly have been a public revolt on an unprecedented scale. The central figure of this interesting incident was Alderman J. R. Williams, one of the most vociferous advocates of reform of the siren system. At that time Alderman Williams, the vice-chairman of the old Fire Brigade Committee of the Borough Council, slept most nights at the Fire Station at the Market Hall. He was there on Sunday night and when, about midnight, the familiar discordant note of enemy 'planes was heard, he ordered a freman, Mr. Harry Baker, to press the button. A few minutes later bombs crashed down on houses which had just been vacated by persons who had run for shelter upon hearing the warning. It is understood that Alderman Williams subsequently received some serious letters on the matter, but he remained unperturbed and with everyone stoutly defending his action, nothing came of it. All the bombs in that Sunday night raid fell in the top part of Pembroke Dock. A direct hit was scored on 19, Owen Street, Pennar, but the occupants, Mr. and Mrs. Scourfield, were sheltering beneath the stairs, and had a wonderful escape. On Bethany corner three bombs fell together, the point of impact forming an isosceles triangle. One of these bombs completely destroyed an empty fish and chip shop next door to the Caledonia public house and tore away part of the inn. The landlord, Mr. Beynon, with his wife and members of the family were sitting in their kitchen and were unhurt. Undeterred by the extensive damage to their premises and the loss of a lot of stock, the Beynons opened again for business without loss of time, an action much appreciated by the many local patrons of this old established house. The second bomb struck No. 11, just opposite the chip shop, the residence of Mrs. Emmment, who, fortunately, had run for shelter to the cellar of a neighbour's house nearby upon hearing the siren. Mrs. Griffiths next door and Mr. Joe Davies and members of his family from next door to the chip shop had also gone to the neighbour's cellar and thus escaped. "thank God for the siren", was the fervent expressions of these people the next day. The third bomb fell on Bethany Baptist Chapel and caused considerable damage. Members of the Pembrokeshire Constabulary had narrow escapes. The Police patrol car had only just passed Bethany and was going up High Street when the bombs dropped, It "bounced" with the explosion and it can be safely assumed that the speed cop then put on a bit more speed! A constable on foot, P.C. Greenslade (later Sergt. Greenslade, who died in February, 1965) was standing in the narrow street running up alongside the chapel when he heard the warning whistle. He lay flat and was uninjured. Other bombs, H.E. and incendiary, fell around Cross Park and Pennar and caused some damage but no casualties.

Although no concentrated attack occurred between November 6th, 1940, and May 12th, 1941, the night skies over Pembrokeshire were hardly ever free of the hum of aircraft and the flash and crack of ack-ack fire during that period. It was a period of uneasiness. Night after night the sirens wailed, followed in a few minutes by the sound of aircraft approaching from the south. Sometimes a bomb or two or a single parachute mine or a bunch of incendiaries would be dropped at random; sometimes the metallic rattle of a machine-gun would provide a sharp contrast of sound against the deep note of the bombers, sometimes a low flying raider would fly round and round as if in an intense search. But no major attack developed, As the weeks of 1941 wore on the bombers became more and more inclined to leave Pembrokeshire alone, flying high over the area in their hundreds to attack Merseyside, the Midlands and Northern Ireland.

This, however, did not ease the minds of the local people who almost every night, at about the same hour, had to leave their beds or their firesides to go to shelter or out on A.R.P. duty. As the hordes came over, the big guns down the harbour would start firing and between the scores of searchlights, ack-ack bursts like splashes of gold dust would add colour to the beautiful lattice pattern in the sky. Sometimes, but not very often, an aircraft would get caught in a searchlight beam and, small and glistening thousands of feet above the earth and looking so pretty and harmless, it would turn and twist while all the guns for miles around opened up. For hours the all-pervading drone of the 'planes with the intermittent crack of the guns and the zip of falling shrapnel would go on until at last the final flight had passed on its mission of death to the north. A lapse of perhaps half-an-hour and the performance would start all over again as the bombers hooked it for home, obviously in less orderly flight and some of them making ominous noises which spoke of rough handling by our ground defences and night-fighters. The next morning the news bulletins would tell which town had received the bombardment. Liverpool and Merseyside were attacked time and again. Swansea had its merciless three nights blitz. Midland towns were bombed. Belfast had its turn and even Dublin, neutral and well lighted, became an objective on one occasion. All these nights Pembrokeshire watched, listened and waited. There was an inescapable feeling that one night it would be Pembroke Dock's turn and, sure enough, it came on May 12th, when the town was almost reduced to a shambles under the terrific bombardment.

The sirens had sounded on sixteen out of the eighteen nights preceding May 12th, sometimes twice within a few hours. It was not out of the scheme of things, therefore, when a "red" message set the banshees wailing again at a minute after midnight on the night of May 11th-12th. Almost at once the sound of aircraft filled the sky. It was soon apparent that these were not the usual high fliers winging their way northward. They were at comparatively low altitude and wheeling round the area. Everybody waited in grim expectancy. Was this it? Nearly an hour passed without the circling 'planes having given any indication of friendship or hostility. Not a gun had been fired at them. The optimists were cheerfully proclaiming "They're ours" and some had indeed gone back to their warm beds when about 1 a.m. a sharp whistle ripped the air and the rear of Mr. T. P. Owen's premises in Park Street went up in the air as a bomb exploded with a great crash in his garden.

So began a night of terror, the story of which will be told as long as Pembroke Dock exists. High explosives and incendiaries rained down and, between them came many land mines, their parachutes flapping softly in the light night breeze. It was the first time land mines had been used in a local attack of any scale and they proved a terrifying weapon. While the ordinary bombs whistled down and exploded in a matter of seconds, the land mines rustled down slowly over the town, struck earth with a dull thud and then, after a few moments of ominous silence, went off with a mighty crack, wreaking havoc all around. One of the first of the mines to fall, its long, round container swinging back and fore, was mistaken for a parachutist, whilst another swishing over Park Street was thought by Mr. W. G. Munro, crouching beside his house, to be a 'plane coming down with its engines cut out. It is estimated that fifteen land mines were released over Pembroke Dock that night. A number of them including some that fell in the mud off the bottom of Water Street failed to explode but those that did caused tremendous havoc.

When at last the full cost of the raid was counted up it was found that the town had suffered grievously. The death rate was practically five per thousand, which was much higher than that suffered in one raid in most of the bigger towns. The next day it was found that thirty civilians and two servicemen had been killed, four were missing and a large number injured. Parts of three human bodies could not be identified. Nearly 2,000 houses were damaged. A similar death roll would have given London 40,000 dead in one raid. Glasgow and Birmingham about 5,400, Liverpool 4,280, Cardiff over 1,000 and Swansea over 800.

The raid revealed very vividly the lack of preparation for a raid of such extent. One regrettable feature was the lack of feeding arrangements by the County Council Public Assistance Committee. It is on record that when large numbers gathered at the Wesley Hall to be fed only one small spirit stove was available to boil water. Later in the day the feeding arrangements were improved with the arrival of the Queen's Mobile Canteens. In this connection, mention must be made of the excellent work of the local W.V.S. mobile canteen which proved a veritable boon in the confused and frightened hours immediately after the raid. Started in the winter of 1940 by the County W.V.S. organisers, Miss N. Thomas, J.P., and Mrs. Salmond, Saundersfoot, this canteen had performed grand service in the haven but it was after the big blitz that its full value was felt. A telephone message in the middle of the night to the then Mrs. Burleigh Leach, at the time the W.V.S. Centre Organiser for Castlemartin area, resulted in the prompt arrival of the mobile canteen in Pembroke Dock where it remained until about 4 to 5 p.m. the following afternoon. The canteen, in charge of Mrs. Burleigh Leach and Mrs. Pinchard, operated on its own until about mid day when it was joined by other mobile canteens. The total absence of an information bureau was also keenly felt. Many hundreds of people who had suffered in some way or another were at a complete loss to know what to do for sustenance and advice. Had there been a central bureau much confusion would have been avoided. A compensating feature, however, was the wonderful way in which the surrounding areas rallied to the aid of the stricken town. They showed their sympathy in a thousand practical ways, the wonderful help-your-neighbour spirit which has never failed to reveal itself amongst British people in an emergency being a bright and steady beacon in those dark, desperate days.

The heavy raid of May 12th developed according to the familiar Goering formula of incendiaries followed by high explosives. Most of the explosives were of very heavy calibre (for those days) and levelled several buildings completely to the ground. One fell right on the Pier Hotel, burying the proprietor, Mr. Rhys Morris, formerly of Haverfordwest and a native of the Solva district, and a number of people who were staying there. The Criterion Hotel across the road was almost completely demolished while along Pier Road the roofs of all the buildings were blown off and the windows shattered. There was extensive damage in the Ordnance Factory, caused it is believed, by a mine which exploded in the water near Hancock's Yard. Other devastation in this area was at the Gas Works, which received a direct hit. The laundry was destroyed while Squibbs' photography premises on the other side of the road also went up in flames and was burnt out completely.

Meanwhile, a mine had parachuted down behind lower Laws Street and, exploding with a terrific detonation, laid in ruins a number of houses. Several old, respected and loved residents perished beneath the ruins. Amongst the houses destroyed was the Three Crowns, one of the most popular and cosy inns of pre-war Pembroke Dock. But the landlord, Mr. Alf Bowen and his good wife were brought out alive from the beneath the debris the following day. They recovered slowly but life was never the same for them again. Having regard to the devastation in the street and to the Three Crowns itself, it was a remarkable rescue, aided to no small extent by the steadfastness with which Mr. and Mrs. Bowen faced the terrible ordeal.

Another public house, the Prince Albert, also received a direct hit, the landlady, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Treharne Evans, and several residents being killed. The Market House was extensively damaged as also were the new houses up at Park View Crescent where a mine touched down only ten yards away from the rear of the premises. The residents of these the town's newest properties had a really amazing escape. But they were undaunted, their spirit being typified by Mr. P. Castle, who, immediately after the raid, hoisted a Union Jack over his shattered home where it fluttered proudly during the sombre weeks which followed.

It would require a large volume to describe in detail all the scores of incidents of this savage raid. Death and destruction were abroad that night in their fullest fury but providence was there too, for numerous were the hairbreadth escapes and great were the strength and courage which, flowing steadily from a source beyond the control of man, enabled the aged, the weak and the young to bear the ordeal, and the brave to go forth into the holocaust to perform their matchless deeds of rescue. It is certain that the civil defences met the crisis with unflinching steadfastness and performed their work in a manner which left no room for criticism. With so much heroism crammed into so few hours it would be an impossible task to select fairly those deserving of special commendation.

Many heroes there were whose work became known and was rightly praised but doubtless many brave deeds will for ever remain untold. It is better, therefore, to refrain from mentioning the names of many gallant people which come readily to mind. Sufficient be it to say that that night they were put to the test and were not found wanting.

The raid interrupted the gas and electricity supplies and for some time the ferry boat was stopped from running owing to the danger of mines in the harbour. For several days afterwards a minesweeper swept the path of the ferry boat before it crossed to and from Neyland.

A ghastly spectacle was presented by the light of Monday's dawn. Buildings lay in ruins, debris inches thick covered most streets and here and there on heaps of rubble rescue workers, pale, drawn and haggard, continued their task with infinite care knowing that at any moment they might find a human body. Everywhere there was devastation and people stood in little knots about the street talking in shocked tones about the events of the night. As the day wore on and the full extent of the tragedy became known residents, sick at heart, attempted to set about their own affairs, striving desperately to reconcile themselves to the terrible loss the town had suffered in life and property. But concentration in such chaos was an impossible thing and sadly people gathered their valuables together and prepared to leave the town for the night.

The Luftwaffe had been making a habit for some weeks to raid the same town on two or three successive nights and Pembroke Dock had not forgotten this fact when, early in the afternoon of

May 12th, a great exodus from the town began. There was a real and understandable fear that the raiders would come again that night and thousands sought refuge outside the town, the complaints and criticisms about "fleeing to the mountains", so frequent a week before, being forgotten in the overwhelming crisis of the moment. It was not only the rank and file of the civilian population who feared another attack on the second night. Hundreds of Servicemen billeted locally were given the order "Get out of the town. Sleep where you like, but keep away until tomorrow morning". As dusk gathered military trucks went round the streets and men, women and children piled into them to be carried away from the danger area.

Refugees fleeing along the roads of France a year before could hardly have presented a more pathetic picture than the people of Pembroke Dock as they poured out of the town that bright Spring evening. An unforgettable scene was witnessed at the Mill Bridge, Pembroke. Down over the hill from Pembroke Dock they came in an endless stream, in cars, lorries and overloaded buses, on motorcycles, bicycles and horse-drawn carts and wagons. Hundreds came on foot, weary mothers with infants in arms and little boys and girls hardly of school age running behind, wonderment written plain on their pale faces; old men on sticks, young men with grim expressions, subdued boys and frightened girls. Nearly every person clutched tightly some valued possession. Many of the vehicles were piled high with articles of furniture and household ware. Dogs, cats, caged birds and parrots accompanied their owners. Many of the older folk obviously found it difficult to get along. Women bit their lips and some failed to stem the tears that filled their eyes. Children's noise and chatter and high spirits were nowhere to be found. There was no spark of gaiety, no sign of happiness in that motley, unending procession. Dusk fell and still they came, and long after the stars had studded the sky there were stragglers hurrying from a devastated town.

Where did they go? Hundreds stayed in Pembroke where good people threw open their homes in a grand gesture of neighbourliness, and schools and schoolrooms and vestries were quickly converted into sleeping quarters by many willing hands. Probably the population of Pembroke was doubled for that memorable night and, in fact, for many nights to come. Tenby took in scores and so did Freshwater; many went to Haverfordwest and Neyland while others were given sanctuary in the villages and farmhouses of South Pembrokeshire. But not everybody found shelter. There were those who, with no friends or relatives outside the town and no money with which to pay for a roof over their heads, had to face the night in Pembroke Dock or flee to the open country. It is a fact that many people slept in the open in Bush Woods and the surrounding fields and hedges for nights after May 12th, Pembroke Dock was a dark, deserted, dismal town that night. No more than a few hundred remained to face whatever the midnight hours held and the few who walked the streets had no company except the echo of their own footsteps through the empty houses. And so it was the next night and for many nights after until gradually with the general slackening of the air attacks, people began to return to their shattered homes.

As was expected the raiders came again in the early hours of May 13th, but no bombs were dropped on Pembroke Dock. The target that night was Milton Aerodrome, several high explosives falling in and around the village, two at Ratford Farm, one on the road outside Milton House and another (unexploded) in the drive.

When the Germans made their next-and last-big raid on Pembroke Dock, on the night of June 11th, 1941, the town was still largely unpopulated and thus a second heavy death roll was avoided.

Although several high explosives were used, this was really an incendiary attack. Locally it is still referred to as "the fire blitz" which is an accurate and expressive description of a memorable night. Thousands of incendiaries were showered over the town and fires sprang up at scattered points. As the flames gained hold, high explosives crashed down, hindering the work of the fire fighters who turned out very quickly and performed valued service.

Several 'planes took part in the attack. They were over the area almost before the last note of the siren had died and immediately the air was filled with a curious hollow, rattling sound. It was a sound which could not be localised or identified. It started in the distance and quickly grew louder and more intense until the whole sky was filled with it and the drone of the 'planes was subdued. "It was like the rattling of ten thousand dry bones" a resident stated afterwards, an apt description. Startled citizens staring skywards were not left long to wonder. Fires broke out all round them - and they knew that the unusual sound was caused by falling incendiaries.

Pembroke Dock was ringed with flame and the horizon was soon shimmering with bright, white, intense light. Inside the circle of fire the following formations of raiders poured their bombs with the usual lack of discrimination. The explosives were mostly of the smaller type and they fell on empty houses, in gardens and open spaces, and a few in the streets. But the town did not escape without paying a toll in life. The whole of the borough was deeply grieved to learn the next day that two lads of tender years, Arthur Kavanagh, aged 13, and Cyril Jenkins, aged 18, of Bufferland, both A.R.P. messengers, had been killed by blast. These lads, with the grand exuberance of youth, were energetically extinguishing incendiaries in a field alongside Bufferland when a stick of explosives fell right alongside them. A well-known resident, Mr. Jack Baskerville, High Street, was killed in the same area while helping his children out into the fields. The blast caught him but the children were saved. Down in Pembroke Street an R.A.F. man sacrificed his life to save his wife. The couple were hurrying to shelter when a bomb screamed down beside them. The husband threw himself upon his wife on the ground, was caught by the blast and killed. His wife, protected by his body, was uninjured, except for shock. On the Neyland side a house received a direct hit killing the four people in it-Mrs. Margaret Evans and her daughter, Mrs. E. M. Evans; Mrs. Esther Griffiths and her daughter, Miss Esther Griffiths.

When the siren sounded many people left their homes and hurried out along the Top Road, rightly or wrongly the practice of seeking shelter in cellars, etc., having become very unpopular since the May raid. There was quite a crowd on the road just outside Pembroke Dock when a bomb was heard - "coming straight at us" one of them said afterwards. The distant whine grew to a rushing, tearing screech and the frightened people threw themselves into the hedges and on to the road, sure that their last moments had come. The bomb landed plumb in the middle of the road but failed to explode! There were many other escapes just as lucky.

Watched from Pembroke, this raid was an awesome spectacle. Fire appeared completely to envelop the town, and through it dark clouds of smoke billowed and played. Every few moments there would be a bright flash against the red glow as the bombs exploded. The darkness above was broken by the golden, rippling stars of anti-aircraft fire and the dot-dot-dot of machine gun bullets as one plane after another tried to shoot down the barrage balloons which obstructed their path. The whole scene was a confusion of darkness and light and noise, awesome and well-nigh overwhelming. "Pembroke Dock is burning to the ground" was the word that went round, and no one thought it an exaggeration. After the phantasmagoria of the night people were surprised next morning to find Pembroke Dock so little changed. Traces of fire, of exhaustion, of tragedy there were, but the town still stood with no widespread havoc left behind by the vicious assault.

The Borough's fire fighting and A.R.P. services had again performed grand service. They and civilians, extinguished innumerable small fires and dealt successfully with some big ones as well, including one in Commercial Row where a shop was completely destroyed and a number of houses extensively damaged. On the following day, the German High Command communique stated "Minor formations of the German Air Force last night attacked harbour installations at Pembroke on the Bristol Channel. Two large and three small fires were observed",

One night in March several bombs fell in and around Pembroke Dock, but little damage was done. One raider flying low over the town met a terrific barrage and it later crashed into the sea

The Second World War, however, was to have a dramatic military targets; there were oil tanks at Llanion and Pennar; RAF Coastal Command and the Royal Navy in the Dockyard, and the Army at Llanion and Pennar Barracks.

Bombing was to play a significant part in the war and the strong German Luftwaffe was soon able to make great use of the airfields of Northern France to attack Britain.

Critical air battles over Southern England, now immortalised as the Battle of Britain, were followed from afar by readers of the Pembrokeshire Press. And at a meeting of Pembroke WI in that crisis month of August, Mrs Jones, wife of the Pembroke Stationmaster, showed a piece of a German Dornier which had been brought down in this country. And, Mrs Andrews exhibited copies of leaflets which had been dropped by German and British aircraft.

Everyone at this time loved a Spitfire, rather forgetting its sister fighter, the Hurricane, which bore the brunt of fighting in the Battle of Britain. And, in common with many areas in the U.K., a number of 'Spitfire Funds' were set up in Pembrokeshire, one of them being the 'Pembroke Borough and District Spitfire Fund'. Milford, for example, also had a fund.

Sadly, it appears that none of the local funds reached their targets; had they all joined together to be, say, the 'Pembrokeshire Spitfire Fund' then this County could well have funded its 'own' Spitfire. However, monies were sent towards new Spitfires. A cheque for £1,400 from the Borough Fund was despatched in February 1941, to Lord Beaverbrook, Minister of Aircraft Production. Call-ups, weddings of Service personnel and the sad deaths of so many local servicemen in the line of duty, were the bread and butter of the censored, and small newspapers of the war years. Medal awards were also reported in depth for example, the award of the D.F.C. to Flight Lieutenant E.J. Brooks, a Sunderland pilot, announced in January 1941, received page one treatment in the Guardian.

The early months of 1941 were grim ones for Pembroke Dock which received a hammering from the Luftwaffe operating under the cover of darkness. In March, the Guardian reported that several bombs were dropped in and around a 'Welsh dock town' without causing casualties. There were also reports of German aircraft being shot down; perhaps such statements were necessary to bolster morale in an area which was getting a pasting.

That some Luftwaffe machines failed to return to base is borne out by the fact that the bodies of at least three German airmen were washed ashore locally. The burial of the first, a 24 year-old Al N.C.O., with full military honours (complete with Swastika flag over the coffin) prompted an outcry in the letters column of the papers; 'maudling sentiment indulged' being the comment of one irate letter writer.

By September 1942, Pembroke Dock could boast a new Flight of the Air Training Corps, formed at the County School under the direction of the Headmaster, Mr. H.M. Dowling.

The year 1943 was to be a decisive one in the Battle of the Atlantic, a battle waged on the doorstep of Pembrokeshire and with PD's flying-boats as major contributors in a relentless war of attrition. Yet the dramatic events happening out in the Atlantic and in the Bay of Biscay, Junkers' Alley, were hardly reported by the censored Press. However, the people of Pembroke Dock and Pembroke's wholehearted commitment to the cause can be judged by the fact that in April 1943, they set themselves a target of raising £90,000 in 'Wings for Victory Week', enough to buy 'one Sunderland, two Catalinas and four Typhoons'.

1940 October RAF Carew Cheriton, too, received the attention of Luftwaffe bombers, a hangar and three aircraft being destroyed in October 1940, and there were further raids in 1941.

1941 May Pembroke Dock town, so vulnerable near its dockyard and air station, was severely hit in sustained raids in May 1941; it was said the community was one of the hardest hit per head of population in the whole of the British Isles.

The Luftwaffe raids prompted the construction of an airfield in the remote south-western corner of the county, near Angle village. From here a succession of fighter squadrons - mostly with Spitfires and Hurricanes but also at one time operating the rare Whirlwind twin-engined fighter - were based from late 1941 onwards.

Both Carew Cheriton and Angle initially were entrusted with maritime protection, and many fruitless patrols were made over the sea, often in marginal weather conditions.

1942 Maritime protection was also the principal role of the second generation of airfields. Talbenny and its sister, Dale, opened in mid-1942 and each for a time operated a squadron of Wellington bombers operating under Coastal Command. One was manned by warlike Czechs, the other by equally warlike Polish airmen.

1943 Two more airfields, at Haverfordwest (Withybush) and Templeton, open. Neither was to adopt an operational role.

1943 Autumn St David's airfield opened

1944 Brawdy opened

These two in partnership undertook operational tasks using Halifax bombers of Coastal Command units.

Pembroke Dock had a continual flow of aircraft into and out of the Haven, many returning for major servicing at a station which became, in the mid-war years, the largest operational flying-boat base in the world. On one occasion ninety-nine flying-boats were on the water or in servicing areas around Pembroke Dock and Neyland on the opposite shore. Part of the railway yard at Neyland was converted for such a purpose and a slipway specially built.

Pembroke Dock played a key role in the Battle of the Atlantic, its flying boats helping to turn the tide against the U-Boats whose successes threatened the very ability of Britain to fight a total war. The flying-boat station was credited with many U-Boat sinkings from mid-1943 onwards, but the cost was very high in both men and machines. As a station it was known through out the Service simply as 'PD' and it is always remembered with great affection by those who had the privilege of being posted to this Haven base. Men of many nations flew from Pembrokeshire air stations, and Pembroke Dock had the distinction of welcoming the first US Navy squadron to operate in the European theatre when VP-63 flew their Catalina flying-boat into the Haven in May 1943. History was also made the same month when an Australian-manned Sunderland made a successful landing on Angle airfield after sustaining a damaged hull in a take-off at sea.

Although principally a county of RAF stations the Fleet Air Arm, operated from local air bases too. For a time they used Angle and in 1943 took over Dale. They also established a seaplane training station at Lawrenny, operating Walrus amphibians and later Kingfisher floatplanes from the upper reaches of the Haven from 1941 to 1943.

The last wartime Christmas at PD brought light relief for the RAF station's personnel when the 'Pembroke Dock Gremlins' staged Aladdin and his Aldis Lamp' at the Garrison Theatre. Man behind this sell-out panto was a 228 Squadron pilot, Flight Lieutenant George Bunting.

The warmth of the festive season was soon dispelled by the cold weather of the New Year. Snow blanketed the county and severely disrupted flying-boat operations. The RAF loaned a snowplough to help clear roads from Pembroke Dock, a gesture which brought thanks from the Borough Council to the Station's C.O., Group Captain Guy Bolland.

VE Day

With V.E. Day in May 1945, came a new beginning and No. 228 Squadron, a long term resident at PD, celebrated peace in style with a Gala Day at Hill Farm, Pembroke Dock. The people of the Borough joined in in force, some 6,300 of them passing through the gates during the day. And there was a big attendance at the dance in the evening; 700 crowded in to dance to the RAF (BBC) Broadcasting Band, leaving another 1,000 hopefuls having to listen from the outside.

Pembroke Dock had been wedding knots tied in the early weeks after the war ended but and even in peacetime sadness and death were not far away. Just days after the war ended an R.C.A.F. officer, Flying officer Benjamin Hunt, died in hospital after being struck by a lorry on a slipway in the RAF Station.

Throughout the last months of the war, men of No. 422 Squadron, R.C.A.F. had made PD their home base and on May 24th, the Canadians celebrated their third anniversary with a big parade through the town. Led by 'Pilot Officer Straddle', a black Cocker Spaniel, the Canadians smartly marched at the head of the several hundred officers and men column from Llanion Barracks to the RAF Station.

Then, in the afternoon, the Squadron played its sister unit. No. 423 Squadron, at baseball and fittingly the home team won. And a memorable day was rounded off with a dance in Llanion Gymnasium, music being provided by the R.C.A.F. Streamliners No.1 Band.

The Canadians, soon to depart from PD, were again in the news in June when sisters Margaret (Rene) and Clarice Thomas, Alberta House, Water Street, Pembroke Dock, married two Canadian servicemen at Bethel Chapel. Theirs were just two of the many marriages

The wartime secrets of Pembroke Dock were on view in September when the RAF Station staged its first 'At Home' open day. The many visitors showed particular interest in the mighty Sunderlands, which they could visit, and the radar section.

Two months later came an impressive ceremony in the RAF Church, the old Dockyard Chapel, when the Chaplain-in-Chief of the RAF dedicated a magnificent stained glass window in memory of those who flew out of Pembroke Dock during the war. Sadly, PD no longer has this fine window- it was taken from the Chapel in 1958 to the Officers' Mess at RAF Mountbatten, Plymouth but later a copy was made which was installed in public library Pembroke Dock

Peacetime

Peacetime saw reduced activity at the base, although the displays continued and Sunderlands were active in many 'Mercy missions'. In 1954 four Sunderlands of 230 Squadron carried home the Scientists of the Greenland Expedition, including some very odd passengers.. Husky dogs 1949 January 1949, PD welcomed back two squadrons of Sunderlands No's 201 and 230. These units were to remain at Pembroke Dock for eight years.

For the Sunderlands the round of exercises and training continued from PD and at times they were involved in major searches for missing ships or aircraft.

1949 July In July 1949, several Sunderlands took part in the search for a weather-recording RAF Halifax missing 500 miles west of Ireland.

1949 September Pembroke Dock re-established the traditional open day at the station. The Guardian reported: "A flight of six Spitfires from Pembrey thrilled the crowd with aerobatics performed against a perfect background of a blue afternoon sky. Mosquitoes snarled t low level over the Yard, banked and then flew in again, followed by buzzing trainer planes, thundering Lincolns and other heavies!".

1950 display suffered badly at the hands of the weather but a Vampire jet did manage a "thrilling display of aerobatics".

A 230 Squadron Sunderland made headlines in August that yeas with a dramatic 1,000 mile mercy flight from inside the Arctic Circle to Dundee carrying a sick baby girl. Piloted by Wing Commander G.G.N. Barrett, AFC, the aircraft had flown scientists to Greenland in advance of a large expedition the following year.

1952 Battle of Britain air display but, as the Press recorded, the weather again intervened preventing the flypast of Washington bombers (American B-29's in RAF service) and other aircraft. However, Meteor and Vampire jets, and the noisy piston engined Harvard trainers, did perform.

Pembroke Dock's Sunderlands were to play vital roles through three summers in the success story of the British North Greenland Expedition both 201 and 230 Squadrons being involved at different times.

1953 August local Sunderlands helped in the aftermath of the devastating earthquakes in the Greek Islands, the big boats being used to bring in much-needed supplies.

Pembroke Dock's post war safety record was an enviable one but it was inevitable that flying accidents did occur from time to time, and 1954 was to be a bad year.

1954 February, Flying Officer B.S.M. Jones and his six-man crew abandoned their blazing Sunderland after making an emergency landing in Angle Bay. Five of the crew were picked up by another Sunderland (Flying Officer D.A. Austin) while the other two were rescued from the freezing waters by a marine craft.

1954 March Sunderland 'Baker' of 201 Squadron crashed in the Haven, killing seven of the 11 men on board. Flight Sergeant E.T. 'Darkie' Evans three times dived into the sinking aircraft and personally rescued two survivors, This was the worst peacetime crash at Pemboke Dock and townspeople in their hundreds attended the military funeral at Llanion Cemetery of the pilot and co-pilot.

1954 May three local Sunderlands provided escort to the Queen and the Royal Family aboard the Royal Yacht Britannia aircraft being captained by Wing Commander J.W. Louw, Flight Lieutenant Stan Bowater and Flying Officer 'Shorty' Bartram.

1954 July New air arrivals in July. These were American Navy twin-engined Marlin flying-boats which came with the US Navy's seaplane tender. Uss Currituck.

The year 1955 was a royal one for Pembrokeshire and the RAF at Pembroke Dock made a special contribution to the young Queen's first visit as Sovereign to the County. The local newspapers reported the Royal visit in great detail.

1955 September RAF Pembroke Dock's last 'At Home' display, in September 1955, was perhaps the best ever, including the new Valiant jet bomber, but the home-based Sunderlands still stole the show. ...

End of the Flying boat Era

1957 RAF Pembroke Dock continued its association with the mighty Sunderland until 1957. The flying-boat squadrons, which had carried out such a variety of tasks in the post-war years, finally left the Haven early in 1957, and the station reverted to the Admiralty in 1959.

1961 It was not quite the end of the Sunderland saga locally as, in March 1961, a Sunderland latterly operated by the French Navy was donated to The Sunderland Trust for preservation and display at Pembroke Dock. This grand old lady was displayed just inside the old RAF station wall until 1971, the salt-laden atmosphere of its external location having taken a great toll of the airframe in that time. The aircraft was transferred to the RAF Museum at Hendon, London, where today it is on permanent view.

For many years until age caught up with everyone, there was a Sunderland reunion – a week long event organised in Pembroke Dock by the RAFA club which welcomed back the multinational fliers from New Zealand, Australia, Holland and Canada were warmly remembered and welcomed by the townspeople. Among other things there was a massive exhibition of old photographs displayed in the upstairs room of the Pater hall. John Worley was the organiser and I was an assistant. John Evans has written several books about the Sunderland. Recently the Sunderland Trust at PD (Pembroke Dock) have been endeavouring raising parts of a Sunderland from the Haven bed

Remnants of the past and memories

RAFA

In May 1948, the Pembroke Dock branch of RAFA. officially formed and took over their new HQ, a hut in Cumby Terrace given by the Station, CO. Group Captain R.V. Brougham. The building was named 'Brougham Hall' after the C.O.

In the grounds of the Health Centre is a small stone plinth with the legend P & T R C commemorating the Pembroke & Tenby Railway Company in 1864,

In the middle of the roundabout, is a small brick building which contained pumping machinery, next to the police station is the Criterion corner. 'two hotels, the Pier and the Criterion, stood here. One night during the last war, an aerial mine demolished both buildings, with great loss of life.

General Gordon (who was slaughtered at Khartoum) stayed in Lewis Street as a young Officer.

The Orielson estates in Pembroke Dock (Pennar and Llanreath) and Monkton formerly the possessions of the Owen Family were purchased in 1856 & 1857 by Miss Jane Martha Jones of Cilwendeg, with part of the compensation money paid by the Government for the Skerries Lighthouse of Anglesey (D/LLO/284)

These estates and the Cilwendeg estate passed to her niece Margaretta Sutton Saurin wife of Mark Antony Saurin

1947

In March 1947, during a dreadful winter, Pembrokeshire was lashed by hurricane strength gales, 90 mph gusts being recorded at RAF Pembroke Dock. A Sunderland was one casualty after, it is believed, a collision with a small craft

1948

The New Year of 1948 was ushered in at the Garrison Theatre at a dance organised by the RAF. Music was by the Blue Stars Band and 'Miss 1948', daughter of Flight Sergeant Henry, made her appearance.

And in September 1948 the RAFA's Battle of Britain Ball was held in the RAF sportshangar. The Battle of Britain Queen that year was Miss Rona Hill, 1/1st Avenue, Britannia Estate.

End of Another Era

2008 The flag of the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service (RMAS) has been lowered for the last time at its Pembroke Dock Headquarters, and establishments around the naval bases, and on its ships. Formed in September 1970, the RMAS provided harbour tugs and pilots at naval bases in the UK and Gibraltar.

It also supplied fuel, ammunition, victualling and other stores in purpose built vessels to ships in harbour and ferried personnel to and from ships at anchor.

The RMAS also provided specialist vessels for tasks like salvage and mooring, torpedo recovery, underwater research and development and degaussing.

In 1996 the running of Marine Services was managed by Serco Denholm under a government owned/commercially operated contract. However, the RMAS continued to provide support to trials around the world with RMAS Newton, range safety and support vessels on the Raasay ranges in north west Scotland, and salvage and mooring vessels that have operated around the world.

Serco Denholm will now run all marine services for the Royal Navy following the award of a 15-year £1 billion Private Finance Initiative contract by the Marine Services team in 2007

Just an afterthought "U-861's" Link with Pembroke Dock

This "U"boat survived a long voyage to Penang and back in 1944 and sank five merchant ships on route.

This submarine under Captain Jurgen Oesten then amazingly finished her active days in the Royal Naval Dockyard at Pembroke Dock.

After leaving Penang she became a "blockade" runner for the return voyage to Europe.

Upon Surrender in May 1945 at Trondheim, Norway, the Navy took her to Pembroke Dock with 20 of her German crew and proceeded to unpack her keel which was still full of contraband. She was carrying 144 tons of wolfram, iodene, tin and rubber, all desperately needed by Germany

The "U" boat was thrown open to the public from 15th to 20th of June 1945. Finally on 21st June she was officially visited by the Mayor and Mayoress of Haverfordwest and the Chairman of Milford Haven Urban District Council, with the respective District Councillors.

"U-861's" last voyage was to Lisahally, Northern Ireland where she was due to be scuttled on New Year's Eve 1945. She managed to have her tow slipped and with more defiance, had to be sunk by gunfire from the Polish destroyer "Vlaskawica" with acknowledgements to Captain Oesten of "U-861", Mr Walter Irland of Milford Haven and Dr Arthur Banks.

Tuthill Frederick Robert Lloyd Rear-Admiral USNR of Pembroke Dock Perhaps the most unlikely Pembrokeshire sea career was that of a corporal of the Pembroke Yeomanry who became an admiral in the United States Navy. Corporal Frederick Robert Lloyd Tuthill, born in Pembroke Dock on 23 January 1898, served in the Dardanelles and Palestine and on de-mob trained at the Marconi College at Cardiff. He later emigrated to the United States and joined the US Naval Reserve as a lieutenant (jg) in 1928. Tuthill was called to active service in October 1940 and served with distinction as a radio specialist. He became Communications Officer to the Naval Task Force Commander in the allied invasion of the south of France in August 1944 and later held key posts with the Chief of Naval Operations, Commander Naval Forces Europe and with the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Fred Tuthill retired to Williamsburg as a rear admiral USNR (retired), corporal Pembroke Yeomanry (retired), a unique record of service.

Penally

How long have people lived in Pembrokeshire – well if the evidence of Hoyles, Nana and Priory Cave Monkton a very long time. How long has Christianity been practiced on Caldy Island? Is there a connection between St Deniols Church at Penally and St Daniel's Church (St Deniol) at Pembroke. Both I believe are pre-Norman and what was the original dedication of the Church of St Mary's on Caldy Island? Mysteries but there is one for me near our times. I am not a genealogist just someone interested in historical research but there was a baby born in Penally with the surname Crane, on the 1st of April 1830. He was given the Christian name of James --- I have not got the Census records but that is the only occurrence of the name Crane in my records for Penally. Ten years later James Crane of Penally was recorded as one of the first inmates of the Pembroke Union Workhouse. According to the Mormon Records he left Liverpool on the 19th April aboard the S Curling and arrived at Boston on 23rd of May. James survived all the hardships and first at Iowa city married Alice Davis, then 7 years later married Elizabeth Stewart at Salt Lake City and finally 4 years later Rachael Briggs. My question is did they each die early of did he have three wives living at the same time???? Incidentally he died at the age of 56 Basil H J Hughes

Penally

Village South west of Tenby on slope of eastern end of Ridgeway overlooking the burrows and the sea.

The ancient church has undergone restoration, in 1851 and 1884. It is believed built on the site of an earlier 6c Celtic church and contains a 13c altar tomb of William de Haunton and his wife, a Norman font and two squints at the angles between the chancel and the transepts.

Acc/to Old Parish Churches – Salter.

The village is on a spur overlooking Tenby golf-course and the sea. The church is of interest, particularly for the elaborately-decorated Celtic Cross now located in the south transept. Behind the Penally Arms Hotel are the ruins of the medieval St. Deiniol's Chapel. St. Teilo, one of St. David's contemporaries, is thought to have been born here, and there was once an important monastery somewhere in the vicinity.

Penally St Nicholas

The nave, chancel, and transepts with squints are all 13th century. The porch is 14th century and the tower is probably 16th century. Inside is a late 13th century altar tomb with an incised cross on the top with heads. The church, dedicated to St Nicholas has a 10c wheel headed cross and two broken shafts of 9c and 10c crosses. 13c barrel vaulted ceiling, Norman font, squints, tomb to the de Nauntons [1260 - 90] in alabaster. Altar tomb with two small heads carved in marble and let into a covering stone under the arms of a cross. Copy of the inscription which runs round the stone was made about 1700 by Edward Lhuyd, Keeper of the Asmolean museum "William de Hamton et Isemay sa femme gesent ici. Dieu de leur alme eyt merci. Amen".

According to Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments The Parish Church

The Church is formed of chancel 21ft by 11 ½ ft, nave 40 ½ ft by 16 ft, south transept 20ft by 13 ft, north transept 18ft by 11 ft, tower at the west end and a south porch. All parts are vaulted. There are no carved details throughout the church, and the arches are perfectly plain. The building is probably entirely of the same period – the latter half of the 13th century. Both transepts are connected with the chancel by a diagonal passage across each angle. All the windows are modern. The font is square, and the lower edge of the basin has the usual scalloping; it is probably earlier than the present building. Beneath a plain arch in the east wall of the south transept is an altar tomb, the upper slab of which bears an incised cross having arms terminated with a simple fleur de lis ornament; the foot stands upon a calvary of three steps. Below the horizontal arms of the cross, and on either side of the cross-stem, two small squares of grey marble have been inserted, the one on the right bearing the much reduced face of a man, that on the left showing the face of a woman. An inscription which runs round the edge of the slab is now very indistinct; It has been the subject of diverse readings. Happily a copy of the inscription was taken by of for Mr Edward Lhuyd shortly before the year 1700, when the lettering was more distinct than it is today. The inscription is probably intended to read William de Hampto[n et] Isemay [Isebay] sa femme [gisent] ici Dieu de lour alme eyt merci Amen (It appears by the Minister's accounts of the period that Thomas de Hanton [or Hampton] was seneschal of Pembroke in the year 1326-7. William may have been his son). The slab is probably of the period 1260 – 90

Fenton refers to this church (Tours p443) speaks of a "screen of elegant workmanship" and also of "a fine stone coffin very perfect, and richly overlaid with curious fretwork raised on its lid and sides, with a hollow out like a handle at the other". . This most probably refers to the missing inscribed cross noticed below. ---Visited 7th April 1915

Fenton (1810) also records that the rector lived in a house which bore marks of having been a very dignified mansion, and of great extent, by portions of ruined walls in various directions, and covered by much ground".

St Teilo's Cross.

This slender cross is said to mark the birth place of St Teilo one of the earlier Bishops of Llandaff Cathedral and was held in so much reverence that nearly 20 churches in Wales were dedicated to him. When he died 3 Churches insisted on receiving his body. To settle the dispute the body is said to have miraculously divided into 3 separate corpses. Consequently each church had the honour of burying his remains, but the church at Llandaff has always claimed to contain the body of the real St Teilo.

Behind the Penally Arms Hotel are the medieval ruins of St Deiniols Chapel Celtic monastic establishment which was dissolved or moved elsewhere before 1500.

Acc/to Welsh Churchman Aug 1997.

Work has been completed on the restoration and preservation of the crosses

The work was carried out by Alun Teagle, Building Conservation of Ruperra Castle, Lower Machen, Newport.

Acc/to George Cavill.

Holy wells - one listed in 1301 - site now lost dedicated to St Teilo. Another one opposite St Deniol's chapel - known as St Deniol's well.

1851 Arch Camb Fragments of Crosses Penally Church

During the recent reparations etc at Penally Church several fragments of early crosses have been found as well as some mural paintings, apparently of the early portion of the 14th century, near the chancel arch.

1864 Arch Camb The Small Cross at Penally.

Penally appears, from the early Christian remains discovered there, to have been a favourite spot with the artistic monks of the middle ages. In addition to the very beautiful cross, which stands near the west end of the church, there is a curious, large, flat stone, ornamented with rude dragon-patterns, in the churchyard to the north side of the church ; and two small but very interesting stones, one ornamented with an interlaced ribbon-pattern, inscribed " Hec est crux quam sedificavit Mail Domnc "in Hiberno-Saxon minuscule letters ; and the other covered with the peculiar Chinese-like pattern which is found in many of the oldest Irish and Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, where found some years ago in the vestry of the church, and which ought to be affixed to the inner walls of the church itself for safer preservation.

The elegant cross in the churchyard is six feet and a half high, and is ornamented on both sides with interlaced ribbon patterns of an ordinary character on the west side, the edges, and portion of the eastern side. The latter, however, is more elaborate than the western side, showing that its present position, facing the western end of the church, is that for which it was designed. The slightly enlarged boss of the cross, on this eastern side, exhibits an unusual angulated and interlaced ornament ; of which Mr. Petrie has given an example from Glendalough, in his work on the Round Towers, and others occur in the Scotch crosses ; whilst in the upper part of the shaft the interlacement is carried up into a remarkable vegetable form, with leaves, berries, and intertwining stems.

The head of the cross is formed of four equal-sized arms, of the Maltese shape, ornamented with interlaced ribbons, and having a boss in the centre, and the spaces between the arms are pierced. The whole of the cross has a narrow, raised line with oblique impressions along the outer margin. The peculiar, foliated ornamentation of this cross, united to the more ancient interlaced patterns, induces me to think that it is not of an earlier date than the twelfth century.

1922 RCAM Carved cross and fragments of crosses Penally

The importance of Penally as the ecclesiastical centre of the early religious labours of St Teilo, the contemporary of St David, and of the political, social and religious influences which the traditions relating to the great Celtic missionary cannot fail to have exercised over the early Scandinavian settlers, is evidenced by the splendid, though fragmentary remains of richly carved crosses which still exist at Penally, and are doubtless but a tithe of the beautiful objects which constitute this place the Welsh Monasticism.

Still erect, on what probably is its original site, is the beautiful freestanding cross. It is without an inscription.

On the north side of the church is a shaft which may have been crowned with a similarly formed cross-head to the former. It was discovered about the year 1950 concealed under a gallery at the west end of the church.

Two fragments of what seem to be independent crosses are preserved within the church. The ornament on the second fragment is similar to that exhibited on the sides of the broken shaft.

Missing Inscribed Cross

According to an entry of two lines in Arch Camb (1851 II ii 340), several stones covered with carved interlaced work were found about that date (serving as jambs to a fireplace in the vestry of the Church) One is said to have borne the inscription HEC EST CRUX QUAM EDIFICAVIT MAILDOMN or as given in Mason's Tenby Guide MEIL DOMNC. This stone seems to have disappeared.

St Deiniol's Chapel

About 200yds north of the parish church the Ord. Sheet marks a "Fern-House". This is a ruined and roofless building known as St Deiniol's Chapel, which in Fenton's Day (Tour 444) stood on a field now forming part of the grounds of a residence called Penally Abbey. It appears to have been a small building having a vaulted undercroft and chapel above approached by an external stairway at the west end. The window-opening at the east end has appointed arch. The outer walls are still standing to their full height, so that it is greatly to be hoped that the ruin will be carefully cleared under competent supervision of the rubbish with which it is cumbered – Visited 7th April 1915

Hoyles Mouth and Longbury Bank Caves

Hoyle's Mouth -Palaeolithic inhabited cave. Name probably a corruption of "Hole's Mouth or "The Oyle" situated in the side of a limestone cliff 1 ½ miles SW of Tenby.

Part of the bones of a human skeleton and the bones of a cave bear and Irish Elk were found when the cave was examined by Professor Rolleston and E Laws in 1878.

RCAM - Situated on the south side of the river Ritec, some 50 ft above sea level, these caves were exhaustively explored by the Rev G N Smith of Gumfreston, in the early sixties of the 19th century. Further exploration followed by Sir William Boyd Dawkins F.R.S and Edward Laws F.S.A when relics of the Palaeolithic, Neolithic and later ages, together with animal remains, were found beneath stalagmite deposits. Accompanying the extensive series of finds in the Tenby Museum are large plans of the caves, on which are marked the sites where various objects were discovered. The caves have suffered much from recent explorers, who have "greatly widened the passages and incidentally destroyed most of the stalactites" (A L Leach Guide to Tenby 1908) ----- Visited 9th April 1915.

Excavation -- Western Mail 17 Aug 1996.

Scientists find traces of Ice Age people:- Archaeologists have uncovered new evidence about life in Wales at the end of the last Ice Age. Dr. Stephen Aldhouse-Green of University of Wales College Newport has completed excavation work in two caves in Pembrokeshire, one of the few areas not covered by ice during the Ice Age. Dr Aldhouse-Green, whose investigations of the caves date back to 1984, said his latest findings had still to be assessed.

"We have gained a lot of knowledge about life in south Pembrokeshire during that time". "The earliest evidence of human occupation at, Hoyle's Mouth on the edge of the Ritec Valley near Tenby is an engraving tool, dating from 30,000 years ago." He said the cave was also used by Palaeolithic hunters about 12,000 years ago. On the hill above he excavated 750 more recent flints in an area of eight square metres. "More recent still were 17 Neolithic burials at Little Hoyle, dating from 4,750 years ago, and two at Hoyle's Mouth 5000 years ago."

RCAM Blackrock Watch Tower

A circular shaft open to the sky about ½ mile north east of Penally. It is built of limestone with a pointed arched doorway to the north east. The outer circumference at base is 35 ½ ft, its present height about 20ft. The interior had two stories, the lower being 10 ft in height and lighted at 5ft above the level by a single slit, commanding a wide prospect down the Bristol Channel. The entrance has a width of 3 ½ feet, a height of 4ft to the spring of the arch and of 2 ½ ft from the spring to the crown. It was repaired by Mr Laws F.S.A. who used for the purpose some stones "removed from an old ruin in Tenby". Its original purpose was in all probability that of a beacon; local tradition asserts that it was used later as a snuff mill ---- Visited 7th April 1915

RCAM Giltar Cliffs

A small tumulus which stood on Giltar Cliff in the south east of the parish has disappeared in recent military operations. It had been examined some few years ago and the finds, which comprised charcoal, pottery, white pebble stones and flint chips, given to the Tenby Museum. The precise site is now forgotten ---- Visited 9th April 1915

Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

Penalloy – a parish in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke 1 ½ miles S.W. from Tenby containing 346 inhabitants. This Parish, which is situated at the south eastern extremity of the county, and on the shores of the Bristol Channel, comprises a moderate portion of arable and pasture land, the whole, with the exception only of a very small tract of common, enclosed and in a good state of cultivation. It formerly belonged to the family of De Barri of Manorbeer Castle, and in the 1st year of Henry IV, was bestowed upon John de Windsor, but soon after reverted to the crown, it was granted by letters patent to Thomas ab Owen of Trellwyn, in the parish, from whose family, on the death of his descendant, Thomas Bowen, it passed by marriage to the family of Philipps of Picton. Trellwyn, the ancient seat of the ab Owens, or Bowens, was garrisoned for the king, during the parliamentary war, by Lord Carberry; but being besieged by the parliamentary forces, after an obstinate resistance, was finally surrendered on honourable terms. The village of Penalloy is exceedingly pretty. The parish abounds with limestone, which is quarried upon an extensive scale, part being exported to the coast of Devonshire, and part burnt into lime for manure, for the supply of the neighbourhood. Some fine specimens of Madipore are found here.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £4 17 11d and endowed with £200 royal bounty, net income, £77, with a glebe house; patron the Bishop of St David's; impropriator, Lord Milford. The church is an ancient cruciform structure of late years repaired and enlarged by the erection of a gallery containing sixty sittings; on an altar-tomb are two heads in relief with an imperfect inscription "Wm. De Raynoor et Isemay sa femme, virgo beata Maria ayt Merci, Amen" In the churchyard is an old circular cross of small dimensions, without any legible inscription, the shaft of which is elaborately ornamented with rich tracery; and portions of two other crosses are also preserved in the church or churchyard. The vicarage house is an elegant building, surrounded with beautiful gardens, and commanding some fine marine views; it was erected by the incumbent, in 1822, under the provisions of the Gilbert's Act. A neat and commodious schoolhouse has been built also by the vicar in which a day and Sunday school is held. Caldey Island is within the limits of the parish, for all ecclesiastical purposes.

1847 State of Education in Wales

Parish of Penally – Village school – The school room has been built by the vicar, the Rev J Hughes, on ecclesiastical ruins. The walls are sound; but the floor, the roof and one of the windows are out of repair. The master writes well with his left hand, having lost, when young, the use of his right hand. He said “I teaches” several times.

The furniture consists of one desk for the master, three long desks, two square tables, and four benches; but no maps, cards, or prints of any kind.

The major part of the scholars are labourers’ and mechanics’ children who pay 1d a week.

The sum of £13 is guaranteed to the master by the vicar, which is made up by subscription and a collection in the church. The girls are taught sewing two days a week; one day by Mrs Bough Allen, and the other by a woman paid by Miss Jane Robson.

The 4th chapter of Romans was read; and questions proposed by me (the master was engaged in receiving money towards the clothes club), they said that Paul wrote this Epistle – did not know what Epistle meant, nor what was Paul’s original name – he persecuted the church- knew nothing of his conversion, nor where Rome was. Pembrokeshire is bounded on the East by Carmarthenshire, on the south by the Bristol Channel, on the west by the Irish Channel did not know by what it was bounded on the north – did not know the countries composing Great Britain.

Some of the copy books were fairly written.

G B Hughes esq, informed that the labourers’ wages on their own finding are 1s 2d a day; masons and carpenters get 2s, 2s 4d, and 2s 6d; farm servants from £4 to £8 a year. (They do not attend the Sunday school and there is no evening school in the parish); female servants 5s to £4 a year.

He knew of no drunkards in the parish. There was only one public house, and very little business was done in that. Farmers could read and write; so could labourers also who were brought up in the parish within the last 25 years, but imperfectly. The people are steady and very industrious

1887 The old Quay House Arch Camb

The marsh land lying between Tenby Bay and St Florence village has been reclaimed by several operations, and the banks by which this was effected still exist, but in consequence either of silting or upheaval have ceased to be of any value, since if they were removed the tide would not now run into the valley.

One bank cuts the march under Gumfreston; a second starts opposite to the ruins of Scotsboro House, extending to a spot near Holloway Bridge; and a third runs parallel with the Pembroke and Tenby railway. This last was built by Sir John Owen in 1811. When the other two were erected is unknown.

The branch of the marsh which was reclaimed by the bank running from Scotsboro Gate to Holloway ends somewhat abruptly at a point a little beyond the well known ossiferous cave called Hoyles Mouth. Near this place is a ruined house known as "Old Quay". It has been used as a cottage within the last twenty years, but from peculiarities of construction appears to be an ancient structure worthy of record in our pages. The building is not only unroofed, but in some places the walls are levelled to their foundations; and the whole is so overgrown with ivy, briars, blackthorn and young ash, that it is not very easy to make a ground plan

The house never had an upper story, and its chief feature must always have been the large square chimney which towers over the little cottage. In this chimney was the only the only fireplace. On entering the doorway this great fireplace faces you,

The original windows were square somewhat splayed, with a seat in the wall under them.

Alterations were carried out at a later date but perhaps the most notable feature in the house is the substantiality of the older portions. All angles are of ashlar, the partition walls as thick and well built as the outer walls, and the whole put together with that excellent old mortar known in this district as "old castle mortar".

I am disposed to think this cottage is of very considerable antiquity, not improbably dating back to the unknown period when vessels discharged their cargo at the "Old Quay" before it was cut off from the sea by the Scotsboro and Holloway Bridge banks.

E Laws.

RCAM 1915 – Old Quay House

Described by Laws (Arch Camb 1887 V iv 146) as near Hoyles Mouth cave, stood a ruined house known as the Old Quay House. Its exact site cannot now be located.

1923 Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments Trefloyne

A residence whose earliest associations ascend to the days when the disciples of St Teilo and St David struggled for ascendancy in the province of Dyfed.

The only remains of a late 16th century residence is a fragment of one of the gables; the pointed window set in the gable has lost its tracery. Adjacent to the house is the base of a columbarium 15ft square, with three or four sets of nests. The proper form of the name is the Welsh Trellwyn - the villa luin Teliau of the book of Lan Dav (ed Rhys and Evans p 255) The adjoining field is styled Castle Gwynne in the Tithe Schedule of the parish almost certainly the site of the eccluis gunniau ubi natus sanctus Teliaus

Near a modern house of that name, close to Penally, are the sparse fragments of a 15c house garrisoned for the king on the outbreak of the civil war. It was taken by assault in 1644 by Major General Laugharne and destroyed, a large number of weapons, cattle and horses were captured. Fenton 1810 mentions, however, what he terms the " venerable mansion" of Trellwyn, better known by its corrupted name of Treflyn, but in the Ordnance map spelt Trelloyan. Fenton states that Agnes, heiress of John ap Howell, conveyed it to Gwyllim ap Evan ap Owen, of the great house of Pentre Evan in the same county; but in another part of his work he states that it was granted to Thomas ap Owen, of the same family, by Queen Elizabeth. The estate came, however, into the hands of Phillips of Picton, by marriage with the sole heiress of the last of the ap Owen, or better known as the Bowen family. It suffered but little in the Parliamentary war, but probably became a ruin when the owner of it preferred to reside at Picton.

Whitewell

The ruins of what must have been an important house, now standing within the bounds of Whitehall Farm about 1 ½ miles west of Penally village. Fenton makes no allusion to it, and little or nothing has been recorded of it. On plan the ruins show a building of "L" shape – a hall and a wing. The hall had a fireplace at the south end; it stood on a vaulted undercroft. The east wall has disappeared. The wing apparently of two stories, was also built over a vaulted cellar; it retains several ruined lancets and remains of fireplaces. The walls are heavily clothed with ivy, and the interior is choked with undergrowth. The ruins of an outbuilding adjacent to the main structure comprise a gable pierced by a single lancet with a range of pigeon holes above --- Visited 3rd May 1922

Whit well 1810 , nothing is recorded as to its owners ; and although Fenton must have passed near it, he makes no mention of it.

Carswell

1867 Domestic architecture of South Pembrokeshire Arch Camb

Of all the vaulted houses which have come under our notice, Carswell, near Tenby, is perhaps the smallest, and in some respects one of the most interesting; for although dismantled and roofless, its simple arrangements have not been mixed up with later additions. At first sight, with its steep gables, it has almost the appearance of a small Norman house, if Normans ever built houses of such a character. Of its real age, however, little can be affirmed except that it must be long after the last Flemish invasion. The house consisted of an upper and lower apartment, the latter strongly vaulted, with a fire- place occupying nearly the whole breadth of one end. A large stone seat, which may have also served for a table, is coeval with the building. The square window over this seat has been enlarged at a subsequent period. On the opposite side the vault has been cut through to communicate with another apartment, also provided with a chimney, but which had never been vaulted, and is probably of later date. Access to the upper story is obtained by a small external staircase. Originally it had four small well-splayed windows, two of which are blocked. The masonry of the fireplace is of the rudest character, without any architectural details. From the completeness, however, of the whole edifice, and its small dimensions, it is certain that we have, in this instance, a specimen of a very early house, conveying some idea of the simplicity of the domestic arrangements of the period, when a hall for general use and a solar were considered all that were necessary for a gentleman. The upper room, however, is larger than would be required for a mere solar or retiring room for the ladies of the family, and probably was used as the general apartment of the master and mistress. It may have been divided into two chambers by a wooden partition, as the numbers of windows (five in all) seem unnecessary. At present only two remain, deeply splayed, and too narrow to admit an entrance. Some windows have been blocked, and do not appear, in their present state, to have been so deeply splayed. Neither of the two chimneys are of the round form. In the principal chimney the oven was at the side.

Another building, partly in ruins, stands opposite the small house just described. This also consisted of two stories, the upper one being reached by an external flight of stairs. The lower part consists of three or four vaulted chambers; but as these are without lights or fireplaces, they were probably used for storing goods or housing cattle. At the present day they are used for the latter purpose. If this building served as the out offices of the smaller one, the offices must have presented a more imposing appearance than the house. The domestics may, however, have been lodged there, as there could have been but little accommodation in the original mansion for a tolerable sized family. Both buildings were surrounded with a high wall, part of which remains. The spring that gives its name to the house (Carswell) is still of high repute for its excellent water. Whether the first syllable gives a man's name is doubtful.

RCAM

A ruined building; its date cannot be computed with precision from any remaining architectural features, but it may be conjectured to fall within the 15th century. The house has been described as consisting of “an upper and lower apartment, the latter strongly vaulted with a fireplace occupying nearly the whole breadth of one end. A large stone seat, which may also have served for a table is coeval with the building --- Access to the upper story is obtained by a small external staircase. A very similar building in an equally ruined condition stands on the opposite side of the road. One or other of these dwellings should be cleared from rubbish and carefully preserved as an example of the earliest among the smaller domestic buildings of the county – Visited 21st April 1915

Drus Selton

A single floor house or cottage, of which the fireplace and a typical round chimney are the only remaining features of assured antiquity. A portion of it was inhabited until recently. It may date back to the early 16th century.

RCAM -- Finds

Neolithic Burial

“Workmen, in cutting a channel through the Giltar sand hills discovered a female skeleton, some 18ft below the surface. It had been arranged in a crouching attitude, and round it were a few stones” (Laws, Little England, 29, n). The skull was dolichocephalic

Bone Arrowhead

A bone arrowhead from a shell heap on Giltar, is preserved in the Tenby Museum, where it was placed by Mr E Laws F S A - seen 21 May 1920

Dug out

“Some years ago” wrote Mr Laws (Little England beyond Wales pp5, 25) “during the time of Rev G N Smith rector of Gumfreston a canoe or “Dug out” formed from a single tree, was discovered in the marsh near Hoyles’s Mouth..... From the account he gave of the boat, I should think there can be little doubt that it was either Neolithic or Bronze age “This is one of the three “dug outs” recorded as found in Pembrokeshire.

Roman

A “broken Simian Patera” found by Mr Laws in Longbury Cave (Little England p47)
Apart from the objects in the Tenby Museum the results of many years exploration of Pembrokeshire antiquates by Mr Laws have not been traced

Roman Coin

Two copper coins of Maximianus found at Trefloyne (Cambrian Journal 1862 p95)

Medieval Figure

“About the year 1800, a rude figure of a Virgin and child was found among rubbish at Trefloyne”
(Arch Camb 1877 IV viii 315). This relic could not be traced.

Introduction

Caldey Island is listed as being under Penally Parish

Caldey Island is famous for the Monastery and Monks who have lived there. However, the history of human occupation on the island goes back much further. Flints, blades and penknife points have been found in caves on Caldey Island, indicating that humans occupied the area 12,000 years ago. However, at that time the sea level was lower, so the coastline would have been further out and Caldey Island would have been a hill in the Bristol Channel plain. The island was also occupied during later periods, and Stone Age bones have been analysed to investigate what people were eating. The Mesolithic bones suggest a very high sea diet - up to 70% of the diet - but by the Neolithic, they were not eating fish. This provides strong evidence that the transition from hunting and gathering to farming happened quickly - possibly within a hundred years. However, it is not clear whether farming was brought in by people from other parts of Britain and the continent or whether it was adopted in the Neolithic age by local people.

Island is the natural breakwater for Tenby harbour - about 450 acres consist of highly productive land and there are about 100 acres of foreshore.

It has been called the Island of Saints. As early as the 6c, if not before, it was the site of a monastery reputed to be an offshoot of the famous one at Llantwit Major - Archbishop Dubricius, (a descendant of the Roman Emperor Maximus [383-8]) was said to spend Lent on the island and on the death of Abbot Piro or Pyr (the first Abbot) in 521 AD he appointed a monk named Samson as the new Abbot. For a time St David, St Dyfrig, Gildas, Maglorius, Paul de Leor and Illtyd dwelt upon the island.

From the 12 to the 15c it belonged to the Benedictines of the congregation of Tiron. Upon the dissolution of the Monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII it passed into secular hands. In 1906 it became the property of an Anglican Benedictine community which was received into the Church of Rome in 1912 and in 1928 it was sold to the monks of the Cistercian Order from Chimay, Belgium. The Monastery (the Abbey of St Samson) is the principal building on the Island.

The village church is a small and very plain building possibly of Celtic Foundation. The old Monastic buildings (St Illtyd's Priory) date from the 13c. An interesting relic is an Ogham stone containing two inscriptions and dating from the 6th or 8th century.

Viking name of Caldey meaning Cold Island. Old name Ynys Pyr (the island of Pyr) probably from the first abbot.

It is 2 1/2 miles south of Tenby and is one and a half miles long by two thirds of a mile wide 500 acres approx and is one of the few places in the UK where the Mediterranean snail Felix pisana can be found.

Abbey of St Samson - first Celtic monastery [6c]

1113 island given by Henry 1 to Martin de Tours, who gave it to his mother who handed the island over to the Benedictine abbey of St Dogmaels in 12c. Remained a priory of 12 monks until the Reformation. In 1500 the Priory had an income of under £100 or less than 6 religious.

When it was dissolved 1535 the land was granted by Henry VIII to John Bradshaw of Presteign whose family held it till 1612 after which it passed through many hands

In 1897 Rev. W Done Bushell, chaplain of Harrow school bought it. Restored Priory church and St David's Church (parish church of the island built by the Benedictine monks 12c). East window in priory church is a memorial to his work.

1906 island sold to Benedictine Monks of the Church of England who did much building and restoration work.

1913 their Abbot and most of the monks went over to the Church of Rome.

They moved in 1928 to Prinknash Abbey and the island was sold to the Cistercians. The stain glass window of St Illtud in the south wall of the nave of the old priory church is by Dom Theodore Bailly a Benedictine monk.

Interior of the Abbey was gutted by fire in 1940 and rebuilt ten years later, Coates Carter architect.

The church of St Illtyd claims to be the oldest British Church now in Roman Catholic hands. A memorial stone from 6 or 8c and has Latin and Ogham inscriptions crosses on its faces and in Ogham it says MAG---DUDR---INB; parts of the inscription are broken off. The Latin Inscription is AT SINGNO CRUCIS IN ILLAM FINGSI ROGO OMNIBUS AMBULANTIBUS IBI EXORENT PRO ANIMAE CATUOCONI {AND BY THE SIGN OF THE CROSS WHICH I HAVE FASHIONED UPON THIS STONE I ASK ALL WHO WALK THERE THAT THEY PRAY FOR THE SOUL OF CATUONCONUS}.

It is feasible that the inscription refers to to the servant of Dubricius - meaning Piro. In about 750ad a cross and a latin inscription were added. The stone was discovered in the ruins of the priory in the 19c and then used to form the lintel for a window, later it was used for a garden seat.

St Dubricius (Dyfrig) set up the first monastery and Piro was appointed abbot. He is reputed to have enjoyed a drink or two and one night in about 520 AD he had one too many and on returning to his cell in a state of drunkenness he fell into the monastery well. When his fellow monks pulled him out they found he had drowned. In spite or may be because of this, he was still regarded as a saint. Samson was then appointed as Piro's successor. He tried in vain to curb the monks drinking habits. Finally, defeated, by problems of discipline he left Caldy and retired with some of the more temperate monks to Stackpole where they took over an abandoned camp - and Samson settled in a cave in the side of the headland.

The caves on the island were once inhabited in the Old Stone Age, one was Nanna's Cave. During quarrying many artefacts have been found including flint tools, animal remains and evidence of Middle Stone Age flint "factory". There is also a Bronze Age burial mound.

More recently, in 1780s John Paul Jones the American privateer is reputed to have repeatedly "watered" his frigate "Ranger" at Caldy Island.

St Margarets island only 2 acres in extent was broken off from Caldey by great storms about 1530; it has some remains of old buildings, probably monastic, which were converted into cottages for quarrymen during the last century.

1839 A Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

CALDEY ISLAND, the principal of a cluster of insulated rocks in the bay of Tenby, and forming an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of Castlemartin, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (E.) from the main land: the population is returned with the parish of Penally. This island, of which the ancient British name is Ynys Pyr, is about one mile and a quarter in length, and half a mile in breadth, and comprises upwards of 600 acres of land, lying on a bed of limestone, something more than half being in a state of cultivation. Owen, speaking of the fertility of the spot, describes it as abounding with corn; but he adds that "all their ploughs goe with horses, for oxen the inhabitants dare not keepe, fearing the purveyors of the pirattes, as they themselves told me." There are some large limestone quarries. Robert, son of Martin de Tours, founded a priory here in the reign of Henry I., which he dedicated to St. Mary, and made a cell to the abbey of Dogmael, to which establishment the whole of the island was granted by his mother. Its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £5. 10. 11. The remains have been mostly converted into offices attached to a mansion erected on part of the site, now belonging to the proprietor of the island. Among them is the tower of the ancient conventual church, which is surmounted by a stone spire, and forms a conspicuous object of picturesque appearance, imparting, with the rest of the ruins, an interesting and romantic character to this sequestered spot. An ancient chapel, about a quarter of a mile from the priory, was repaired a few years ago, and service is performed in it when any clergyman crosses from the main land for the purpose. A lighthouse, with a steady light, has been erected on the island, which is of great service to vessels entering Tenby harbour, distant about three miles.

1908 An Island of the Saints Arch Camb

By the Rev. W. DONE BUSHELL, M.A., F.S.A.

A LITTLE to the south of Tenby lies a long low island, whose monotonous outline gives but little indication to the casual observer of the rich store of interest and of beauty which it contains. It is the Isle of Caldey, known of old as Ynys-y-Pyr, and rich, in spite of all appearances, as well in natural beauty as in hallowed memories. Encircled also as it is, at least in summer time, by a calm and boundless sea, blue with a blueness which recalls the Riviera or the Italian Lakes, and severed by it from the madding crowd, it seems to be especially fitted for a home for those who deem that they are called to live the quiet life with God. And hence perhaps it is that the traditions of the island are, as a matter of fact, monastic; that there were Celtic monks upon it in the early centuries, and Norman monks in later times; that there are Benedictine brothers still, though in obedience now to Canterbury, not to Rome; maintaining, each community in turn, their solemn round of praise and prayer.

The islands — for if we include St. Margaret's there are two — are separated from the mainland by a sound or channel of about two-thirds of a mile in breadth, and of an average depth of about 40 ft. at low, and 65 ft. at high spring tides. Now, south of Milford Haven, Pembrokeshire consists of a peninsula built up of mountain limestone and of old red sandstone, in alternate bands, whose trend is west-north-west and east-south-east; and two such bands are represented on these islands, the mountain limestone to the north, the old red sandstone to the south. The larger island is about a mile and a-half in length from east to west, and about two-thirds of a mile in breadth from north to south; and, amongst other noticeable features of geological and pre-historic interest, there is on it a good raised beach; and, in caves now quarried away, the well-known Rev. G. N. Smith, of Gumfreston, and Professor Boyd Dawkins found many Pleistocene bones; the former also came upon a number of Neolithic human bones, with the remains of fish, dog, sheep or goat, and cattle, which are now in the Tenby Museum; whilst in September last some early burials and a kitchen-midden were found in Priory Bay. The water supply is excellent.

It is said (see Cambrian Journal 1855) that coins of Constantine the Great, of Constans, and of Carausius, have been found upon St. Margaret's; the earliest written records, however, date from the sixth century. We gather from the lives of St. Paul de Leon, St. Samson, and others, in the Acta Sanctorum and elsewhere, that in that century there was a monastery on the island, which was in close connexion with the celebrated retreat at Llantwit in Glamorganshire. A writer who wrote the recently discovered life of St. Paul de Leon in the year 884, expressly tells us that there was a certain island, Pyr by name, within the borders of Demetia, in which St. Illtyd spent much of his time/ and where he was associated with, amongst others, St. Paul de Leon, St. David, St. Gildas, and St. Samson; and Pyr was most indubitably the former name of Caldey, as Giraldus and the deed of gift to St. Dogmaels amply testify. We read much also of the island in the various lives of St. Samson, which are of considerable authority, being all derived from an original memoir by one Enoch, whose uncle was a near kinsman of the saint, and who had himself conversed with Anne, St. Samson's mother. We learn from them that the name of the first Abbot of Caldey was Piro, and that upon his death — he was unfortunately drowned — St. Samson was appointed to succeed him by the Archbishop Dubric, who was then upon the island, where indeed he usually spent the Lenten season.' And after his consecration St. Samson ruled the monastery for about three years. These records show the ecclesiastical importance of the island in early times. Its importance was indeed so great that Professor Williams, of the Theological College, Bala, goes so far as to express an opinion that Caldey and not Llantwit was the original Llan-na Htuti {Some Aspects of the Christian Church in Wales, pp. 57, 58}; but however this may be, and his view is hard to reconcile with what Enoch tells us in the almost contemporaneous life of St. Samson above referred to, it is certain that in the sixth century there was an important monastery upon the island, representing probably the Eastern rather than the Western type of Christianity, and closely bound up with the great names of Illtyd, Dubric, Samson, David, Paul and Gildas.

How long the Celtic monks remained upon the island is not known, but in the reign of Henry I it was, as Dugdale tells us, given by that monarch to Robert, son of Martin, who gave it to his mother Geva, who in turn, with her son's assent, conveyed it to the celebrated monastery of St. Dogmaels, a Benedictine house which followed the reformed rule, then lately introduced by St Bernard d'Abbeville at Tiron in the Diocese of Chartres. The Priory, in consequence, became a cell of St. Dogmaels, and it so remained until the dissolution of the Monasteries, when the island, called in the grant The Manor of Calde, in the County of Pembroke, was, with St. Dogmaels, and various church lands, aliened by the King to one John Bradshawe of Presteign The Bradshawes held it until 1612, when it was sold by the great-grandson of John Bradshawe of Presteign to Walter Philpin, Mayor of Tenby, and his son Griffith. In 1653 it passed by sale from the Philpin family to one Reeve Williams, of Lilanridian, and Robert Williams, of Loughor. In 1786, John Williams, a great-grandson of Reeve Williams, sold it to George Greville, Earl Brooke and Earl of Warwick, who again, in 1798, sold it to Thomas Kynaston, of Pembroke ; with the Kynaston family it remained until 1867, when it passed to James Wilson Hawksley, whose widow sold it in 1894 to Thomas Dick Smith - Cuninghame. From Mr. Smith - Cuninghame it passed in 1897 to the writer of the present article, who again sold it in 1906 to the Rev. Father Aelred, O.S.B. ; and it is now occupied by a community of Benedictine monks,

Caldey Island The Village Church, established under the authority of a charter given by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1902.

It is a very primitive and simple building, bearing a conspicuous legend ; " Restored in the year of our Lord 1838, and in the first of Queen Victoria.' This record, indeed, does not seem very promising, but there is more behind.

The Village Church, Caldey Island

The church consists of a sacristy, a porch, a chancel, and a nave. Of these the sacristy is modern; and the porch which is not bonded to the west wall of the church, is of uncertain date. Neglecting these, however, we find the ground plan of the western portion of the church to be a square, whose side is 20 ft. internal measurement, the walls being 3 ft. thick. It is lighted by a large south window, deeply splayed internally, and also by a small round window over the western porch. This part of the church may be regarded as the nave. The chancel also, if we may so apply the word, is a square of 18 ft. internal measurement, the north and west walls, which alone are old, being 3 ft. thick. The south and east walls of the chancel, with the roofs, are modern, dating from 1838 before which time the building was in a very ruinous condition, and was used, it is said, as a blacksmith's shop. Between the chancel and the nave an arch has very recently been brought to light, the jambs of which show, at a height of about 7 ft., two very simple imposts. The width of the opening is 8 ft. The arch was probably always round, as it is now; the old walls end, however, just above the imposts. There is also in the west wall of the nave a Norman doorway, which was discovered in 1907. It consists of a double arch, one with an opening of 68 ins., the other of 56 ins. The north wall of the chancel has in it a tall and narrow window of some 14 ins. opening, deeply splayed internally, and situated well towards the east.

Now such a configuration, with its heavy chancel archway, will, of course, remind us of the churches which we find in Gower and in Little England beyond Wales. But it is really very different from them. We must compare it rather with Flimston chapel, further down the coast, which is a simple oblong 46 ft. by 24 ft., with the well-known St. Govan's chapel, which is also a simple oblong 20 ft. by 12 ft., or with the chapels near St. David's of St. Justinian and St. Nun, than with the parish churches on the mainland; there however at all events no other like it in the immediate neighbourhood. And it is well, perhaps, to remember what Mr. Petrie has to say of the early Irish churches (Petrie, Ecclesiastical Architecture of Ireland^ vol. i, p. 258) : "The smaller churches," he says, "are simple oblong quadrangles. In addition to this quadrangle the larger churches present a second oblong of smaller dimensions extending to the east, and constituting the chancel or sanctuary, in which the altar was placed, and which is connected with the nave by a triumphal arch of semicircular form." He goes on to speak of the cyclopean character of the walls. Now there is nothing which can be called Cyclopean about the walls of Caldey Church; indeed the Caldey limestone would not lend itself to any such Cyclopean work as we find across St. George's Channel; but none the less it will be seen that, as regards the ground plan of the church, there is a full agreement with what Mr. Petrie tells us of the ancient Irish edifices. The western doorway, then, of the church being Norman, and the ground plan of a very primitive type indeed, we may perhaps be bold to hazard a conjecture that the building may have been erected in the course of the twelfth century, either when the island came into the hands of Martin of Tiron, or when it had been transferred to those of St. Dogmaels Abbey, and that it may have been erected on the lines of an earlier Celtic church, of which some vestiges may possibly even now remain in the lower portions of the old walls.

Caldey Stone

But whether the island church shows traces of a Celtic origin or not, there is in the well-known Caldey stone an undeniable relic of the Celtic monks. This stone has been so fully described in various numbers of the Archaeological Camhrensia that it would not be necessary to say more about it were it not that the accepted reading of the Latin legend has recently been challenged by Mr. F. C. Burkitt. But, this being so, it will be well to add a few more words concerning it.

The Caldey stone then is a block of sandstone with an incised cross, a Latin inscription below it, and an Ogam inscription round the edge; there is also a cross on the back, and a small cross on either edge. The Latin inscription is in debased Roman lettering. A portion of the stone has long been broken off, and one of the smaller crosses comes in the way of the Ogam.

The remaining letters, however, of the Ogam as deciphered by Sir John Rhys, are MAOL DUBR, which appear to stand for MAGua DUBHacuna, or the (tonsured) servant of Dubricius. See Arch. Camb., 5th viii, 98

The Latin inscription is translated by Sir John Rhys as: And I have provided it with a cross; I ask all who walk in this place to pray for the soul of Cadwgan.

He would indeed be a bold man who would dare to challenge the deliberately expressed opinion of Sir John Rhys; it is right, however, to add that whilst the eminent professor was engaged upon his scrutiny, a messenger came to inform him that the waves were rising rapidly and that he must hurry away. He therefore himself suggests that a good photograph should be taken, with a view presumably to further investigation.

Professor Burkitt had, however, the opportunity of spending a longer time upon the island, and, in a paper read by him on June 7th, 1904, before the Cambridge Philological Society {Proceedings, lxvii, p. 6), he declines to accept the usual transliteration of the first five words as given by Sir John Rhys and others as

With the sign of the Cross of Jesus, I, Illtyd, have fashioned (this monument).

Fenton, writing in 1811, tells us that the stone was dug up in the ruins of the Priory "many years ago"; and it appears to have been used successively as a lintel to a window, and as a garden seat. The exact spot where it was found is said to have been in front of the blacksmith's shop which once stood east of the well. It is now in the Priory Chapel. The late Professor Westwood looked upon the Latin legend as not later than the ninth, and possibly as early as the seventh century. Professor Burkitt, however, sees no valid palaeographical reason to prevent our assigning it to the first part of the sixth century, at which time, as we know; St. Dubric and St. Illtyd were both closely connected with the island.

Caldy Island Norman Priory

We now pass to a consideration of the buildings of the Norman Priory. These consisted of a very simple cloister-garth, surrounded in the usual way by church, guest-house, refectory, and calefactory or kitchen, with dormitories upon the upper floors. All these monastic buildings still remain. They were arranged according to the usual Benedictine plan, with the exception that the chapel was upon the south, and not, as was more usual, on the north side of the garth; the entrance porch, however, reminds us of what we find in Norman castles on the mainland rather than of a monastery gate. The entrance was commanded also by a loopholed staircase on the east side of the garth.

A very special feature of the monastery is the so-called Abbot's Tower, which is a battlemented fortalice of military type. It is a rectangular structure, nearly square, the internal measurements being 18 ft. and 15 ft. respectively; and the walls being 4 ft. thick. This tower appears to have been originally meant to stand alone.

Now it will be remembered that the island was for a time in the possession of Robert Fitzmartin. It is, therefore, not improbable that he may have built it for his own protection, and that it was only afterwards that it was incorporated in the monastic buildings. If so, it would be of course the oldest part of the Priory. It consists of a vaulted basement, with a chamber over it, the entrance to the basement being at the south-west corner. The way in which the upper chamber was reached is not so clear. It may have been by a staircase in a loop-holed turret still existing at the north-east corner. No trace, however, of steps is to be seen, and in monastic times the upper story of this turret became a garde-robe. If there be any difference of age in the remaining parts of the monastery, those to the east, that is to say the dormitory, the calefactory or kitchen, and the sanctuary, seem to claim priority.

The narthex, choir, and sanctuary are, as has been ready said, upon the south side of the cloister-garth and form a church of 73 ft in external length. The sanctuary, which has a pointed barrel-vault, is, however, cut off from the other portions of the chapel by a wall, in which no trace of an original arch or opening is to be found. This wall may, however, have been rebuilt: it is not easy to date these simple limestone structures.

The north and south walls of the sanctuary are 36 ins., and the east and west walls 30 ins. thick. At the western end of the church there is a tower, some 30 ft. in height, surmounted by a rude stone spire of 18 ft. This tower stands on a base which is 12 ft. square, and has fallen westwards out of the perpendicular to the extent of 40 ins. The breadth of the nave is 18 ft. externally, but was originally 20 ft. or more, the present north wall being modern. The western window dates from the fourteenth century, but may have been a later insertion. Such insertions are common enough in the south of Pembrokeshire. At all events the eastern end of the chapel buildings seems to be of an earlier date. The splays and the hood-moulding of the old east window still remain; a portion also of the external drip-stone is intact. It is not clear, however, how the opening was filled. The tracery, if any, has long since perished: it may not improbably have been a double lancet.

Upon the west side of the cloister-garth there is a guest-house, which includes a spacious porch, an adjoining chamber, probably used for storage, and a chamber overhead, which may at one time have been divided into two. The basement of the guest-house measures 27 ft. by 16 ft. There is a so-called Flemish chimney, and the remains of two good windows looking on to the garth. Upon the inner wall, towards the garth, are pigeon-holes.

Upon the north side of the cloister-garth is the refectory. It is now used as a kitchen, and is 27 ft. square. In Fenton's time it possessed a "very curious arched roof," but this has long since disappeared. Above it is a chamber of the same dimensions, now divided into two. Upon the east side of the cloister garth there is what is now a scullery, with vaulted barrel roof, once used presumably as calefactory or kitchen, containing as it does the huge monastic chimney; whilst over it there is the dormitory, to which access is afforded by a staircase in the thickness of the east wall of the garth, furnished with loop-holes which command the entrance gateway.

At the north-east corner of the garth is the square embattled tower described above, the upper chamber of which was in monastic times the Priors lodging, whilst the little loop-holed turret to the north-east was his garde-robe. There is, as was the universal custom in the Benedictine houses, an access for the Prior from his lodging to the dormitory, which enabled him not only to maintain due discipline, but, as his duty was, to call his monks for their night office. There is some reason also to believe that there was a direct descent from the dormitory to the chapel.

The burial-ground, where bones are still to be found in plenty beneath the surface of the soil, lay to the south of the great church. The buildings were clearly planned with a view to defence. Sea-robbers abounded in mediaeval times. St. David's was sacked in 1088; Tenby was burnt by Maelgwn in 1186; and in much later times the Caldey islanders were forced to plough with horses, rather than with oxen as on the mainland, lest oxen should tempt the rovers' appetites. Above the sanctuary there is a room of uncertain date, and in the south wall of the chapel a piscina; and there is also a lamp stead, that is to say a shelf to carry a flare, with a chimney over it constructed in the thickness of the wall. As will be seen from the plan, the walls of the Abbot's Tower, and of the calefactory or kitchen, are from 4 ft. to 4 ½ ft., those of the sanctuary from 3 ft. to 3 ½ ft., and the remainder for the most part about 2 ½ ft. thick; and we may possibly be justified if we infer accordingly the order in which they were built.

Such are the Priory buildings, which are as complete as they are primitive, and yet have not been noticed in detail by any writer with whose works I am acquainted; the reason being probably that until recent years the island was not very accessible, and also that they were themselves obscured by various buildings which have now been taken down, and were in use for various other purposes than those for which they had originally been designed; and, further, that they were encased in innumerable coats of whitewash and plaster. Indeed, in 1898, when the island came into the possession of the present writer, the sanctuary was a laundry, the choir a disused maltkiln, the entrance-porch a lime-store, and the guest-house a pigeon loft; the dormitory was divided into bedrooms for the servants, and in the narthex were stored many hundreds of old bottles.

The only other monument of much importance on the larger island is the round tower, now an oratory, which overlooks the Caldey roads. This tower is circular in shape; its walls are of great thickness; and it was probably erected by the Norman monks to keep an eye upon the vessels casting anchor in the roads, which for the most part would be hidden from the monastery by the cliffs. The thickness of the walls would enable it with ease to resist a casual attack.

We are also told on good authority that where the lighthouse stands there was a chapel of the Blessed Virgin. This is referred to by William of Worcester, in an itinerary written about 1490, as "Capella Sanctae Mariae super maris litus" and it is also mentioned by Lewis Morris in 1748 in his Plans of Harbours, Bars, etc. No trace of it now remains.

It will be well to refer to the Archaeology Cambrensis 4th Ser., i, 122, for a full description of an alabaster reliquary found by Mr. Corbet Kynaston, then "King of Caldey" in a fissure at the High Cliff Quarries, some seventy years ago, whilst digging out a wild cat which had taken refuge there; this reliquary was restored to the Priory Chapel by Mrs. Bridger, a relative of Mr. Kynaston, in 1901. It is in shape an altar tomb 8 ins. long, with a vertical section of 2 ins. square, and is surmounted by a recumbent figure which has not at present been identified.

We find on the adjacent island of St. Margaret. There are there certain ecclesiastical remains; but in the nineteenth century they were converted into cottages for quarrymen, so that they are now not easy to interpret, nor can we assign a date to them. The western chamber has, however, in its doorway and interior corbels some faint indications of departed splendour ; and one of Norris' sketches, to be seen in the Free Library at Cardiff, shows in the chamber marked in our plan " Refectory," a traceried window of some pretensions.

There are also two round chimneys, one of which appears to be old, one new. These buildings probably bore to the Norman Priory somewhat the same relation which the Priory itself bore to the mother house of St. Dogmaels. It was, in fact, a cell.

1895 Nooks and Corners of Pembrokeshire . H. Thornhill Timmins

The day waxing warm and sunny we now make for the harbour again, and charter one of the numerous well-found pleasure-boats which lie in wait for visitors. An hour's pleasant sail over a sea ladyblue as the Mediterranean, and we land upon the shores of Caldey Island, like the Old Man of the Sea, pick-a-back fashion astride the boatman's back.

' This island,' says George Owen, ' is verie fertile and yeldeth plentie of corne ; all their plowes goe with horses, for oxen the inhabitantes dare not keepe, fearing the purveyors of the pirattes as they themselves told me, whoe often make their provisions there by theire owne comission, and comonlie to the good contentment of the inhabitantes, when conscionable theefes arrive there.'

A grassy track, winding up the sloping bank amidst gorse and bracken, now leads across a stream and beside a few quarrymen's cottages to a dejected-looking chapel. In a neglected corner of the interior we discover the object of our visit — to wit, a recumbent oblong stone inscribed with certain archaic characters, which have been rendered as follows: 'In the Name both of the Cross itself and of Him who was fixed thereon, pray for the soul of Catuoconus.' Certain lines of the character known as Ogham may also be discerned upon the sides or edges of this hoary monolith.

Striking across the open fields, with the tall white lighthouse for our guide, we turn aside to visit an old farmstead that contains the scanty ruins of Caldey Priory. This venerable foundation owes its origin to Robert, son of Martin de Turribus, and was annexed as a cell to the abbey of St. Dogmaels, near Cardigan. A wise old saw which observes 'There is nothing new but what has been forgotten,' may find a verification amidst such neglected nooks as these ; whose long-forgotten relics of a bygone age greet the wayfarer with all the charm of novelty. Timmins

Above the adjacent farmyard premises rises the quaint little weather-beaten tower of the old priory chapel ; its slender spire leaning perilously awry, its stonework fast crumbling to decay. From the summit of the tower hangs the crazy bell, with rusty chain and silent clapper. One daintily-fashioned window is roughly blocked with brickwork, another gives entrance to a pigeon-cot.

Within the adjoining house we are shown a fine old vaulted kitchen, with deep-browed windows, and rude stone settle along the wall. Thence we penetrate to a cool, dark chamber exhibiting traces of a gracefully proportioned window enclosed by a pointed arch, long since blocked up.

Retracing our steps beneath hedges of flowering fuchsia, we return by breezy, fern-clad commons and well-tilled fields to the landing-place; where an amphibious-looking individual is laying out lobster-pots among the weed-strewn rocks.

1909 The Benedictine Priory on Caldey Island

Caldey owes great charm to its sea-girt isolation. The Priory rough archaic buildings, cobbled cloister-garth, rude spire, gatehouse and porter's lodge, winding stair lighted with narrow loop holes, whence the monks reached their dormitories, impress the mind with a sense of religious seclusion.

Edwards, Emily Hewlett

The Rev. Done Bushel 1, F.S.A., during an occupation of many years, studied the buildings exhaustively, and considers them to remain almost complete. The outer walls were once lighted only by loops for defence, the East window of the chancel being an exception ; calefactory, dormitory, old kitchen and Prior's chamber still exist. In the chancel of the Priory-church Celtic influence is shown by rough vaulting of similar construction, perhaps, to the Early Irish island chapels; in the chancel, too, is a rude chimney for carrying away the smoke from flaring lamp-lights. The interesting alabaster reliquary in the chapel was found buried in the cliffs.

The old name for Caldey was Inys Pyrr. There is mention of St. Samson in connection with the island, while an Ogam stone gives evidence of Christian occupation so early as the 8th century; about 1100 Caldey was given to St. Dogmaels, and continued an appenage of that abbey until the Dissolution of Monasteries.

The island was so harried by pirates even in Elizabeth's reign that the inhabitants were unable to use oxen ; Jones' Bay claims acquaintance with Paul Jones, the celebrated privateer. English Benedictines now sing the orisons of the old Black Monks on Caldey Island.

1922 Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments Caldy and St Margarets Islands

The island of Caldy and its satellite St Margaret's Isle have for long but quite unknown period been regarded as forming an extra parochial civil and ecclesiastical district, and so entered in the Census Reports (County of Pembroke Table 11) The close proximity of the two islands has naturally caused them to be treated as one entity for administrative purposes, and they are here dealt with under the single title. But this is an error, so far at least as it relates to St Margaret's Island. The documentary evidence produced below shows that historically that islet was at one time part of either the parish of Manorbier or that of Penally.

George Owen, the historian of Pembrokeshire (d 1613) gives the following account of the island of Caldy, which, as Deputy Vice Admiral of Wales, he doubtless knew intimately :-

“Caldey is an Iland as I would judge, a mile long and halfe as broade yt standeth ij miles from the mayne seted opposite to the towne of Tenby, yt is called by Giraldus by the old Brittishe name Ynys Pyrr, that is the Iland of Pyrrus; there was in yt in tymes past a Priorie called (as saieth Leland) Lille [? L'Isle], a parishe church and chappell dedicated to St [left blank] yt did belonge to the Abbey of St Dogmells: and was purchased by mr Roger Bradshawe that nowe ys, who about foure years past sould the same to mr Water Philpin of Tenby whose inheritance nowe yt is, the Iland is verie fertile and yeldeth plenty of corne all their plowes goe w'th horses for oxen the inhabitants dare not keepe, fearing the purveyors of the pirates, as they themselves told me, who often make their provisions there by their owne Comission, and most commonlie to the good contentment of the inhabitants when conscionable theefes arrive there, the Iland is of viijt or xen housholdes and some parte of the demesnes annexed to the ruines of the Priorie the Lord keepeth in his hands, yt is nowe growne a question in what hundred of Pembrokeshire this Iland should be whether in Kemes as parcel of St Dogmells, to wych yt appertained, or parte of the next hundred of the maine, and vntill this doubte be decided the inhabitants are content to rest exempt from anie payementes or taxeions wth anie hundred”.

The extra parochial status of Caldy is to be explained by the fact that in the medieval period the entire island was the property of the monks of St Dogmaels and, as such, the house and its insular domain was not subject to the ordinary jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese of St David's over his parochial clergy, though the bishop possessed the right of visitation, whenever he should consider that circumstances called for the exercise of his authority.

The tiny islet now generally known as St Margaret's lies off the north western point of the island of Caldy. At low tide it is joined to its bigger neighbour.

Following his account of Caldey Island which has been given above, George Owen continues:-

“There is adjoining to this great Caldey a small island placed between yt and the land called little Caldey; yt beareth good grasse for sheep and conyes, and a store of gulls, and is the queens majesties [ide queen Elizabeth's] land parcel of her manour of Manerbire and Penally.

As already stated, the two islands are regarded administratively as one. They are so treated in the Census Reports and notwithstanding the statement of George Owen just quoted expressly asserting the tenurial connection of St Margarets (or Little Caldey, as he terms it) with the Manor of Manorbier and Penally, they are always dealt with as a single administrative area. The bearing of George Owen's statement has probably been overlooked by reason of the seemingly unimportant nature of the subject. Researches into the public records, made originally for the purpose of resolving the question, have, however, resulted in a discovery of great importance to investigators into the changes which have taken and are taking place in the coastline of the kingdom.

In the course of a survey of the manor of Beer and Penally held at Jameston the 12th August 1618, by Sir John Stepneth [Stepney] and Thomas Cannon esq., the jury having presented “that the seas hath overflowed and overcome a great part of the circuit bounds of the said manor” and also that “one little island called Little Caldye being now at all times compassed with the sea and containing about two acres of pasture” proceeded to make the following statement :--

Memorandum, the said jurors do say by the information of ancient credible persons yet living, and the same is received commonly in the country by tradition, that the said island of Little Caldey which now lieth in the sea about one mile distant from the continent and main land of the said manor, was heretofore a part of the said continent, together with a low marsh ground and woodland extending from the island to a point of headland called Giltor [Giltar], being now the uttermost land bound of the said manor towards the south. And by the reason the said marsh ground and woodland are now overcome by the sea, and drowned, the said land of Little Caldey is thereby made an island and ships do pass betwixt it and the main, whereby a part of the ancient possessions of the said manor is irrecoverably decayed and lost (Pub. Records Office; Land Revenue Miscellaneous Books, Vol 206 (Ancient Surveys, 19) fo 75).

This statement, though not absolutely contemporary with the occurrence which it records, is unquestionably authentic, and its accuracy may be considered as established by the certification of two prominent local magnates who must have been well acquainted with the coast. There is little doubt that a stupendous change in the condition of the land surface of western Britain had taken place within a century of the date of the enquiry, that is to say, about the period 1500-1530. The subject is primarily one for the geologist, but it may be said to have a practical interest for archaeologists and historians, since the disappearance of the channel between the mainland at Giltar Point and St Margaret's (ie Little Caldey) Island and the formation of the present coastline, must have produced important changes in the course taken by early navigators along the south coast of Wales.

It is also clear that whatever may have been the case between the mainland of the county and Caldey, the two islands of Caldey and St Margaret's had become separated from each other at high tides and that the cleavage had been effected at a period beyond local memory or tradition.

It may also be inferred from the silence of both the survey and historical notes of George Owen, that the smaller islet did not at once obtain the name of St Margaret's Isle, but that in the early years of the 17th century it was best known as Little Caldey.

The Benedictine Priory of Caldey RCAM.

The island of Caldey originally formed part of the territory of Cambrian Chiefton whose principal patrimony consisted of the district of Maenor Pir (Manorbier), the nearest point on the neighbouring mainland to the island. Its Welsh name was Ynys Pir or Pyr.

The inroads of the Norse pirates at the end of the 9th and early part of the 10th centuries were followed by what must have been a very thorough settlement of the coastal districts of the county. These certainly comprised the island of Pyr, which received the new name of Caldey; and the change resulted in the almost total extinction of the Celtic place-names. The new settlers appear to have possessed the same assimilative qualities that characterised their brethren in North Western France and following upon their conversion to Christianity, friendship and co-operation seem to have sprung up rapidly between the two peoples. The settlement of the British religious community on Caldey was probably in the nature of separate oratories enclosed within a stone or turf wall, after the manner of the remains which are to be found at the present day on the lonely island of the Skellig (another Norse settlement). Caldey was within easy reach of the mainland, and it is probable that if the original cells of the British devotees had been spared by the first invaders whilst in their pagan stage, they would be taken over and remodelled by the same people after their adoption of Christianity [Giraldu Cambrensis, who was born at Manorbier, and must have known the monastery well, states that the monks of Caldey were living as solitaries in defiance of papal decrees (Symbolum Electorum Rolls ed I 324)].

The next point in the history of the religious settlement on Caldey is the grant of the island by Geva or Giva, the wife of Martin of Tiron, to the newly founded or re-founded, monastery of St Dogmaels in the north of the county. Martin came over to England in the wake of the Conqueror, and was granted whatever land he could secure and conveniently retain in South Wales; in virtue of which he became master of the district called Kemes in North West Pembrokeshire. He had apparently intended to enlarge and modernise the small monkish establishment which it is almost certain that he founded at St Dogmaels within his lordship (as it now became) of Kemes, but his intentions were frustrated by death, and his son Robert's grant is the first charter to that house. It would seem from the words of the grant ,Dedit iisdem monachis mater mea insulam Pyr, qui alio nomine Caldea nuncupatur quam a domino meo rege datam matri meae dederam (Dugdale, Mon. Angl., 130) that Giva may have had some special connection , possibly patrimonial, with Caldey, or that she may have been the daughter of a Scandinavian Viking who had accompanied Martin from the great Scandinavian duchy of Normandy. (There has also been a suggestion that although mother of Robert, she was not Martin's legal wife) It is difficult otherwise to account for Martin or Robert's knowledge of the existence of a small body of monks on a windswept island far distant from Kemes. The grant was made in or shortly after the year 1113 and it is clear that within a few years a monastery, dedicated to St Mary, and closely following the customary plan, was established on Caldey.

The small house passed through an long and uneventful existence, keeping the even tenor of its ways as a cell to St Dogmaels unto the very end in 1535. At The surrender of the house there were eight tenants holding by lease of by the year

Ancient Church RCAM

About 300 yds north east of the priory church and apparently outside the limits of the Priory enclosure is a building which has many claimers to being regarded as the original church of the island; one that was discarded for new and modernised monastic buildings erected by the monks of St Dogmaels after the grant of Robert de Tiron and Geva his mother. It consists of a simple chancel and nave of almost equal size, the chancel being 18ft square and the nave twenty ft square, and the walls being of uniform thickness of 3 ft. The south and east walls of the chancel are modern. The chancel arch is round, low and only 8ft wide. In 1907 a Norman doorway was discovered in the west wall of the nave. The windows comprise one in the north wall of the chancel, a second in the south wall of the nave. The western porch is not bonded into the main wall, and is probably of a later date; above it is a small round window. In 1918 several burials of possibly the 15th century, were discovered beneath the exterior south wall of the church (trans.Carm. Antiq. Soc. xii 43). The dedication was to St Mary, doubtless in supersession of an earlier Celtic saint.

Ogam and Latin Inscribed stone RCAM

A stone which Fenton , writing in 1811 (tours 458) states was dug up in the ruins of the Priory "many years ago"and which appears to have been used successively as a lintel to a window, and as a garden seat, is now preserved in the Priory Church. The inscription is in Latin and Ogram.

Chapel RCAM

In addition to the priory church and the ancient (later , parish) church , a small chapel stood formally on one of the cliffs. The naturalist Ray, writing in 1662 says "We passed over to Caldey Isle .. In the island are three chapels, one at the abbey or priory and two more", Lewis Morris , the antiquary, in his "Plans of Harbours etc" [1748] sketches a small edifice on Chapel point, and describes it as "chapel seen from sea". There is now no vestige of a building, but careful excavation might disclose foundations of walls.

1847 Isle of Caldy Report on the State of Education in Wales

The entire of this island with the exception of the lighthouse and the road leading to it belongs to Cabot Kynaston Esq., who resides there. It comprises about 500 acres. A considerable export trade is carried on from it in limestone. The population are in part agricultural labourers and part quarrymen. There are also a few persons attached to the service of the lighthouse. The labourers earn 1s 2d or 1s 4d per day, with barley sold to them at 3s 6d per bushel, on their own finding.. The quarrymen work by task, and taking the year round earn from 2s to 2s 6d per day. They work, however, especially in summer, when the limestone is lading, a greater number of hours than the common day-labourers. They draw their wages at the rate of 1s per day, and receive the residue at the end of the year in one sum.

The number of children on the island is 39; of these 27 are between 5 and 15 years. There is no school of any kind upon the island, which is 2 ½ from Tenby. There is a building used as a church when any clergyman chooses to go over and serve it, but there is no regular service or minister. The proprietor does not permit the use of this building to Dissenters. Two or three years ago there was a clergyman visiting Tenby who used without payment to perform service in the church regularly, but since his departure the practice has not been maintained. The proprietor considers that the endowment or establishment of a church might compromise his privileges of being extra parochial and tithe free. The present Bishop of St David's has offered him a bond of indemnity in both respects, but the offer was not accepted. The people on the island are utterly unprovided with instruction either secular or spiritual, save such as they bring with them as immigrants, and can convey in their domestic capacities. It may be that one here and there can put a child to live with a relative at Tenby, or elsewhere on the mainland where there is a school, but this is not, nor can be, with poor people often the case. There had been a private dame-school kept in the island, but on the dame's death no one succeeded to her post. Tithe and poor's-rates are standing monuments, in the common and statute law, of what in this country has been considered due in the way of spiritual and physical from landed property to the creators of its produce. Both of these incidentals, however, are connected with such property by virtue of its being parochial; Caldy is extra parochial, and, accordingly, the labourers upon it have neither church nor settlement

The proprietor does not permit a public house to be erected on the island. The inhabitants, however, are rather out of the way of temptation than superior to it, whenever liquor can be had, either from vessels that are loaded, or on their visits to the mainland.

I was informed that it was in contemplation by some persons in Tenby to subscribe towards raising a school in the island if a site could be obtained.

Fenny Coome or Popton Camp

The insignificant remains of an earthwork on a field known as Fenny garn about 600 yds north east of West Popton farmhouse. Lt Col W LI Morgan R.E. A former Royal Commissioner, examined this site about the year 1879 when there was considerably more of it in existence than is apparent; he says of it:-

“This work cannot be represented as a cliff castle, for although situated on the shore of the Haven, it is only imperfectly protected on the sea side by a steep slope; the other side of the promontary being a steep slope – the side of an inland gully. Across the tongue of land is a rampart and ditch 220ft long much bowed out. The rampart is 4ft high, 12 ft fall to a ditch 4 ft deep. Beyond this, at a distance of 30yds is a second line 130yds long, parallel to the first. The northern half of this line has been destroyed. The bank is 4ft high, has a 7ft fall to a ditch 6ft deep. Both these banks two last banks have been very much destroyed by cultivation so that their original condition is only a matter for conjecture. The ground slopes towards the north”.

Apparently the entrance bisected the outer bank and lead to the north end of the main vallum where the bank seems to have sloped to the level ---Visited 23rd May 1922.

West Pennar Rath

On a field known as Rath Park or Rath Hays 150yds east of West Pennar farmhouse are the remains of an earthwork now almost cultivated away. It seems to have been of horse shoe shape and to have faced north. The rampart has a length of 150ft, is about 5ft in height and falls 10ft to a ditch. This ditch must have been of fair depth, judging by the remains of the counterscarp, which rises to 10ft and drops 4ft to the surrounding level. The greater part of the rampart has all but disappeared, though there are slight traces of it to the north. At the eastern bend a line of several base stones is still in situ leading to the eastern rampart, which is 150ft in length, and somewhat lower than that on the western side. The enclosure is level. Visited 23rd May 1922.

West Popton Cross

At a crossroads in the hamlet of West Popton stands the remains of Popton Cross – a stone base of three stepped, the octagonal and plain shaft 48in high and the two diagonal arms of the cross 29in across; the upper member is missing. Some years ago the shaft and arms were found in the neighbouring hedges and were replaced. Visited 23rd May 1922

St Mary Church Pwllcrochan

- Church closed.

The church is supposed to have been erected by Radulph Benyer in the 14th century, whose effigy is in the south transept under a recess, inscribed, - Hic jacet Redulphus Benyer, hujus ecclesie.- Another inscription runs, - Erat ista ecclesia constructa de novo, cum capella ista per Redulphum Benyer qui rexit ecclesiam per annos A.D. 1342. this is in the north transept. -ArchCamb. 1888 Ser. V., Vol. V, p. 127.

The church consists of chancel 26ft 6ins by 15ft, nave 45ft by 9in, north transeptal chapel 13ft 9in by 10ft 6in and a south tower 18ft by 16ft. The original south porch is now used as a storehouse. The present entrance to the church is through a modern porch, and by a doorway in the north wall having a pointed arch. Several of the windows are blocked; the remainder are modern. In the north wall of the chancel is a low stone ledge; an aumbry occupies the south-east angle. The chancel arch and those leading from the tower and the north chapel plain pointed. Sir Stephen Glynne in 1871 saw “ an original vestry north of the chancel, opening by a flat arch, and having a square headed two light label window” This vestry has been removed , the blocked doorway to it visible in the chancel wall. There is a squint between the chancel and the north transept. The east wall of the nave contains the corbels for the rood. In the north wall are two plain tomb recesses, now empty, and another recess occupies the south wall.

The tower of two storeys has a parapet and corbel table, and is surmounted by a graceful octagonal spire. The belfry is lighted by two small lancets. The lower story has a plain vault, and contains a blocked window of two lights. The font, of the cushion type, has been redressed – visited 23rd May 1922.

Acc to Old Parish Churches – Salter.

In a recess in the south wall is an effigy of Rector Ralph Beneger d1342, with an inscription saying that he built the chancel and chapel. There are two other recess in the nave north wall which contains a 13th century doorway. The south transeptal tower with a plain corbelled parapet was built or remodelled when the north transept with a squint was added in the Tudor period. A north vestry was later removed. There are corbels for a rood beam in the nave.

Pwllcrochan Church originally formed part of the possessions of the priory of Pembroke, and on the transference of that priory to the abbey of St. Albans, the patronage became vested in the latter house until the dissolution of the monastic establishments, when it came into the hands of the Crown. In the 19th century the patronage was transferred to private hands.

Described as Ecclesia de Porterachan, this church was in 1291 assessed at £10 for tenths to the King, the sun payable being £1. -Taxatio.

During the Civil War, two companies of Royalists landed at Pwllcrochan, and took up their quarters in the church until more suitable quarters could be provided for them. The next day they were surprised by a party of Parliamentarians under Poyer, but they resisted stoutly until allowed to march away and embark for Cardiff, after giving an undertaking not to land again in Milford Haven.

A little hamlet now totally dominated by the Texaco and BP Oil installations. The church, in a cluster of cottages, old rectory and Council houses, is of Norman origin, with a corbelled tower. There is a little annexe to the church which was possibly once the cell of St. Decuman. On the edge of the Texaco refinery is Eastington Farm, an ancient building with a square tower and parapet, probably of Norman age. This was Eastington Manor, one of Little England's minor fortresses.

History

Acc/to ---South Pembrokeshire --- M Mirehouse. Whose family owned Eastington when she wrote her book Jestyn ap Owain ap Hywel Dda (King of South Wales, who died in 948) lived at Jestynton, which he called by his own name, and probably built; he is called Prince Jestyn, and was King Hywel Dda's favourite grandson. King Hywel Dda acquired South Wales, or Dyfed, through his wife Elen, daughter of Llywarch ap Hwfaidd, King of Dyfed Hwfaidd died in 892, Llywarch in 905. When the Normans first overran Pembrokeshire under Arnulph de Montgomery, in 1090, Narberth fell to the share of Sir Stephen Perrott, Knt., who built a castle there, but not the one whose ruins we now see; Sir Stephen's Castle was razed to the ground by Grufudd ap Rhys in 1183.

Perrots

About this time Sir Stephen, by his marriage with Eleanor, daughter and sole heiress of Merchion ap Rhys ap Rhydderch ap Jestyn of Jestynton, acquired a great increase to his property, and appears to have gone to reside at Jestynton. His wife's name is given in some chronicles as Elen, in some as Eleanor; probably in those days it was the same name. His son, Sir Andrew, rebuilt the castle of Narberth, whose ruins still remain; his daughter Catherine married Caradog or Cradock of Newton; the family later took the name of Newton and have connections with Angle and Llanstadwell .

The Perrotts continued to reside at Jestynton for several centuries, until their union with Haroldstone by Peter Perrott's marriage with Alice, heiress of Sir Richard Harold; they then resided at Haroldstone, near Haverford-west, for three centuries, until the time of the famous Sir John Perrott, son of Henry VIII., who became a man of great power in South Wales, owning much property. George Owen speaks of him as of ' Halle place in Nangle,' and Sir John held Haroldstone and Jestynton by inheritance, and Calew Castle in trust for the King.

Previously to this, Sir Thomas Perrott of Haroldstone first introduced pheasants into Pembrokeshire; they increased to a certain extent, but afterwards " chose other landlords in other places," as the old chronicle quaintly puts it.

Sir Thomas took a leading part in the great Tournament given at Carew Castle by Sir Thomas ap Rhys on St. Georges Day, 1507, and is known to have been present at the landing of Henry VII. at Dale, and probably also at the Battle of Bosworth Field. Later he was Gentleman of the Bedchamber to Henry VIII.

His wife was Mary, daughter of James Berkeley (after Sir Thomas's death she married Sir Thomas Jones of Abernarlais).

Sir John Perrott was her son by Henry VIII.; reputed to be fiery like his father, both in appearance and temperament. Sir John was born at Haroldstone, but was brought up almost entirely at the Court, being a great favourite with Henry. He was Deputy for Ireland from 1583 to 1588, and lived under three sovereigns: Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Elizabeth. He held the Castle of Carew in trust for the Crown, and was a great man both at Court and in South Wales; but he fell into disgrace in Elizabeth's time, was attainted, and all his property confiscated; he died a prisoner in the Tower in 1592.

It is probable that had he lived he would have been pardoned, as Elizabeth had many times refused to sign the warrant for his execution, saying always, when urged to do so, that he was a ' good and loyal subject.' He added the great north wing to Carew Castle (some attribute this to Sir Rhys ap Thomas in 1503), and in the inventory of his goods at his attainder is mentioned a quantity of glass 'to glaze ye windowes in ye newe buildinge' (this was locked up in a chamber, a glazier at Tewkesbury having the key), also ' deale or firr bordes, by estimacion provided for he dyninge chamber of the newe buildinge at Carewe,' also ' tymber red flamed for some partitions there.' There was a most exhaustive list made of all his possessions at Carew at the time Of his attainder, which is given in Mr. Edward Laws' ' History of Little England beyond Wales '

Sir John Perrott's sister Jane married William Philipps of Picton, who was grandson of Sir Thomas Philipps of the Kilsant family; this family and the Perrotts inter-married several times.

In the public records is a document consisting of two leaves of paper, dated Haverfordwest, September 7, 1591 (33 Eliz.), setting forth a part of the possessions of Sir John Perrott, Knt., purchased of Sir Thomas Jones, Knt. (who married his mother). Among these are named half the Manor of Nangle (Hall Manor in Nangle), half the Manor of Castlemartin, that of Pwllcrochan, Rhoscrowther, Cocksey, ' a parcel of land late the property of Nicholas Dawes,' Lymney in Castlemartin, and Williamston, both purchased also from Nicholas Dawes.

Sir John Perrott's son, Sir Thomas, married Lady Dorothy, sister of Robert Devereux, the ill-fated Earl of Essex. Queen Elizabeth restored Sir John's forfeited property to Sir Thomas, and was about to make him a Baronet when he died, on June 29, 1601. He left an only daughter, Penelope (a son, Roland, died young), who married first William Lewis, and second Sir Robert Naunton, Secretary of State to James I.; he died in 1635, his only son, James, an infant, in 1624; his only daughter married first Viscount Bayning, second Philip Herbert, afterwards fifth Earl of Pembroke. With Penelope Perrott terminated the direct line of the Perrotts of Pembrokeshire.

Philipps

Grove, a ruin between Stackpole and Pembroke, formerly belonged to Lloyd of Morril, in North Pembrokeshire. Thomas Lloyd of Morril married Frances, daughter of Hugh Philipps of Jestynton, brother of Sir Richard Philipps. Hugh's father was Sir John Philipps, eleventh Baronet, who was Sheriff in 1595; his mother was Anne, daughter of Sir John Perrott, who brought Jestynton as her dowry.

Meares

Later, we find the family of Meares at Jestynton. when William Meares married Grace the sister of Griffith Dawes of Bangeston in 1643. William was Sheriff in 1673 George, his son, succeeded him at Jestynton, and was Sheriff in 1692 (the year Griffith Dawes of Bangeston died). George's great grandson, John, was Sheriff in 1800, and his son John in 1822, who married Charlotte, daughter of Sir Hugh Owen of Orielton.

Mirehouse

Eastington was purchased from John Meares of Plas Llanstephan, Carmarthen, by John Mirehouse, Common Sergeant of the City of London, and owner of Angle and Bangeston, on March 25, 1842, EASTINGTON.

Domestic Architecture of South Pembrokeshire p79 Jestyington Prof. Freeman

One of the most perfect, if not the most perfect, examples of the domestic architecture of the district in the house of Eastington or Iseston, at no great distance from Nangle, and situated close to the shores of the bay of that name. In some earlier deeds it is spelt Estyngeston but its earlier form was Jestynton or Jestynstown being so called after its founder, Jestyn, a grandson of Howell Dda

The original name was probably Tre-Jestyn, or, as the Anglo-Normans would call it, Jestyngton. There are numerous instances in Pembrokeshire of the same change from Welsh to the English form.

This building is not only one of the most perfect, but it is one which presents least difficulty as to its real date which is that of the reign of Edward II (c1307) as fixed by Mr J H Parker. The property came into the Perrot family by the marriage of Stephen, the first of the Pembrokeshire line, with one of the two coheiresses of Meirchion (ap Rhys), the great-grandson of Jestyn. The present structure, therefore could not have been erected by this Stephen Perrot; nor is it certain that it occupies the site of the original house. The Perrots, however resided here for many generations, although Fenton thinks that, after the acquisition of Haroldston by marriage, their principle residence was transferred to the more agreeable neighbourhood of Haverfordwest, near which Haroldston is situated. But however this may be, it continued in the possession of the Perrots until the attainder of Sir John Perrot. His grandson, Hugh, a younger son of Sir John Phillips of Picton, was of this place, as appears from the Dale Castle Genealogies (p 129) and from his tomb stone, partly illegible, in Rhoscrowther Church.

During the close of the seventeenth and nearly the whole of the eighteenth century, it was the chief residence of the Meares, from whom the estate was purchased by the Mirehouse family of Angle. The building consists of the usual vaulted basements and the apartments above, consisting of two, namely the great hall, reached by an external flight of steps; and a smaller one adjoining it, for more private use. The hall was lit by a small Early English two-light window at each end; others probably once existed in the other parts of the building, but have been replaced by square ones of a later date. A small newel- staircase leads to the little tower on the roof whence a wide prospect towards the haven can be had. This might also serve as an additional defence to the angle between the two parts of the building. The present flight of stone steps is not the original one. The vaulted basements are not provided with means of warming, as so frequently the case. They are however, more lofty and spacious than usual in the district, and may have been intended for occupation, not merely as a repository for stores. The present lights in them are not original. The modern house of the Meares, recently removed, abutted on the western wall of the main building, and a farmhouse stands at present on the other side; so that as might be expected under the circumstances, no remains of external offices or defensive walls can be made out. There is, however, no doubt that in the present building we have substantially a complete residence of the early part of the fourteenth century and that it is not a remnant of a more extensive structure, as Fenton states.

Acc/to - South Pembrokeshire - M. Mirehouse,

Jestyn ap Owain ap Hywel Dda descended from the King of South Wales, who died in 948 lived at Jestynton, which he called by his own name, and probably built he is called Prince Jestyn, and was King Hywel Dda's favourite grandson. King Hywel Dda acquired South Wales, or Dyfed, through his wife Elen, daughter of Llywarch ap Hwfaidd, King of Dyfed. Hwfaidd died in 892, Llywarch in 905.

When the Normans first overran Pembrokeshire under Arnulph de Montgomery in 1090, Narberth fell to the share of Sir Stephen Perrott, Knt., who built a castle there, but not the one whose ruins we now see Sir Stephen's Castle was razed to the ground by Grufudd ap Rhys in 1183.

About this time Sir Stephen, by his marriage with Eleanor, daughter and sole heiress of Merchion ap Rhys ap Rhydderch ap Jestyn of Jestynton, acquired a great increase to his Property, and appears to have gone to reside at Jestynton. His wife's name is given in some chronicles as Elen, in some as Eleanor probably in those days it was the same name. His son, Sir Andrew, rebuilt the castle of Narberth, whose ruins still remain his daughter Catherine married Caradog or Cradock of Newton the family later took the name of Newton and have connections with Angle and Llanstadwell.

The Perrotts continued to reside at Jestynton for several centuries, until their union with Haroldstone by Peter Perrott's marriage with Alice, heiress of Sir Richard Harold

One square tower and a few walls are all that remain of Jestynton, now called Eastington, and converted into a farm. It is well situated at the east end of Angle Bay, and must have been a fine place in its day its moat can still be traced, and the one remaining tower is immensely solid and strong. Some think that there is Roman pavement under the turf, but no excavations have so far been made.

Church St Decuman

The Saint was said to have been born here and built his cell here. It was once one of the seven bishops houses of Dyfed associated with St David's before the Norman Conquest. Its church has an older bellcote and later typical South Pembrokeshire tower. The porch floor is cobbled and there is

Griffith White of Henllan had raised crops on some land at Rhoscrowther which was in some dispute between him and Sir John Perrot who seems to have been the villain of the Piece. Perrot allowed the crops to grow, but at dawn on the 28th August some twenty or so of his retainers, armed with pitchforks and daggers, travelled with eleven carts to the land in dispute with the intention of carrying away the crops to the nearest Perrot farmhouse. They were spotted and soon encountered Griffith White who tried slashing the traces of the horses. He was overpowered and held to the ground at the point of a pitchfork, though the intervention of his sons Harry and George saved him from injury. White, a JP., now ordered the constable of Roscrowther parish, one of his own men, to call on his opponents to disperse in the Queen's name, and at the same time he exhorted his neighbours to intervene with their arquebuses, bows and arrows. Perrot's men fled upon the appearance of the latter, thereby terminating what could have been a very nasty incident.

St Florence

A pretty village with houses and cottages grouped around the church. The whole place has a real Little England- feel about it. Noted for the old Flemish chimney on the roadside. Gardens are a blaze of colour during the summer, and the village has an enviable reputation as a winner in the annual Wales-in-Bloom competition.

Ancient Remains R C A M

Park Wall Mound

On the second field south of Park Wall House is a long mound with a base circumference of about 80ft and a height of 3ft. It has every appearance of being sepulchral, and shows no sign of having been disturbed. Visited 15th April 1915

Park Wall Dyke

In the same field as the mound is a bank running due east and west for a distance of 150 ft with an average height of 10ft. On its south side is a ditch of corresponding length, partly filled in under cultivation, with a counterscarp of 6ft. This earthwork is indicated on the 6in ordinance survey sheet but is given no name. It is locally known as the Dyke. Visited 15th April 1915

Long Stone

Three fields, doubtless originally one which in the Tithe Survey are called by the above name. There is now no Maenhir visible -- Visited 15th April 1915

Carn Park

A field close to the natural outcrop of Carn rock from which is doubtless derived. An adjacent field is similarly named – Visited 13 April 1915

Bloody Acre

Three fields west of Bumbler's farmhouse are still known by this name, though its origin is forgotten. – Visited 15th April 1915

Upper Castle; Lower Castle

Two fields appurtenant to Jordanston Mountain farmhouse. Agricultural operations have practically obliterated all traces of any earthworks which may have stood on them. There are, however, slight risings on their surface, which may be artificial. The surrounding fields are naturally stony and rough. – Visited 13th April 1915

Castle Park

The names of three fields north west of Norchard Beacon probably due to the natural broken surface. – Visited 15th April 1915

Church Meadow

A field on Minerton Farm. The name is now forgotten. – Visited 15th April 1915

Cross Park

The name of a field near Norchard Cottages. It is not near a crossroad and in view of the fact that it occurs near the birthplace of St Teilo it appears to be worthy of record. – Visited 15 April 1915.

The nave, chancel, north transept, and south transept and tower are all 13th century, and the porch is of c1300, East of the tower is a south chapel with a two bay arcade. On the north side of the chancel is a vaulted recess giving access to a vaulted vestry. (There were many times I robed before going out to take a Service in this vestry and I always thought of all those through the centuries who had robed there and asked their guidance and I often wondered how Mrs Davies the organist had managed to pick hymns which always suited my sermon text).

This benefice originally comprised a rectory and vicarage both in the patronage of the Crown. In 1594 George Owen describes the rectory as a free church without care of souls. – Owen's Pem. The vicarage was on 23 November 1860, united with the sinecure rectory under an Order in Council. Described as Ecclesia de Sancto Florenco, this church was in 1201 assessed at £13 6s 8d, for tenths to the King, the sum payable being £1 6s. 8d. – Taxatio.

The river Ritic used to be navigable up to the village but now the Village lies over two miles from the sea. But people living in Tenby, before the railway built in 1858 caused the river to silt up, could remember when boats were frequently taken up to St Florence and remains of an old wharf have been found.

1839 St Florence Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

FLORENCE (ST.), a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Tenby; containing 396 inhabitants. This place is beautifully situated on a gentle eminence in the centre of a fertile vale, sheltered on one side by the northern declivity of the Ridgeway between Pembroke and Tenby. The parish is bounded on the north by the parishes of Carew and Redbarth, on the south by Manorbeer, on the east by Gumfreston, and on the west by Nash and Lamphey. It comprises by admeasurement 2470 acres of land, which is chiefly in pasture, and appropriated to dairy-farming, the produce of the parish being principally butter and cheese; the soil rests, in some places, on clay, and in others on limestone, and varies in its quality from great richness and fertility to absolute barrenness. The surface is broken into valleys and hills, and a small brook, flowing through the district to Tenby, diversifies and improves the scenery, which, throughout the whole locality, is highly picturesque and beautiful. Near the village, which forms one of the most cheerful and interesting objects in the delightful ride from Tenby to Pembroke, is situated Ivy Tower, a commodious modern residence, containing a good antiquarian and classical library; and the vicinity of which is ornamented with some ash and elm trees. Many of the cottages, to which large gardens are attached, and which are grouped in pleasing clusters around the church, are of ancient appearance, and coeval with the castles in the vicinity, having been built by the first generations of the Flemings, who settled in this part of the principality, in the reign of Henry I., by permission of that monarch, when driven from their own country by an inundation of the sea. There are some limestone-quarries, and a few hands are employed as masons in marblwork.

The living consists of a rectory and a vicarage; the former a sinecure, rated in the king's books at £16. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge: the vicarage, which is discharged, is rated at £4. 18. 4., and is endowed with £400 royal bounty; patron, the Rector. These livings, which are at present totally distinct, are in future to be consolidated. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £160, with a glebe of twenty acres, valued at £35 per annum; and the vicarial for a rent-charge of £80, with a glebe of ten acres, valued at £20. The church, dedicated to St. Florence, is a very ancient, massive, cruciform structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty belfry tower, containing four fine-toned bells; the edifice measures seventy-two feet in extreme length, and twenty feet in breadth, and will accommodate about 200 persons with sittings. On the north side of the altar is a mural tablet of brass, with a Latin epitaph, in choriambic verse, to the memory of Robert Rudd, A.B., formerly archdeacon of St. David's, who was ejected from his benefice for his adherence to the cause of Charles I., and died in October, 1648. There is a place of worship for Independents. A Sunday school is held in the village schoolroom in the morning, and in the vicarage-house in the evening; but no day school is supported here, the National school at Redbarth, an adjoining parish, being designed for the children of St. Florence also. The remains of antiquity in and about the village are considerable: in 1835, a small silver cross, inscribed with Saxon characters, was found in the vicarage-garden.

1847 Notes of Older Churches – Glynne printed in Arch Camb 1886 p 57

This Church has a nave, North Transept, tower placed on the south side, and a chancel, with a south chapel (now divided off) and a vestry on the north. The church follows the style and peculiar arrangement so prevalent in the west of Pembrokeshire. The nave is wide, and there is a large south porch, within which is a benatura, near the door, and a plain rude niche over it. On the south of the nave is one lancet. At the west end is a late square-headed window, lately restored. The tower, as usual tapers, and is without any strings or buttresses. At the south-east is a square turret, and the whole has the common battlement. On the south side, in the lower part, is a lancet, and no other openings but the belfry – windows which are bouble on the south and west, with obtuse heads; on the north with square heads, and no arch; on the east a single narrow slit. The tower is, in its lower part, rudely vaulted in stone, and forms a transept, the arch being of rude and clumsy pointed form. On the west side within the tower are two rude arches formed in the wall. On the east side is a recess which seems once to have opened into the south aisle of the chancel, near which is a rude arch, possibly once the entrance to the rood steps; and another low pointed recess in the wall. The north transept opens by a rude pointed arch and contains some stone brackets. The chancel is vaulted in stone and its arch very plain, springing straight from the wall on each side. Between the chancel and the chapel, or aisle on the south, are two oddly shaped depressed arches, very plain and course, with a circular pier having an impost moulding and no base. In the eastern respond is a square recess. There is a pointed doorway on the north side. The east window has three lancets within a general arch of pointed form. On the north of the chancel adjoining the chancel-arch is a rudely shaped, pointed arch formed in the vault, apparently forming a kind of a chapel, and lighted by a lancet. There are stone brackets which must have supported the rood loft. In the north transept is a two-lighted Decorated window without foils. The font has a square bowl, scalloped below on a low cylinder with square base. There is no west door. The south chancel aisle has no windows, and the roof is rude and singular, but a fair specimen of the style of the west of Pembrokeshire.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Florence

The plan of this building is of a chancel 23ft 6in by 15ft, south chamber to chancel 23ft 6in by 10ft, north chapel to chancel 14ft by 17ft 6in now used as a vestry, nave 49ft by 18ft, north transept 15ft by 12ft 9 in, south tower 20ft by 17ft 6in externally, and south porch. Except for the nave and north transept, all the roofs have plain vaults. The south chamber, doubtless intended for a mortuary chapel, opens to the chancel by an arcade of two low depressed arches springing from a circular pier of masonry. There is communication between the chancel and the tower by a passage, 4ft in height, 3ft broad and 5ft 6in in length. The north chancel – chapel has a plain vault; it was entered by a plain pointed doorway (now blocked), and gives entrance from the churchyard. Between the chapel and the north aisle or transept is the opening of the stairs to the rood loft. In its north-west angle is a squint to the aisle. The nave had on its south side a doorway between the tower and the porch, of which slight traces are visible. In the external north wall at the west end is a low arched recess 6ft 6in in length, which, when opened out about the year 1835, is said to have contained a stone coffin that has been removed.

The south porch has masonry benches and the remains of a stoup. On the wall hangs a large disused iron key of 17th century date.

The font basin 23ins square externally, 17in internally with an external depth of 14in, is of the cushion type and stands upon a plain circular shaft 54in in circumference; the base is square. It retains traces of a locked cover.

The Chancel was thoroughly restored in the year 1870, when all the windows were practically renewed. The tower is of four stories and of exceptional height, the turret at its south east angle containing ninety stairs. It tapers slightly to the corbel table which is surmounted by battlements. There is no exterior doorway other than that which gives access to the stairs. In the south wall of the ground storey is a single lancet; the only other lights are in the belfry stage, those to the south and west being double, with obtusely pointed arches; on the east is a single plain slit, and on the north are two lights with square heads. The lower storey has two recesses, probably intended for cupboards; both are rudely arched.

In the churchyard are a six-sided shaft now used as a sun-dial stem and an erect stone locally said to be the shaft of a cross. The latter is oblong in shape, with one face showing several rude line-markings which have been mistaken for ogams, but probably are marks of tool sharpening. –

Fragment of Carved Stone

Built into the wall of the vicarage stable, is a stone which appears to be part of a foliated double light; it was inserted in its present position at the restoration of 1870.

1896 Random Recollections George Huntington

George William Birkett, Vicar of St.Florence, Pembrokeshire.

A memoir of Birkett, under the above title, is included in George Huntingtons, Random Recollections, published in 1896. Huntington was rector of Tenby and a minor author of considerable repute in his day.

“Dear old Mr.Birkett”, as he was called by his parishioners, was the son of a vicar of Stanton by West Hartlepool, who required his son each morning to light the fire, prepare the early breakfast of oatmeal porridge, and be ready for his first lesson at 5 o’clock. Latin, Greek and divinity would be studied until a later breakfast at 8.30 followed by an hours work in the garden, further study until one, then dinner, after which his father went about his parochial duties. Having taken his degree at St. John College, Cambridge, Birkett became curate at Oswestry, whose vicar being sinecure rector of St.Florence appointed him vicar of that parish in 1828. He found his best route for travelling to that remote Pembrokeshire parish from his Durham home was by the Liverpool packet steamer to Westford, to re-cross the Irish Sea to Milford Haven and thence in a rowing boat to Pembroke and thence to St.Florence.

The church, Birkett discovered, was in a ruinous state. The cocks and hens roosted in the building, and a horse was stabled in the porch. The church was restored; a vicarage was built planned by his wife. And here in this out of the way place Birkett lived the life of a parish priest in the tradition of George Herbert. Medical skills he had picked up at Oswestry meant he doctored all the poorer parishioners, he made wills, drew up indentures, reconciled disputes, discouraged litigation, established a benefit club to encourage thrift, recommended the well conducted youth for situations, and excommunicated the offenders! His hobby was his church choir, and Huntington noted that many suggested that in engaging a servant what mattered more than skill in cooking or housekeeping was a good voice and aptness to sing. He even arranged an annual concert for his choir at Tenby, giving them a good supper, conducting it himself, and purchasing white gloves for all the singers.

Birkett kept up his scholarship. Huntington once took Bishop Ellicott of Gloucester to meet him. Over tea a respectful Birkett conversed on the respective merits of Gladstone's and Lord Derby's translation of Homer. As the two guests left, Ellicott remarked to Huntington that Birkett had not only retained his scholarship in the forty-five years he had spent in that remote village, he had positively gone on with the critical scholarship of the day. He also tried his hand at poetry, but without much success.

Archdeacon Allen of Salop, a former pupil of his, wrote:

“He came to St. Florence to do the will of Him that sent him, not in a spirit of self-assertion, but taking cheerfully the lowest place. He was one of the holdfast of society. All, that came under his happy influence were, as I think, helped and stirred up to love and good works.” And Huntington concludes: “The beauty of his character was its simplicity, and nothing could induce him to go from his early hours and quiet habits. He lived among his people, visited them from house to house, and had a kind word and a kinder smile for the children. His preaching was calm and unimpassioned, but instructive, often flavoured with old world-scholarship which he never obtruded, but could not always keep back. He was on the best terms with all his parishioners, Dissenters included: the resident preacher was his guest at his tithe dinners, and used to propose the parsons health. In this diocese there lived no more faithful minister of God, no more earnest, true childlike Christian, than the vicar of St. Florence.” (From Welsh Church Life June 1997 by Roger Brown).

In 1923 the Vicarage of Redberth was united with the Rectory of St. Florence

1847 State of Education in Wales

Parish of St Florence

On 24th of December I visited the above parish. The only school which it contained was a Sunday school, held in the village school room in the morning and in the vicarage in the evening. The children from this parish go to school in the adjoining parish of Redberth, where the schoolroom was, as the Vicar of St Florence informed me “built constitutionally for a part of St Florence” It is, by agreement between himself and the clergyman at Redberth, open to all children from St Florence. There was one Dissenting chapel in the Parish but no Sunday School held in it. The parish clerk , who is one of the teachers in the Church Sunday school is paid £2 2s for his services, and further subscriptions are made, which together make his salary amount to £3 5s per annum. Wages for labourers average 7s per week – they are all remarkably sober and tolerably industrious
David Lewis Assistant

I called on the Rev Mr Birkett on the 28th of December and examined in his house two of his best scholars from his Sunday School, a boy and a girl, who passed a creditable and not very easy examination on scriptural subjects. The boy had only been for a short time in a day school in Gloucestershire four or five years before; could write only imperfectly; had never learned arithmetic; and was constantly at work in the week. He repeated long passages from the Gospels by heart in answer to several of my questions. Previously to the union of St Florence’s parish in supporting the school at Redberth, there had been one or two dame-schools in St Florence: but the dames could not make a living; and on the last of them giving up her school about two months before my visit, the arrangement was effected with Redberth shortly afterwards This latter school afforded sufficient accommodation for the children of St Florence.

The state of the farm servants is generally very bad. So long as they do their work they are well treated by the farmers, but no moral care or control is exercised over them. They sleep in the outbuildings and keep their own hours. They do not generally attend school or any place of worship on the Sabbath. There is a considerable difference in this part of the county, as to the relation in which they stand to the farmers, compared with the Welsh districts. There the farmers associate with them habitually and familiarly. Here they are very tenacious of their distinctive rank and in this neighbourhood are mostly Churchmen. The inhabitants of St Florence are small mechanics rather than agricultural. The farm servants come from other parishes.

Stackpole, St Petrox & St Twynnells

A quiet and very beautiful corner of Pembrokeshire, centred on the old Stackpole Estate. Stackpole Court has been demolished in 1963 after being used by the military during WW2,

The Estate is now owned by the National Trust, and its renovated buildings are being put to good use. The church is at Stackpole Elidor, just over half a mile away. Nearby are deep wooded valleys, the Bosherston Lily Ponds, the charming little harbour of Stackpole Quay, and the remote and lovely sandy beach of Barafundle Bay.

1839 Stackpool-Elidur Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

STACKPOOL-ELIDUR, a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3½ miles (S.) from Pembroke; containing 294 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from the Stack rock at the mouth of the Broad Haven (at the head of which it is situated) in the Bristol Channel; and its adjunct from St. Elidur, to whom the original foundation of its church is attributed. The parish comprises an extensive tract of good arable and pasture land, in a high state of cultivation; and the scenery, enriched with the beautiful grounds and plantations surrounding the mansion of Stackpool Court, is finely diversified and strikingly picturesque. Stackpool Court, the property and one of the seats of Earl Cawdor (of which the park is in this parish, and the house and grounds in that of St. Petrox), is romantically situated in a deep and well-wooded valley, ornamented with an artificial lake, over which is an elegant stone bridge of eight arches. A noble mansion, which overlooked the lake, was erected by the great grandfather of Earl Cawdor, and son of Sir Alexander Campbell, who was the first of the family that settled in Wales, and who, by marriage with Miss Lort, the heiress, became possessed of the estate. This edifice, however, has been almost entirely rebuilt by his lordship, from a plan designed by the late Sir Jeffrey Wyatville; and Stackpool Court has been rendered one of the most superb residences in the principality. It is built of hewn limestone, and presents an imposing grandeur of appearance, having two spacious and magnificent fronts: along the whole of that facing the lake, a wide terrace has been formed, from which is a delightful prospect; and from the other front, containing the entrance, is a view of the pleasure-grounds. The interior comprises a splendid suite of apartments, and a library consisting of a large collection of valuable works in every department of literature. The gardens are laid out with taste, and the greenhouses and hothouses are stored with rare exotics; the park, which is well stocked with deer, is very extensive, and in the grounds is a large conservatory: the approach to the house has been much increased in beauty by the erection of a new bridge of one arch. The whole of this fine property has been greatly improved by the present proprietor; and the estate, which includes not less than fifteen thousand acres of rich land, in the highest state of cultivation, with its luxuriant woods and plantations, forms a distinguished ornament to this part of the county.

The living is a rectory, with that of St. Petrox, rated in the king's books, and endowed with £600 royal bounty; income, £447. The church, dedicated to St. Elidur, or, according to some authorities, to St. James, is an ancient structure, containing several monuments to different members of the family of Stackpool Court, among which is one, under a rich sculptured canopy of stone, bearing the effigy of a crusader, said to represent Sir Elidur de Stackpool, the earliest known proprietor of that estate, and the reputed founder of the church. The interior was richly embellished by an ancestor of Earl Cawdor, in 1766. In the park is a day school, under the patronage of the Earl and Countess Cawdor; and a Sunday School is held in the church. On a tongue of land commanding a branch of the Stackpool estuary is a strong encampment, near which have been found human bones in several places, a brazen spear-head, and an old sword; probably memorials of some of those conflicts that frequently took place along this coast, between the natives and the invaders of their country.

Stackpole. Edwards, Emily Hewlett 1910

Stackpole was a place-name before the advent of Arnulph de Montgomery. It is mentioned as Ystang Bwl in the Will of Cadifor Vawr, who died just before the Normans invaded Wales. Giraldus Cambrensis tells the story of Sir Elidor de Stackpole's demon steward, who appeared to be a red-headed young man named Simon; he seized the keys of the previous steward, usurped the position, and performed his duties wonderfully well; he produced, as if by magic, any dish privately desired by his master and mistress, knew all their secrets, divined where the knight's treasure was concealed, and even upbraided his employers for storing instead of using and enjoying their riches; he fed the servants sumptuously, and for forty days everyone was happy. Although Simon did not sleep in the house he was always at his post in the morning, but alas! he never went to church, and not one Catholic word did he utter! It was discovered that he held nightly converse by a mill and pond of water. Sir Elidor and his lady, on hearing this, demanded the keys, which he gave up, confessing himself to be the son of a peasant woman begotten by a demon who took the shape of her husband. The mother corroborated his story, and the poor devil was dismissed. The old castle of Stackpole forms a nucleus round which clusters the 18th century mansion; the original hall, with groined and vaulted roof, is now used as a cellar. Stackpoles, Vernons, Lorts and Campbells have in turn been lords of Stackpole. Edwards, Emily Hewlett Castles and strongholds of Pembrokeshire Tenby 1909

Stackpole Court was actually listed as being in the parish of St. Petrox and the two parishes were united in 1839

Note – in the Life of St. Teilo included in the Book of Llan Dav, the Saint is said to have been known also as Eliud, and it is certain that all the Pembrokeshire churches dedicated to Elidyr lie within the district covered by Teilo's activities. It is doubtful whether St. Elidyr ever existed and it is probable that the name is due to a scribe who finished off the form Elid with a flourish which was taken by a later copyist as the ordinary contraction for -er or or. At a still later date he appears in medieval genealogy as Sir Elidore, a knight of the holy sepulchre, and the stock-parent of a long line of Pembrokeshire families

1895 Nooks and Corners of Pembrokeshire – Timmins

By - and - by we come to Cheriton (Stackpole Cheriton); a tiny hamlet with a comely church, whose tall, ivy -clad tower rises from a wooded dell. In the church-yard stands an ancient cross smothered in creepers, and the stepping-block for those who rode to church in bygone days.

In the north wall of the chancel, beneath a handsome, canopied recess of somewhat unusual character, lies the effigy of its reputed founder. Sir Elidin de Stackpole.

The figure has a grave and dignified appearance ; it is clad in a suit of chain-and-plate mail, and has sword, shield and large spurs. The worthy knight is represented with crossed legs, as having fought in the wars of the Crusades ; at the time, no doubt, when Baldwyn and Gerald of Manorbere were inciting the people to that famous enterprise.

The base of this monument is divided into six panels, in each of which is a figure beneath a cusped and crocketed arch. These quaint little effigies show a curious variety of costume and expression, and are worth close examination. Upon the opposite, or southern, side of the chancel is the figure of a lady, apparently of Edwardian date. The head is covered with a square hood, and is supported by two kneeling angels. This effigy is very well executed, and in an unusually good state of preservation.

In the adjacent chantry- we notice the early- seventeenth-century monument of ' Roger Lorte, late Lorde of the Mannor of Stackpoole.' This singular erection is enriched with the painted figures of Sir Roger his lady, and their twelve children, and bears a pious inscription in the peculiar style of the period. Under the window of this chantry- lies a disused altar stone bearing the following inscription, which we respect-fully submit for antiquaries to exercise their wits upon : CAMU ORIS

Hard beneath the church we plunge into a woodland path, and follow the meanderings of a prattling brook which hurries along, beneath the cool shade of overarching trees, to the lake-like river that irts the broad demesne of Stackpole Court.

The variety and luxuriance of the forest trees that flourish in this sheltered locality, are all the more striking in a country where well-developed timber is, as a rule, conspicuous by its absence ; for the rigorous gales that sweep across the more exposed uplands, give to the struggling vegetation that leeward slant which is a characteristic of many a Pembrokeshire landscape.

Pleasant it is, turning from the glare of the dusty roadway, to saunter beneath these leafy aisles of smooth-stemmed beech and knotty oak, mountain-ash, ilex and Scotch fir ; and to push our way through intertwining thickets of bramble, wild-rose and ivy, enmeshed by the clinging woodbine and traveller's joy ; while all the time the mercury, in less-favoured spots, is climbing steadily towards the eighties.

Crossing a rustic bridge that spans the lake, we pause to watch the slim, brown trout darting in every direction beneath the water-lilies that adorn its placid surface ', when, suddenly, a brace of dusky waterfowl, alarmed by our intrusion, dart off with an impetuous splash and trail away in rapid flight to the shelter of the ozier-beds.

Ere long the broad, gray front of Stackpole Court comes into view beyond a stretch of velvety greensward ; the massive porch being flanked by two small Spanish field-guns of antiquated pattern, bearing the titles ' La Destruidora ' and ' La Tremenda.' The existing mansion was built by an ancestor of the present Lord Cawdor, upon the site of the baronial residence of that same Sir Elidur de Stackpole, whose tomb we have so lately seen at Cheriton.

The older house had experienced a chequered career. After weathering many troubles in mediaeval times, it was garrisoned by the King's troops during the Civil Wars : when its stout old walls offered such effective resistance to the Parliamentary cannon, that they did but little execution.

Stackpole is now the residence of the noble ' Thane of Cawdor,' whose ancestor acquired the estate by marriage with Miss Lort, the sole heiress to all these broad acres.

The mansion contains some interesting works of art and relics of antiquity, including a portrait by Romney of the famous Lady Hamilton; a fine painting of Admiral Sir George Campbell, G.C.B., who captured the French invaders at Fishguard in 1797; and a curious old map of the county, adorned with shields and armorial devices.

That famous drinking-cup the ' Hirlas horn " was formerly to be seen at Stackpole, but has since been removed to Golden Grove, in Carmarthenshire. This curious treasure is mounted in silver, and is supported upon an oval plinth by two silver quadrupeds. The latter are probably the only remaining portions of the original horn, presented by Henry of Richmond to his faithful enter-tainer, Dafydd ap Iwan, while resting at the castle of Llwyn Dafydd, in Cardiganshire, on his way to Bosworth Field.

Upon faring forth again, we are struck with admiration of the splendid groups of evergreen trees that adorn the vicinity of the mansion, and the trim, well-tended grounds that contrast so pleasantly with the wild luxuriance of the surrounding woodlands.

At the neighbouring farm we pick up a track diverging to the left, that leads us over a bridge spanning the lake-like estuary-, affording a pretty peep of the mansion upon its bank. Thence our path winds across the breezy slopes of Stackpole Park, until we drop suddenly upon tiny quay and cluster of cottages, stowed away beside the sea in the oddest corner imaginable, under the sheltering lee of the cliffs. Ensconced in this out-of-the-way nook, we snatch a well-earned fiesta; and upon resuming our stroll we follow the coast-line, passing near a cavern that goes by the name of Lort's Cave, and catching a glimpse of the secluded cove of Barrafundle, backed by a stretch of blue sea and the bold crags of Stackpole Head.

Ancient Village 1811 Fenton Tours

I cross an arm of the estuary of Stackpole, under a tongue of land covered with a strong encampment, and well placed to command the inlet it fronts, and ascend a gentle slope near the summit of which is a small adit or cavern in the limestone rock; here, in digging for a fox, were found human bones and a brazen spear head; and in the morass separating it from the encampment, an old sword with a deer horn handle. In levelling some inequalities on the flat to the eastwards of the camp, they were found to consist of human bones, probably the spot where a skirmish between the invaders and natives might have taken place. Indeed the whole neighbourhood, from many striking traditions and other circumstances, appears to have been the scene of frequent and bloody contests.

1923 Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments in Wales- Prehistoric antiquities of Stackpole

The following note (MS in Tenby Museum) by the late Mr Edward Laws, F.S.A on the prehistoric antiquities of Stackpole, forms an admirable introduction to the account of this parish.

“On the Warren, a tract of blown sand lying between Stackpole Court and the sea (by the arm of which it was formerly intersected) there are certain lines of stones resembling the foundations of walls, huts etc. last so narrow that they never could have been more than 2ft or 3ft high. These are known as the Prehistorical Village. In the immediate vicinity, and for some distance around are large numbers of flint flacks and cores, among which are a few perfect implements have been found. In the neighborhood are many round barrows, how many is impossible to say as they are hidden by the shifting sand; from one of these came a broken earthenware and charred bone. Near at hand in a cave, was found a bronze sword handle with unburnt animal and human bones, and on the surface of the sand a bronze fibula was once picked up. There are three menhirs not far off, the nearest being about 500yds from the village. Well made pottery and iron slag are found on the blown sand, proving that this settlement was not overwhelmed by the sand and deserted until after the Iron Age had commenced. It is remarkable as being the most eastern flint factory in Pembrokeshire; these occur at short intervals along the coast from stackpole to the northern part of the county, at Brownslade, Dale, St Brides and Llanwnda.

Stackpole Warren 'ANCIENT Village'

An enclosure complex, extending about 120m NNW-SSE by 60m, the various features being defined by low (up to 0.4m high) stony banks; at the centre of the complex, as mapped by RCAHMW (1979), is a circular structure, some 8.0m across, opening into a roughly 17.5m diameter enclosure on the east: examination of the latter enclosure showed that it had been constructed over an earlier shell-midden (Benson 1978); the site has produced much worked flint, along with iron-slag & possibly spindlewhorls: the complex, occupying a north-facing promontory, can apparently be linked to a wider pattern of relict field enclosure, although this is not certain (Benson et al. 1990, 208).

Stackpole - Mrs Mary Mirehouse.

Stackpole Vernon. Stanley. Lort. Campbell. Owners.

Sir Richard Stackpole, knighted by William the Conqueror, married Margaret, daughter of Sir Richard Tuberville of Glamorgan, and lived at Stackpole, now called Stackpole Court, but not so in the older records. He was succeeded by his brother Robert, whose son, Sir William, married a daughter of Hywel ap Ithel, Lord of Roos, and commanded troops under King Stephen; he was defeated by King David in the Battle of the Standards in 1138.

William's son, Sir Richard, married a daughter of Henry Vernon of Haddon, and his son was Sir Elidor, who went to the Crusades with King Richard I. in 1169, and whose tomb and effigy are in Cheriton Church. He married Elsbeth, daughter of Sessylt ap Llewellyn ap Mereddig, and their daughter, Elsbeth, became heiress of Stackpole. Elsbeth married Sir Rhys, an old Knight of War; then followed Grufudd, then Rhys ap Grufudd (Welsh names introduced by the old Knight of War !), then a daughter, Sioned (or Joanet), who married William Vernon of Harliston in Staffordshire, son of Sir Richard Vernon. She died in 1368, and her son, Sir Richard Vernon, succeeded. He married Benedicta, sister and heiress of Sir Fulk Pemburge (?) of Pemburge Castle, and of Tong, in Staffordshire. He was living at Stackpole in 1400, but there is no trace of Vernons resident there later.

Then followed Sir William Vernon, Constable of England for life, he died 1467; then another Sir William, who married Margaret, daughter of Lord Ferrers, and was Lord of Haddon (Haddon Hall in Derbyshire). Then Sir Henry, Governor and Treasurer to Prince Arthur, son of Henry VII.; he fought at Bosworth Field in 1485. After him came Sir Richard, who died 1518; then Sir George, called "the King of the Peak", from his extravagant hospitality.

He died 1565 and left two daughters, co-heiresses; of whom Dorothy eloped with Sir John Manners, son of the Duke of Rutland, and took Haddon as her portion, and Margaret married Sir Thomas Stanley, son of the Earl of Derby, and took Stackpole and Tong. She appointed as her steward at Stackpole, George Lort, son of John Lort of Knowlden, Staffordshire, who was born about 1530. He, in Lady Stanley's lifetime, changed from steward to owner, probably by purchase.

George Lort's son Roger, born about 1555, married Abertha, daughter of his father's second wife, who was the widow of Hugh Bwrrw. Roger was Sheriff in 1607, and died 1613. There is a quaint verse on his tomb in the Memorial Chapel at Chenton Church:

Worne out with lingering sickness here I lye,
My body rather, whence my soul did Eye,
As out of prison to Heavens joyes,
Make these sure, reder, all things els are toyed.

Henley Lort succeeded in 1613, and was Sheriff in 1619. He had three sons: Roger, who succeeded to Stackpole, Henry, of Prickeston (now a farm on the Stackpole estate), and Sampson, of Eastmoor, Manorbier. Henry died in 1646, and Roger succeeded, who took a very leading part in the Parliamentary wars on Cromwells side; he was a most bitter opponent of Rowland Laugharne and John Poyer, the gallant defenders of Pembroke Castle in the great siege. They on one occasion caught Roger with White and others, at - Henllan, near Pwllcrochan, and besieged them there; but they contrived to escape. Roger was Sheriff in 1652, and was created Baronet by Charles II. in 1662; he died in 1664, and his son John succeeded, whose wife was Lady Susanna Holles, daughter of the Earl of Ware. Their only son, Gilbert, died in 1698, and his sister Elizabeth became heiress of Stackpole; she was then a widow, having married Sir Alexander Campbell of Calder, or Cawdor, in Nairnshire, in 1688, who had died in 1697. The eldest son of Sir Alexander Campbell and Elizabeth Lort, Gilbert, died young; the second, John, succeeded his mother at Stackpole, and his grandfather at Cawdor in 1716. He married Mary, daughter and co-heiress of Lewis Pryse of Gogerddan; he was Lord of the Admiralty and afterwards of the Treasury. He added to, and improved the mansion at Stackpole and made the library. His eldest son, Pryse, predeceased him, having married Sarah, daughter of Sir Edmund Bacon; their son John succeeded his grandfather in 1777. He married Lady Catherine Howard, daughter of the Earl of Carlisle, and was made Baron Cawdor of Castlemartin in 1796. He died in 1821, his son, John Frederick, was made Earl in 1827, and married Lady Elizabeth Thynne, daughter of the Marquess of Bath; he died in 1860. John Frederick Vaughan, his son, married Sarah Mary, daughter of General the Hon. Henry Compton Cavendish (she was Maid of Honour to Queen Victoria); he died in 1898, and was succeeded by his son the third Earl.

Early 1800s John Campbell (later Lord Cawdor) of Stackpole and John Mirehouse of Brownslade drained huge marshes and converted them into fruitful grain growing fields and improved the breeds of cattle and sheep.

Early Stackpole House

Earlier house was fortified and garrisoned for the King in the Civil War besieged 1644. It is said that the walls were so strong that the ordinance did but little execution but the Parliamentarians succeeded in making a breach and the small garrison surrendered after eight hours siege.

18c Stackpole Court : This mansion was built in 1735- 54 on the undercroft of the earlier house.

Alexander Campbell heir to Cawdor Castle in Scotland married Elizabeth Lort, heiress to Stackpole Court. Alexander was up at Cambridge with Elizabeth's brother Gilbert Lort and used to stay at Stackpole for a night or two before taking ship up the west coast to Fort William. On one occasion he was storm bound for several weeks and romance blossomed.

Stackpool Court (spelling according to Fenton from Ancient MS and other ancient Documents)

1811 Tours Fenton

Stackpool Court, the elegant seat of Loer Cawder, undoubtedly took its name, and so I find it noted in a MS I have had access to in the Bodleian library, from the Stack rock at the mouth of the pool or estuary of Broadhaven, at the head of which it stands.

The house is situated on the western side of the water, on a fine eminence at the edge of a bold declivity, and before it yielded to the present noble edifice, had a partly castellated form, though it had been for a century before, by every addition and alteration it experienced, gradually losing its ancient and original baronial character and moulding itself to the fashion of the times. However there can be no doubt of its retaining much of its castle strength and massiveness at the time of the civil wars, as it was fortified and garrisoned for the king; for in an account given by the parliamentary forces of the siege, they say "the walls were so strong that the ordinance did but little execution," it surrendered on quarter and sixty soldiers completely armed were found in the house. The mansion now occupying the same site, of wrought limestone was built by the grandfather of the present noble possessor, who was the son of Sir Alexander Campbell of Cawder castle in Scotland, the first of the name who settled here by marrying Miss Lort, the sole heiress of this great property. Though there have been objections to the heaviness of its architecture, it is a large and magnificent pile and well adapted to its site. It had two fronts, the principal facing the pleasure grounds and the grand approach; the other looking over a fine piece of water at the foot of the slope it stands on to the park.. you enter the latter from a terrace of great breadth, extending the length of it, and after descending a flight of steps continued on a lower level the whole length of a spacious conservatory, furnished with a choice collection of the rarest shrubs and plants. On the opposite side is the park, of great compass, and well stocked with deer, but wanting a belt of trees to hide the barren sand banks without it, and produce shelter where most wanted by breaking the sea breeze; and otherwise deficient in wood, though that defect from the numerous young thriving plantations everywhere judiciously scattered, is likely soon to be obviated. The hills skirting the lake on the house, and forming its boundary, are richly wooded in every direction, as are the pleasure grounds and shrubbery in front, beyond which, but completely hidden, are the gardens, including the hot houses on an immense scale. Between the park and the sea there is a warren consisting of a vast tract of burrows formed by mountains of sand consolidated by that valuable plant sea weed grass; abounding with rabbits, a valuable appendage to a great mans residence, which, though to shut it out by a screen of foliage from the view, might be desirable, yet no one could wish to have it removed.

A charming piece of water admirably planned now fills the vale under the house, which, till this change of late years took place, crept an inconsiderable stream choaked with reeds and osiers all the way to the place where it felt and was lost in, the tide. The dam for altering the level, necessary to unite the water, is happily hidden under the elegant bridge of eight arches, connecting the grounds on the side of the mansion with the park. The lake is most abundantly stocked with aquatic wild fowl of every sort, if wild they may be called, that collect at a call, and come in flocks to dry land to be fed like barn door poultry. It has been justly remarked, that nothing gives such enjoyment on the generous minds of its possessors, as the sight of the commoners of the wild, looking up to them for security and protection; and so far domesticated as not to seem impatient of more limited liberty, clearly shown by flocking to the hands of their benefactors, with fearless confidence to receive their bounty, and as it were, to acknowledge and repay it.

The house is distributed into a number of very noble apartments, and the library is large and well furnished. In one of the rooms hung round with family pictures, there is a portrait whole length of Lord Cawdor, by Sir Joshua Reynolds; and of Lady Cawdor, by Sir William Beechey; and, in an adjoining room an original portrait of the late Lord Holland. The offices are all well arranged, and the stables form a detached large quadrangular building, are in a style of princely pretensions.

Of Stackpole without straining compliment, it may safely be said that there are few places which display more magnificence without, or more sumptuous hospitality and elegant comforts within.

This, like all the baronial residences in the county, had its mill, an inseparable appendage, on the little stream below it, though long since swept away; but of which Giraldus has left a memorable record, as connected with a most ludicrous story he relates. But to sum up the importance of Stackpole, it stands in the midst of a contiguous property of fifteen thousand acres of the most valuable land, without the intervention of one incapable of cultivation.

The first Possessor of Stackpole we hear of, was Sir Elidur or Leonard de Stackpole, who stands at the head of all the pedigrees of his name: the same who Giraldus mentions, and who, no doubt, took the cross at the time Balswin made his transit through this county preaching the Crusade. From him not more than two descents were cast before the great possessions of this family fell among daughters the co-heiresses of Sir Richard Stackpole, one of whom Joan, who had Stackpole as her share, married Sir Richard Vernon, of Hodnet in Staffordshire. Whilst the estate remained in that name, I do not find any of them resided in the old Baronial Mansion, nor do we find it regularly inhabited again till after the year 1536 (for then the Vernons owned it, and we find that William Latymer was presented, by letters patent, to the parish church of Stackpole, lapsing to the king by reason of the minority of George Vernon about which time the Lorts got possession of it, but whether by marriage or purchase I knew not; in it the family of Lorts continued till its union with that of Campbell, in the person of Sir Alexander Campbell, whose great grandson, Lord Cawder, now enjoys it.

Stackpole Court -- Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments 1923

The seat of the Earl of Cawder. The present mansion is largely reared upon the undercroft of an earlier house, and has preserved an example of ribbed barrel vaulting similar to that in Monkton Old Hall.

In Addl MSS 1352 B of the National Library of Wales is an interesting reference to the erection of the present residence:--

"John Wright ((alias Gil Blas) bailiff to Pryse Campbell writing on the 17th October 1735 says ' Rebuilding of Stackpole. Since the pulling down of the old house the rats that used to run behind the wainscot in the study are gone abroad. The court is full of stones for the building and slates to cover the house' "

Fenton (Tours p418) gives the following account of the earlier house which – Before it yielded to the present noble edifice, had partly a castellated form though it had been for a century before, by every addition and alteration it experienced, gradually losing its ancient and original baronial character, and moulding itself to the fashion of the times. However, there can be no doubt of its retaining much of its castle strength and massiveness at the times of the civil wars, as it was fortified and garrisoned for the King; for in the account given by the Parliamentary forces of the siege, they say "the walls were so strong that the ordinance did but little execution" it surrendered on quarter, and sixty soldiers completely armed were found in the house. The mansion now occupying the site, of wrought limestone, was built by the grandfather of the present noble possessor, who was son of St Alexander Campbell, of Cawder Castle in Scotland, the first of the name who settled here by marrying Miss Lort the sole heiress of this great property.

A relic of Sir Roger Lort, author of a book of Latin epigrams remains at Stackpole in the shape of a leaden cistern, which bears the initials R.L. and the date 1659. In the hall is a stand of arms taken from the French by Lord Cawdor on the occasion of the landing at Fishguard.

Two pieces of ordinance, dated 1754 and 1757, Solano Fecit, doubtless wreckage from a ship of war, stand on the lawns in front of the House.

Stackpole Court, Stackpole

Stackpole Court was situated 500m to the west of Stackpole village (the other side of the lake), off a minor road running towards Merrion. Stackpole, which was the seat of the Campbell family (Lords of Cawdor in Scotland), was a large mansion built in 1735-6, and enlarged in the 19th century. It was built upon the undercroft of a much earlier house, the original hall of which, with a groined and vaulted roof, was later used as a cellar.

The Stackpoles had owned the estate since the early 12th century and the old castellated house may date from the 13th century or before. There are references to a house here owned by the Stackpools by Gerald of Wales in 1188. From the mid-16th century the estate was owned by the Lort family, and later passed to the Campbells by marriage in the early 18th century. The mansion was demolished in April 1963, after Cawdor had taken out the best internal features and moved them to a new house he had built on the Estate the previous year. RCAHMW, February 2011

Stackpole
Court, Garden,

Stackpole

Parklands & Gardens of Wales

Large estate which includes deerpark, warren, fishponds, obelisk, gasometer and massive kitchen garden. House demolished c 1972. In the care of the National Trust.

Stackpole Court

This site, in multiple ownership, including the National Trust, includes many complex and important garden and landscaped features, though its main original focus, a large mid-eighteenth (1758-1782) to nineteenth-century mansion was demolished 1962-72.

Its parks, gardens, lakes and woodlands were developed and continuously improved to create a sophisticated and beautiful ornamental landscape on a huge scale from the early eighteenth century. At its zenith this estate probably rivalled the best estates of Britain, with its strategically placed walks, 80 acres of lakes, bridges, weirs and grottos, all complemented by thoughtful and innovative planting. The surviving water features remain a particularly important feature of the site. The house's original terrace and balustrading survives. The brick-walled kitchen garden is one of the largest in the county, though this has unfortunately lost most of its older conservatories. CSB 12.04

This garden is depicted on the Second Edition Ordnance Survey 25-inch map of Pembrokeshire XLIII, sheet 5 (1908). Its main elements on that map include river, sundial, kennel, gasometer, woodland with vista paths, smithy, walled garden, parkland, relict hedgelines, quadrangular enclosure, parterres, boathouse, pond, saw mills, woodland, icehouse, isolated geometric copses, conservatory, dam, deerpark, walk, possible walk, waterfall, covert, haw haw, well, lodge, greenhouse, obelisk, bridge, terrace, carriage drive, weir and a possible formal garden.

Stackpole Court, Icehouse, Stackpole

Converted into a grotto. The top of the brick vault is over 2m long. RCAHMW, 5th December 2006.

Eight Arched Bridge, Stackpole Court

The bridge at Stackpole Court was built in 1797 to connect Stackpole Court and the Home Farm with the New Deer Park and Stackpole Quay. It consists of eight segmental arches of limestone masonry built over a weir., RCAHMW, 2007

Stackpole Quay

Stackpole quay extends approximately north-south for some 40m. The present 18th century masonry structure replaces an earlier quay dating to 1680 which was used to land coal dust from nearby Saundersfoot. The quay was used to ship out limestone from nearby gauries and to bring in luxury goods for Stackpole Court. Associated structures includes a boathouse and stores , a warehouse and a lime kiln . Now owned by the National Trust, the quay and small harbour it protects are still used by small local fishing boats RCAHMW, December 2012.

Stackpole Quay Cottages, Stackpole

These cottages are just back from the south-end of the harbourside in Stackpole Quay, along a track. They are a pair of 19th century estate cottages, built by the Cawdor Estate. They closely resemble the plan published in 1869 by Lord Cawdor for cottages costing about £132 to build. There are hints that this pair is a recasting of an earlier building: as one of the front doorways may be secondary; there is a hint of a blocked central window to the rear wall of the main block; and one gable contains an oven (fired from a lean-to outside) in an excessively thick wall. There also appears to be a building on the site on the OS 1st Edition 25" to the mile map of 1865, though of a different plan, whilst by the 1908 revision, the plan is the same as the current cottages. The walls are of rendered rubble and there is a slate roof with chimneys of squared limestone with a projecting gap. All the windows are small-paned sashes (modern copies of the originals), except the dairy windows, which have closely spaced diamond stanchions. The first floor is lit by gabled dormers., RCAHMW, 22nd March 2005

Stackpole Quay Farm, Stackpole

Stackpole Quay Farm lies at the north end of Stackpole Quay, to the north-east of the limestone quarry and kiln . It is one of the Cawdor Estate farms: a large altered farmhouse (possibly with an early core), surrounded by a small 'model farm' courtyard of outbuildings. The house is aligned roughly north-south, with the west façade a very plain 19th century front, with limewashed rubble walls and a slate roof, sash windows below flat wooden lintels and rubble chimneys. The north gable has a small rounded oven in the corner by the rear extension, and the extension has brick dressings to the windows. The gabled rear wing probably predates it, but has been altered. The long east-west wing is later. The interior has been considerably altered, particularly in the southern half of the house. At the north end there is a deep open fireplace with a rough wooden bressummer, with an oven to one side and a copper (possibly in a former oven) to the other. The partition wall formerly had two doorways, one of which was blocked by the wooden staircase (now removed) and its embrasure used for a small fireplace. A modern blockwork wall divided the building in two (possibly replacing a former solid stone partition). 2 doorways lead into the rear dairy: a square-headed opening from the north room and a cambered arch from the south room. A similar cambered arch indicates the division between the 2 halves of the dairy. The southern half has a deep fireplace in the gable (partly blocked), and a doorway to the outbuildings next to it. The 1st floor of the north half indicates some of the alterations: north of the partition, the roof has been raised by about 60cm, and new trusses with plain pegged collars, put in. The chimney breast is stepped back to the west, and there is a low blocked doorway to the east, suggesting this may have been a granary or servant's quarters with independent access. Under the roof, at the junction of the main wing and the gabled rear wing (where the ground plans show a solid block of masonry), there appears to be the base of a shouldered chimney-stack. This may indicate the former presence of a lateral stack. South of the partition is one of the higher-level trusses of the rest of the building, with chamfered notched lapped collars pegged to the principal rafters, with the apex halved. It may be that a small 17th century house with a lateral chimney was added to by a long extension in the 18th century, the old building being relegated to kitchen plus granary-loft, and a new fireplace and oven built. Later, in the nineteenth century, the building may have been divided into 2 dwellings, with the roof of the old part being raised. RCAHMW, 22nd March 2005

Stackpole Quay Stores, Stackpole

19th century stone building for quay.

This building is at the south-end of the harbourside in Stackpole Quay, opposite Stackpole Quay Boathouse and Stores. It is a ruined shell of a building, with the front wall of limestone rubble with quoins and door-jambs in dressed limestone. The rear wall is a battered (wider at the bottom than the top) revetment, or retaining wall, to the roadway behind. Formerly, the doorways were closed by large single-leaf gates. Comparison with other store-buildings suggests that the material stored (possibly lime from the nearby Kiln) was tipped in through high-level doorway-chutes from the upper road, and then loaded onto carts through the front doors for transport to the quay for shipment. The building may date from the second half of the nineteenth century as it does not appear to be present on the OS 1st Edition 25" to the mile map of 1865, but is by the time of the 1908 revision. RCAHMW, 22nd March 2005

Stackpole Quay Boathouse And Store, Stackpole

19th century store buildings for quay.

This building is at the south-end of the harbourside in Stackpole Quay. It is a large 'boathouse' plus a smaller attached store (possibly for coal/culm or lime - from the nearby Lime Kiln [NPRN: 40732]), within an enclosure wall. The boathouse appears to be the first building, with walls of random limestone rubble with a patching of bricks in the gable. It has a wide doorway with a wooden lintel. The attached store also has random rubble walls, with ashlar jambs to the doorways in the rear wall, at the level of the higher track running behind the complex. These may have been used for tipping in the material for storage. The front wall has been substantially rebuilt and the enclosing wall altered. RCAHMW, 22nd March 2005

Loading Berth, Stackpole Farm Quarry

The presence of a crane on the cliff top on the southern side of the quarry with no obvious trackway associated with it suggests that the products of this quarry were taken away by marine transport.

RCAHMW, March 2012.

Quarry, Stackpole Quay Farm

A former quarry is suggested by the squared shaped of the inlet and by the presence of a crane on the cliff top on the southern side (as shown on OS 1st edition 25in mapping). RCAHMW, March 2012.

Lime Kiln, Stackpole Quay

A well-preserved eighteenth century lime kiln is located on the south side of the hamlet of Stackpole Quay, immediately inland from the harbour. The structure is built against rising ground on the east and is of roughly coursed, mortared, undressed rubble with dressed quoins. It measures 7.92m long (N-S) by 5.9m wide at ground level, excluding buttresses which support all three walls. It is 4m high to the top of the parapet which is 0.9m high above the loading platform. The top of the kiln is accessed via an inclined track from the south. The charging hole, now grilled over, is 2.75m (9 feet) in diameter.

The kiln has two opposed draw-holes, 2.2m wide, 2.95m deep and 1.6m high. Each has a narrow slot at its rear allowing access/viewing into the charge hole. To the rear of the kiln is an extensive quarry face. Limestone is also believed to have been brought by boat from other locations, including the promontory of Flimston Castle.

Two stone outbuildings (one of which is now a National Trust lavatory) lie close by on the east. These are not shown on the first edition OS 1:2500 mapping. David Leighton, RCAHMW, 24 February 2009

Stackpole Parish Church Fenton Tours 1811

I descended to a vale, where a private gate
was unlocked, leading through a woody avenue to the church of Cheriton, or as is sometimes called Stackpole Elidur, from its founder, which stands at the head of this sequestered dell. The church is a plain building but with a tower consisting of a nave and chancel, having two small aisles on the south side, one occupied by the family pew, and the other entered from the chancel, the family burying place; and on the north side a little aisle taking up the area of the steeple built over it. On the north side of the chancel under a wrought canopy of stone, lies a cross legged knight, his right hand on his sword and his left bearing his shield, evidently once painted over with his arms; and there can be no doubt of it representing Elidur de Stackpole. The sides of the tomb are in compartments, each compartment containing a figure, but so disfigured by white wash, with which the champion of the cross, as well as every other part of the monument, has been plastered and replastered, that nothing of their character or design can be made out. On the south side of the chancel, but not under a canopy, is the effigy of a lady, well executed in a hard yellowish stone, in a very singular costume, particularly the head dress. In the family mausoleum are two monuments of a more recent date; and in the belfry aisle two effigies, with the clerical habit and tonsure, one uninscribed, and the other with an inscription too illegible to identify the dead.

Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments of Wales Stackpole Elidor St James & St Elidyr Parish of Stackpole

[Note-- The churches called after Elidyr are known in at least three cases to be "Teilo" churches from the Book of Llan Dav. Elidyr is perhaps another form of Teilo otherwise known as Eliud. Brown Willis only mentions St James. Lewis states that authorities differ saying that some saying St Elidyr, and others St James: Rees has "Elidyr and St James" (Church Plate of Pembrokeshire, J. T. Evans 1905)

On plan this building is cruciform having nave 57ft by 19ft, chancel 21 ½ ft by 14 ½ ft, a south (the Lort) chapel 16 ½ ft. by 15ft, south transept 14ft by 11 ½ ft, north transept 17 ½ ft by 15 ½ ft, and tower 17ft by 17ft at the west end of the north transept. The tower, of four storeys, all vaulted has the usual corbel table and parapet. It tapers slightly from the ground level to the corbels. At the north-east angle is a turret containing ninety four steps. Both transepts and the Lort chapel are vaulted; the transepts have squints to the chancel. In the south transept is a piscina with a trefoiled head. The nave was rebuilt in 1851 upon its old foundations; it has no windows on the northern side; at the east end of the south wall is a corbel and a high window connecting with the rood loft. All the windows and arches to the chancel have been modernised. The font also is modern, nothing is known of its predecessor. The entrance is by a door in the south wall; doorway and porch are renewals.

Inscribed Stone RCAM

In the Lort chapel is a plain stone slab bearing a much worn inscription, which reads :

CAMVLORIGI FILI FRANNUCI.

It is one of the early inscribed stones in which the county is rich and was used as the original stone altar stone. The stone is of the old red sandstone which although very hard is inclined to split off. From the formation of the letters it may be assumed that this inscription is no later than the 7th century. No cross exists on the stone nor are there any Ogham marks on the edges. It is suggested that when the church was rebuilt in the 14th century the stone was found either in the foundations or covering the grave of the person commemorated, probably a layman and used for the altar.

Monuments

Two much weathered effigies of females lie side by side on the floor of the Lort chapel; they would seem to belong to the first half of the 14th century, and are said to be the earliest female sepulchral figures in the county. RCAM

Effigy of a Knight

On the north side of the chancel is the richly decorated 14th century canopied tomb of Richard de Stackpole, last of that family. RCAM

Effigy of a Lady

This figure may represent Margaret, daughter of Sir Richard Turberville of Coity, and wife of Richard de Stackpole to whom she was married about the year 1349. RCAM

Churchyard Cross . On a masonry base of three steps is a portion of a slender shaft, all that survives of a cross which was ruined before 1851 – RCAM visited 13th June 1922

St James' And St Elidyr's Church, Stackpole Elidor; St Elidor's Church; St Michael's Church

Medieval church, possibly C12, restored in 1851. Consists of nave, chancel, N and S transepts, vestry, chapel, S porch, and tower. New exterior is of sneaked sandstone, although traces of the earlier Old Red Sandstone still remain. Windows restored in Decorated style. Medieval pointed vaults to N and S transepts. Nave and chancel both have C19 timber roofs. Lord Cawdor's coat of arms displayed on floor of chancel. The church houses a number of important monuments, including a C5/C6 inscribed pillar in the chapel. RCAHMW

The Church is noted for its effigies of the Stackpole and Lort families including a well preserved 14c one of Robert de Stackpole and one of his wife. It is sited at Stackpole Elidor and has an Art nouveau lychgate with lead panels and cresting 1898 and a medieval preaching cross. The 13c cruciform design church with its tall tower was completely rebuilt 1851. Chapel with several effigies of Lort family 14c Knight and Lady Sir Elidyr de Stackpole 5c Chantry altar slab with inscription CAM....ORIS FILI FANNVE

Stackpole Elidor (CHERITON) St James & St Elidyr

There are transepts of c1300 with pointed tunnel-vaults and squints and the slightly later tower lies in an unusual position beyond the north transept. The south porch has a tunnel vault and the south chapel a rib-vault. In the chapel is a monument to Roger Lort, an effigy of Margaret, wife of Richard Stackpole and two other 14th century female effigies, Richards own cross-legged effigy with a dog at his feet lies under a fine canopied tomb recess in the chancel north wall.

This benefice comprised a rectory as well as a vicarage. George Owen states that the rectory was a sinecure, and that both it and the vicarage were in 1594 appendant to the manor of Stackpole [Elidor]. - Owens Pem.

The church of Stackpole Elidor was founded by Elidox de Stackpole, who owned the manor of Stackpole, and lived in the early part of the 12th century. The manor remained in the possession of the Stackpole family until the death of Richard de Stackpole, the last of the male line of the Stackpoles of Stackpole, when the manor descended by the marriage of his heiress to Sir Richard Vernon of Harlaston, Stafford. It remained in the possession of the Vernon family till the death of George Vernon in 1567, when his coheiress Margaret, brought Stackpole as her dowry to Sir Thomas Stanley. - Old Pembroke Families p. 25-29.

The manor and advowson of Stackpole Elidor and also the manor and advowson of Stackpole Boshier [Bosherston], apparently continued in the possession of the Stanley family, as on 4 Dec., 1611, they were all purchased by Roger Lort and his son Harry, on 4 Dec., 1611, from Sir Edward Stanley, of Tonge Castle, Salop, Knt., and Sir Michael Hickes of Ruckholde, Essex, Knt. - Inq. P.M. of Roger Lort, 12 Jac. I. The Lort family held the manor till the death of Sir Gilbert Lort without issue in 1698, when it descended to his sister Elizabeth, who married Sir Alexander Campbell of Calder, the ancestor of the present Earl Cawdor.

The vicarage appears to have been merged in the rectory after the death of James Summers, the vicar instituted in 1814. The rectories of Stackpole Elidor and St. Petrox were united on 22 May, 1839, under an Order in Council.

The nave of the Church was completely rebuilt in 1851 on the old foundations plus all the windows plus the arches to the chancel and the transepts, font replaced, and the entrance doorway on the south side plus the porch. During the rebuilding a silver penny of Richard II was discovered. (1377-1399).

It would appear that the cottages that represented the medieval village of Stacpole were clustered around a cross. The cottagers were removed and the cottages allowed to fall into ruins, as they were mainly of culm their site has disappeared but the masonry base of the old cross 11 feet square survived

The Church Plate of Pembrokeshire Evans J.T. 1905 Stackpole Elidor, alias Cheriton (S. Teilo ? S. James later),

A very beautiful Elizabethan Chalice with its Paten cover; no hall marks. Both pieces are in excellent preservation. The bowl of the cup is gilded inside, slopes outwards towards the rim and carries round the upper half a single band of decorated strap-work which intersects four times. Within the band is the usual woodbine foliage, a spray of which is carried above and below each intersection. In addition to the usual two bands of vertical reed ornamentation on the stem there is immediately beneath the bowl a rich band of egg and tongue moulding which is repeated round the base rim. The stem is evenly divided by a plain knop with a small fillet above and below. Height, 7in. ; diam. of bowl, 3 in. ; depth, 4 in. ; diam. of foot, 3 in. ; weight, 10 oz. 5 dwts.

Underneath the foot is scratched " xiiii oz ". This included the Paten cover which is 4 in. in diameter ; 1 in. in height, and now weighs 3 oz. 5 dwts. On the foot or handle round which is engraved a band of zig-zag ornament is inscribed " STAKBOLE " with the date " 1575 " above, and ornamental scrolls and foliage beneath. Near the rim is a band of vertical reed moulding.

— A tankard-shaped Flagon with lid rising up in two stages to a small knob. It carries a whistle handle and thumb-piece but no spout. The diam. of the spreading base is 5 in. and of mouth 4 in. Between two bands of moulding on the dnmi is inscribed 'Ecclesiae Parochialis de Stackpool Eiidor in Agro Pembroch 1715, J. Campbell'. Height, 10in. ; weight, 38 oz. 14 dwts. It bears the hall mark of the Britannia standard for 1715, the maker's mark being Fr with a pellet beneath, in a plain shield for James Fraillon.

— A Credence Paten, 7 in. in diameter; 1in. in height, and weighing 11 oz. 5dwts. The date letter indicates the year 1685, the other marks being obliterated. Beneath is inscribed " Patena Sacra Ecclesiae Parochialis de Stackpool Eiidor in Agro Pembroch 1715. J. Campbell". This same donor also presented plate to St. Petrox and Bosherton. He was the son of Dame Elizabeth Campbell, sister of Sir Gilbert Lort of Stackpole, the third and last baronet of that name. His father Sir Alexander Campbell of Calder or Cawdor in Nairnshire was of the house of Argyll and progenitor of the Campbells of Stackpole afterwards Earls Cawdor and Viscounts Emlyn.

He represented the County of Pembroke in Pailiament from 1737 to 1747 and was Lord of the Admiralty and afterwards of the Treasury. He is described by the learned author of Old Pembroke Familes as " perhaps the ablest representative of an able race ". " I can not," writes Stephen Lewis, a Canon of St. David's, to Browne Willis about 1719, " forbear mentioning to you ye generous beneficency of yt worthy and Orthodox Gentleman to ye three last mentioned parishes [Bosherton, Stackpool Eiidor, St. Petrox] on his first coming to ye Possession of his Estate, being about ye age of twenty or thereabouts — he wainscotted ye three Chancells and other-wise adorned them in a very handsome decent manner — made also new Rails about ye Altar — gave a new set of Communion plate to each parish and distributed a great number of Bibles and common prayer books to ye poorer sort.

I pray God ye example of so early a respect and veneration towards ye house of God may have its suitable influence upon other Gentlemen of fortune and quality in their country. I had almost forgot mentioning his bestowing new cushions and pulpit cloths on each parish — and settling a house and ten pound per annum on a schoolmaster to teach ye poor children of ye several parish. Doubtless he'll have his reward.

N.B. [in margin] Ye Schoolmaster allowed meat and drink at ye house as often as he comes " —

1847 State of Education In Wales Parish of Stackpole Elidor com St Petrox The Earl of Cawders School

I visited this school on the 17th December. There was a deep snow at this time and the children were not present. The schoolroom which is built in the park at Stackpole is well furnished apparatus. It contains a gallery. The master appeared an active and intelligent man. He spoke highly of the natural capacity of natural of the children and considered it superior to what he had observed in the central school at Westminster. The best period of attendance in the year is from the harvest to December, and from February to May; during the above months most of the scholars would be present on an average four days in the week. Their age usually ranges from 5to 13 years. Expulsion is often treated by the parents with indifference: yet on the whole they are anxious to educate their children. They care most for their children learning arithmetic, and make this almost exclusively the standard by which to measure their children's progress. The greater part do not study at home but about 12 out of 100 on the books prepare a lesson in English grammer at home, to be repeated in school.

Sites of Interest

Coedmellyn; Coedmelyn, Stackpole

Coedmellyn is situated 1.5km north-west of Stackpole, just east of the B4319 towards Pembroke. It is a cement rendered building with a thin-slate pitched roof. It is a 2 storeyed house with a lateral pair of diagonally set chimneys and inside cross-passage, which may date from the 17th century or possibly the 16th century. It is rubble built with a plain central staircase. Alterations were made to the building in 1975. RCAHMW, 21st March 2005

Furzton Cottages, 1-2; Furston Cottages, Stackpole

1-2 Furzton Cottages, lying to the east of the B4319 between St Petrox and Pembroke, 1.5km north of the former, were a pair of north-south aligned cottages. They were 1 storey, 18th century, built of mortared rubble. They had massive end chimneys and recessed casements. Alterations, including substantial enlargement, was made to the buildings in 1974. RCAHMW, 21st March 2005

Bangeston, Stackpole

Bangeston is 1km south east of the B4319 at the end of a long lane which starts 400m north-west of St Petrox church. It is a two-unit house, with a rear kitchen wing at the east end, of 1.5 storeys, and possibly of the 17th century. It is built of rendered local rubble masonry, with slate roofs. The windows are all modern and there is a tall lateral chimney at the rear of the house, unrendered above eaves level. The front range of this house has a roof of seven bays which is perhaps of two periods. The kitchen wing has an attic floor and roof at a lower level than those of the front range. There is an early entrance with an equilateral-pointed arch at the centre of the south gable of the main range. To this core an extra unit has been added to the south-end in tandem, and a large west extension with twin gables and porch. The main feature of the house is an extremely large, square chimney to the kitchen, possibly the largest surviving example of its type, of which there were once a number of examples in Pembrokeshire. At its north side is a very large oven extension, with slate roof, presently occupied by a brick oven of ordinary size. Opposite this is a hearth recess for bacon-smoking, also slate-roofed. The chimney is corbelled in small courses and heavily sooted. The fireplace is in total 2.4m deep. RCAHMW, 21st March 2005

Lorts Cave Tumulus RCAM

This mound has practically vanished and is not noted on the 6in Ord Sheet. It stood immediately above Lort's Cave. It is entered in the county Survey as a small tumulus, within which was discovered an "urn between two stones. Burned animal bones" – Visited 13th June 1922.

The dancing Stones of Stackpole: ,

3 stones 1 near Samson Farm, 1 at Stackpole Warren and 1 in a field near Home Farm. Said to meet on one day a year and go down to the Rhyd Sair [Saxon ford] to dance. Some say the devil accompanies them on his flute.

1811 Fenton Tours

There are three upright stones at a distance of about a mile from each other, pointed out here, respecting which the the country abounds with most ridiculous stories. One, the most eastwards Stands in Stackpole Warren; the other , surmounting, a carnedd or stone tumulus, in a field on Stackpole Demesne, known by the name of Horestone field, perhaps a corruption of Haroldstone; and the third in the same line but still more westerly. A vulgar tradition is, that these three stones on a certain day meet and come down to dance the hay at a place near called Saiss, that is the Saxon Ford; and then their dance over, resume their stations.

The one in the sandy barrows, pitched on end like the others, I could distinguish at a distance but did not examine nearer but the other two underwent my inspection. The second in order is a great flat mass of limestone, placed erect, about six ft in height above the ground and about five in breadth, and a foot or fourteen inches thick; it is bedded in an elevated circular mound of stones almost sodded over, and merits investigation; as from its name and position so near this principal estuary, there is reason to suppose it may have reference to the ravaging invader, whose stone trophies Giraldus mentions, as existing on many parts of the coast in his time. There must be a considerable portion of the stone out of sight, and on that possibly the victor's vaunted inscription might be found. The third, the tallest of the three, is a stone of singular coloured serpentine, if one may judge from its grain in a small piece chipped off, the principal part being so incrustated with a minute lichen that it is difficult perfectly to ascertain its quality.

The Devils Quite RCAM

This is an erect stone standing within the prehistoric village of Stackpole Warren. Its height above the shifting sands is about 6ft; it tapers to a blunt point, and at present it leans slightly to the west. According to the Pem Arch Survey (p 107) this maenhir is "one of the three stones which are known as 'Devil's Quoits'; the others are in the next parish of St Petrox – visited 13th June 1922

Devil's Quoit, Stackpole Elidor

A standing stone, 1.7m high by 1.5m by 0.4m, reset in 1978 in the course of excavations about its site: the stone was shown to have been erected on the site of a circular structure that burnt down about 1395 BC and was part of a complex setting of small stones; a cremation was inserted into this complex about 940 BC: a later Iron Age and Romano-British settlement, or ritual, non-settlement site was also encountered & recorded. Greenala Camp

The following is the account of this camp by Lieut Colonel W Ll Morgan R.E., a retired Royal Commissioner, who carefully examined it some years ago.

'Situated on the end of a steep ridge which terminates in a promontary, across the neck of which the entrenchments are placed. The other sides are well protected by cliffs. The eastern flank is thrown upon a perpendicular fissure in the cliffs about 80ft in depth. The western flank on a steep cliff bearing evident traces of having altered considerably since the camp was made, as the remains of the rampart are still (1871) seen upon a landslip. The main rampart joining these flanks follows the curve of the hill, and consequently slightly bowed outwards; but at the entrance, which is near the middle, a second interior rampart is thrown back almost at right angles to the first, covering the entrance most effectively. The western flank, being the more easily attacked, has an additional very strong line. It would almost seem that, at first, it was intended that this should follow the curve of the remainder of the rampart, but afterwards altered, and a salient thrown forward and increased considerably in height to defilade the interior from the adjoining ridge, following the works of the south of England. The space between this salient and the main rampart is occupied by a small work like a Tenaille, whose object is not very apparent; probably, it was only an obstacle trench. The western rampart has a steep scarp, at least 12 to 15ft high, and has been leveled at the top. The eastern defences consist of three scarps in addition to the main line, and all end on a precipitous cliff. Between the first and second is a low breastwork 3ft high and 60 ft long evidently the remains of an obstacle bank. About 50yds from the entrance is a good spring of water in the hollow. There are many hut circles in the interior of the work'.

According to the Pem. Arch Survey "on the side of the cliff were the remains of a 'kitchen midden', and portions of a skeleton with a broken skull were recovered"--Visited 13th June 1922.

Fishpond Barrow, Stackpole Warren

round barrow, 19m in diameter and 0.9m high, probably one of the two said to have been opened in the 19th century, producing Bronze Age material: there is a second barrow some 20m to the south-east

Remains of Village Cross

The few cottages which comprised the medieval village of Stackpole were clustered round a cross, of which the masonry base 11ft square, and three of its steps still survive; lying loose beside it are most of the stones of the pillar. The cottagers were removed elsewhere, and the cottages allowed to fall into decay RCAM visited 13 June 1922.

Bronze Brooch (Roman)

Early in the 19th a bronze harp shaped brooch having the bow ornamented with small oblong panels which were filled with different coloured and ornamented enamels, was found on the site of the early settlement on Stackpole Warren. The brooch is now in the British Museum where it is ascribed to about 140ad. RCAM

Lady C[aroline] Cawdor to C[harles] F. Grenville

I am happy to tell you that Lord Cawdor is considerably better tonight than he was when I wrote you yesterday. The feverish symptoms are much abated and he is in much less pain from his bruises. The history of the business is this.

He heard last Sunday evening that a smuggling vessel was coming into Freshwater East to land her cargo of spirits. He and Mat, Dio and Hand set out after dinner and rode down to the sand.

The people, as soon as they saw them coming ran off leaving all their casks on the shore. Mat 858Campell sent Kenneth to fetch some carts, thinking there was an end of the business, but in the meantime before he could return with them, the people on board the vessel, having discovered how few their numbers were and that they were perfectly unarmed, returned on shore again in two boats in considerable numbers, seized all the casks, and took them back to the vessel. Lord C. and Matt. did not of course attempt to oppose them when the numbers were so unequal, and were returning home when they were attacked by some of these horrible desperate villains. Two of them fell upon Lord C., one armed with a great bludgeon, the other with a large poker with which he hit Lord C. a violent blow on his arm. Lord C. jumped off his horse and tried to catch hold of him, when another came behind and knocked him down with a blow on his head. In this situation, with both these men thumping him, it is most fortunate he was so little stunned as to be able to get up and twist the poker out of the mans hand, with which he hit one of them, and then they both ran away.

In the meantime Mat. was attacked by two others, and you know how little able he is to make much resistance. Hand and Dio, however, came to his assistance. They beat off one of the men and the other they secured and carried him to Roger's house in Trewent. A short time after the house was surrounded by about thirty of the gang, people of the country armed with bludgeons, who immediately rescued their comrade.

Warrants are out for apprehending those men that are known but none are as yet taken. It was, to be sure, a most foolish business to think of going against smugglers without arms, and I trust they will act with more caution in future. I think it is most wonderful their escaping with their lives or at least without broken bones. Lord C. has been very ill in consequence; he kept his bed all day yesterday, and was twice blooded but, thank God, he is so much better tonight; I feel quite easy about him.

Write and let me know how you do.

St Petrox --St Pedrog

(One of the earliest places that as a new Reader I took the service. I had never been there before although I had passed the Church many times and so I got there about an hour before the time of the Service so that I could have a look round and spent a very pleasant time being show around by the Churchwarden who had also arrived early. That morning I had been very nervous but my fears and worries had gone completely by the time I had robed and stood up to start the Service – I felt a feeling of warmth and peace there. I must thank the Rev. Richards for some of the information regarding this Church and the other Churches in his parish as well as giving permission for me to use his work on the parish Registers also the parishioners of the various Churches for their help.)

It is a small windswept Church on a bend in the road. The first view of the Church from the road shows a Church where the body of the church is red sandstone but with a grey limestone tower. I have wondered whether the old building was covered with Red Sandstone as was the tower of Warren Church. The view from the top of the tower is spectacular.

When I first inquired about the Church I was told that it was haunted!

I never felt that myself but later when researching I did find that St Petrox is connected with a legend of a lady of the Mansell family who is said to wander headless according to Four Welsh Counties - Kilner 1891.

Fenton 1810, records that this lady is often seen whirling round this vicinity in her carriage, with a headless coachman, headless horses and herself headless. Also she is said to have ridden in a fiery chariot from Tenby and alighted on the farmhouse of Samson and crushed it. (Was her second marriage happy???)

Who was St Petrox?

The Church, is dedicated to St. Petrox or Petrocus. He lived in the 6th Century, and emigrated perhaps from somewhere in South Wales to Ireland . There he studied for some time in monasteries before visiting Rome and eventually settling in Cornwall, where he set up a monastic and missionary centre at Padstow. Later he is said to have lived as a hermit on Bodmin moor. According to William of Worcester St. Petrox died on 4th June 564. The old name of Bodmin was in fact Petrockstow, and Padstow is probably a corruption of the same name. His relics were presented, and greatly revered, in a casket in Bodmin Church until in 1177 when they were stolen and carried off to the abbey of St. Mevennus in Brittany. It required a personal intervention on the part of Henry II to secure their return.

There are two other Churches dedicated to St. Petrox in Wales - Llandedrog (North Wales) and Verwig (Cardiganshire), as well as 17 in Devon and 6 in Cornwall, including Bodmin and Padstow. Brittany has 8 churches dedicated to him.

A Topographical Dictionary of Wales (S. Lewis, 1833).

"PETROX (ST.), a parish in the hundred of CASTLEMARTIN, county of PEMBROKE, SOUTH WALES, 3 miles (S.W.) from Pembroke, containing 77 inhabitants. This parish, which is also called Llan Pedrog, derives its name from the dedication of its church to St. Pedrog, a British saint, who flourished about the commencement of the seventh century. It comprises but a very moderate tract of arable and pasture land, and is chiefly distinguished for the salubrity of the air, and the longevity of its inhabitants: the surface is pleasingly varied, and the soil fertile. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St. David's, rated in the king's books at £7. 3. 9., and in the patronage of Earl Cawdor. The church, dedicated to St. Pedrog, is a neat edifice, with a handsome square tower, and is situated on an eminence commanding a pleasing view over the adjacent country. Attached to the living is a comfortable glebe-house, pleasantly situated and in good repair, with a moderate portion of land. The poor children of this parish have the privilege of gratuitous instruction in the parochial school at Cheriton. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor amounts to £58. 15."

The Church

The oldest parts of the present structure are the tower and part of the North wall, which probably date from the 13th. century and with corbelled out parapets. The limestone tower is of the typically tall narrow Pembrokeshire style with a pronounced batter – i.e. narrower at the top than at the bottom, like so many of the other churches you can see on the skyline - when you look at a map you can see that there is a line of Churches along the spine of the Castlemartin Peninsular each with a tall tower and all these towers are reputed to date from the 13/14c, and with corbelled out parapets. Were these towers built as lookouts for Pembroke Castle?

Richard Fenton, 1811 Historical Tour through Pembrokeshire, states :-

I ascend to St Petrox a rectory in the gift of Lord Cawder on which is a very comfortable glebe house, where the Rev Charles Pritchett, one of his Lordship's chaplains resides. The church is small but very light, airy and neat. The only conspicuous monument, is a handsome mural marble tablet to the memory of a Lady Jane Mansell, first married to Sir Roger Lort, and then to Sir Edward Mansell of Muddlescombe, Bart. In the county of Carmarthen. (She is the lady of the Ghost story- After recounting the story Fenton goes on to say) What could have given rise to such strange tales of this salamander and decapitated lady, I could never learn. A tombstone commemorates one Clerk, a former rector of this parish and an elegant little brass tablet in the chancel, another of the name of Lloyd.

The Church was extensively restored, almost to the extent of rebuilt in 1854, the architect being R. Kyrke Penson, and the whole cost being borne by John Frederick, first Earl Cawdor. A vestry was added at the same time on the North side.

A note in the flyleaf of the Baptisms Register reads,

“The Church of St. Petrox was reopened March 11 1855 having undergone a thorough restoration, with new sittings; the Chancel rebuilt and a new Vestry Room added, at the sole expense of the Right Hon. John Frederick, first Earl of Cawdor, Stackpole Court.”

It is signed by the then Rector, F. G. Leach.

Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments The Parish Church deicated to St Pedrog

The plan of this church shows a chancel 18ft by 11 ft, nave 33 ft by 16ft north transept 10 ½ ft by 10 ft, west tower and south porch. The chancel is modern. The nave and north transept are both vaulted. On the north side of the nave is a blocked doorway; the south door has a pointed arch. The windows and font are modern. The tower is of three storeys, with corbel table and battlements. The belfrey chamber has a shalloe dome rising to the level of the battlements. Above the east end of the nave is a double bell cote, now empty. On the right of the chancel, and facing the nave is one of the few brasses in the county, commemorating William Lloyd , rector of the parish who died in 1674 – a rubbning is in the library of the Carmarthenshire Antiq. Society.

The Churchyard cross is modern, erected on an old base of four steps – Visited 26th May 1922

The Lloyd Brass.

The William Lloyd brass on the South East wall in the Nave reads, (Translation)

Here in hope of the Resurrection are deposited the remains of William Lloyd MA, Rector of the Parochial Churches of St. Petrox and for some time most worthy Rector of Stackpole Elidor and Bosherston as well as excellent Prebendary Canon of the Cathedral Church of Menevia (St. Davids), and Surrogate Judge of its Consistory Court, (who married Dorothy, daughter of Ambrose Roop, knight of Little Dartmouth in the County of Devon, by whom he begot three sons and the same number of daughters, out of whom four, that is two sons and two daughters, are laid here near their father) who departed from life 12th. March 1674 at the age of 43.

“If you consider his lineage, noble,

His character, liberal,

His integrity, unstained,

His learning distinguished,

His religious practices, devout,

(Of a fine religious understanding, He embraced the externals and inner truths alike, just as he taught.)

His life, blameless,

In all, an example. Go on your way, by-passer, Considering, admiring and emulating the virtues for which the heavens envied lie earth.”

Mansell Memorial is on the North wall of the Nave:-

There is a tablet with the following inscription:

In Memory of The Lady Jane Mansell of the ancient family of the Wyndhams.

She was first Married to Sir Roger Lort of Stackpole and afterwards to Sir Edward Mansell of Mudlescomb.

She lies hereby Interred nigh the relicts of her first Husband who made the following Epitaph.

(NB. She is the Lady of the Ghost legend - Sir Roger Lort born at Stackpole Court 1608 buried at St Petrox 1664 was the author of a book of Latin epigrams.)

(Translation).

Here where in life I used to fulfil my devotions.

Here in this place I wished to lay my bones in death.

Here my bones await the Salvation procured by the death of Christ until the mind which must return to God shall enjoy (that Salvation).

My wife wished to have a sepulchre beside my own.

As in life, so may she be also in death my companion, she who alive was never a spouse ill-disposed to her husband, nor wished to be faithless after death.

Pritchatt Monument.

On the North wall under the tower there is a marble monument of generous proportions and careful phrasing to the memory of the Revd. Charles Piccott Pritchett M.A. a former Rector of this Parish.

The Devils Quoit or Sampson's Farm Stone

On the field known as East Hole Stone appurtenant to Sampson Farm is an erect stone. It rises 6 ½ ft clear of the ground and is rudely pointed.

This is one of the three stones locally known as the Devil's Quoits.

Single Standing Stones

On the south east face of the Sampson's Farm stone, St Petrox, are two circular hollows 12 inches apart the upper one 3 inches in diameter by three quarters of an inch deep, the lower on two and a half inches by half inch. the stone is an igneous rock, and the hollows, which stand out in contrast to the regular surface surrounding them, appear to have been artificially produced.

The Standing Stones of Pembrokeshire (J M Lewis)

Fenton (Tours p418) records the tradition that the stones meet annually "to dance the hay at a place called Sais's [the Saxon] Ford; and then the dance over resume their stations – visited 26th May 1922.

The second of the Devil Quoits is now in the yard of Stackpole Farm. It has a height of some 7ft above the soil – visited 26th May 1922

The third stone stands in the parish of Stackpole Elidyr.

Roche Point or Shelter.

The peninsular immediately south of Stackpole Farm is bounded on either side by the narrow estuaries known as the Fishponds. On it says Fenton, in the process of digging out a fox, were found "human bones and a brazen spear head; and in the morass separating it from the encampment an old sword with a deer horn handle (Tour $17) This latter object is now in the Tenby Museum Visited 13th June 1922.

St Twynnels St Gwynnog

St Twynnel is another local saint. The sturdy church has been victorianised. Previously it had panels with ten commandments on behind the Altar.

Nearby is a large imposing Iron age camp.

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales - Twinnel's St.-- Lewis

TWINNEL'S (ST.), a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Pembroke; containing 234 inhabitants. This parish is pleasantly situated in the southern part of the county, and comprises a considerable portion of inclosed and cultivated land, and a small tract of open downs affording good pasturage for sheep and young cattle. Limestone is found in it, and quarries have been opened, in the working of which some of the inhabitants are employed. The village is neatly built, on an eminence, and is of prepossessing appearance. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £3. 17. 11.; present net income, £150; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of St. David's. The tithes have been commuted for £184, of which £80 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford; a like sum to the vicar, who has also a glebe of 1½ acre, which, with a house, is valued at £10 per annum; and £24 to certain impropriators. The church, dedicated to St. Deiniol, is an ancient building, with a very lofty tower, and, from its elevated situation, is an interesting and conspicuous object from all parts of the surrounding country. There is a place of worship for Calvinistic Methodists, and one or two Sunday schools are held

The Church of St Twynells

A long 13th century nave has a pointed tunnel-vault carried on the thick side walls. Remnants of the late 13th and 14th centuries are the small tower perched on the west wall, the south porch, the south transept with a squint and the arch of a former north transept.

There is a plain tablet to Katherine Owen of Orielson, died 1698.

Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments St Twynells Church

The Parish Church dedicated to St Gwynnog

In the Taxatio of 1291, this church is described as Ecclesia Sancti Wynnoce

The building on plan consists of chancel 23ft by 14 ½ ft, nave 57ft by 16 ½ ft., south transept 13ft by 11ft, west tower 21ft square externally, and south porch. The chancel arch is modern, an enlargement of the earlier opening. A squint passage leads from the chancel to the south transept; the latter opens to the nave by a pointed arch. The nave has a plain vault. The tower is of three storeys, with corbel table and battlements. The bell chamber is crowned by a dome rising only to the level of the battlements, like that at St Petrocs. In the south west angle is a vice of 75 steps which rises clear of the battlements. The lighting is by plain slits, those of the belfrey having pointed arches. There is no west door. The porch is plain vaulted, has masonry seats and a stoup recess to the left on entering; the doorway has a pointed arch. The font basin is of cushion type 28 ins by 27 ins externally, 21 ins by 19 ins internally, with a height of 3ft from the level; on the edge are traces of a hinged and hasped cover. It stands upon a circular shaft and square base – visited 24th May 1922

Churchyard Cross

A modern cross, erected upon an earlier base of three steps.

Pembrokeshire Parsons

In 1259 a chapel-of-ease at Kylkermoran (Crickmarron Farm) is recorded. Nothing remains of it. The church of St. Winnoc [St. Twinnel] was formerly part of the possessions of the priory of St. Nicholas, Pembroke and was by the prior and monks of that house, with the consent of the abbot of Seyes the patron of the church, granted to Richard Carew, bishop of St. Davids, who in 1260 appropriated it to the canons resident of St. David's Cathedral subject to a pension of one mark, which the prior was wont to receive from the church, and reserving to the Bishop the right of presenting the vicar thereto, and also subject to the canons resident providing a competent endowment for that minister - this grant was to take effect on the death of William de Gogh, who was then the rector of St Twinnels. - Stat. Menevia.

William Gogh was rector in 1259, and this is the only record of an individual rector of this church.

Described as Ecclesia Sancti Wynnoce, this church was in 1291 assessed at £12 for tenths to the King, the sum payable being £1 4s. - Taxatio.

The earliest record of a lease of the tithes of this church was on 4 April, 1554, when a lease for 40 years at a rent of £8 was granted to Henry Wyriott, gent., and George Wyriott, gent., both of Orielson, Pems. In July, 1565, George Wyriott and his son and heir, John Wyriott, obtained another lease for 40 years to commence from the termination of the proceeding lease at the same rent. In 1641 Mrs. Dorothy Owen, the mother of Sir Hugh Owen, held the tithes on land at the rent of £8 16s., and in 1661 a lease of them was granted for 21 years to Sir Hugh Owen, Bart., of Orielson. In 1662 Arthur Owen of Orielson, [the brother of Sir Hugh Owen] obtained a lease for 21 years at the same rent but the tenant was to make the vicars stipend equal to the tenants share. -

Chapter Records.

From this date down till the year 1817 the tithes continued to be held by the Owen family under leases regularly renewed, the rent remaining at £10 during the whole period. In 1817 Sir John Owen, Bart., paid a fine of £80 for a new term of 21 years - Collectanea Menevensia.

On 24 March, 1851, the chapter afixed its seal to a certificate of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for a proposed exchange of the advowson of Henfynyw, for the advowson of the vicarage of Warren, Pems., with the view of uniting Warren with St. Twinnels - Chapter Acts

On 26 Dec., 1851, the vicarages of St. Twinnels and Warren were united under an Order in Council.

On 15 Mar., 1860, the vicar of St. Twinnels was authorized to borrow from Queen Annes Bounty to build a vicarage house. - Chapter Acts.

All presentations to the united vicarages of Warren with St. Twinnels are by the dean and chapter of St David's Cathedral.

Extract from a Letter from Cha[rl]es Pigott Pritchett, rural dean of Pembroke, to William Stuart Bishop of St Davids:

..... The state of the churches in my district is now become so decent and in tolerable order that it is unnecessary for me to trouble your lordship with particulars. I wish I had as good an account to give of many of the vicarage houses. That of Nangle stands in most deplorable condition, next to it Mannerbier, St Twinnels and the vicarage at Stackpole want thorough repairs.

Church in Wales MS AD/AET 1209. Pembrokeshire life 1572 - 1843.

Altar rails originated in the time of William Laud, archbishop of Canterbury. He was a stickler for order and dignity in public worship, and his influence on the Church of England was profound. It seems to have been customary in those days for dogs to accompany their owners to Church. To ensure that dogs should not foul the altar, Laud decreed that rails should be erected to protect the sanctuary of the church from their wanderings. Few modern altar rails would serve the purpose. Those at St Twynells would certainly keep straying canines away. They still would not meet the Archbishops specifications, however. He decreed that the railings should be erected along three sides of the altar area.

1847 State of Education in Wales Parish of St Twinnells

A church Sunday School is held in the vicarage of this parish (which is served by the same clergyman as Monkton or St Nicholas), and in the room of the Agricultural School at Warren alternately. There is no day school in the Parish. It lies mid way between Stackpole Elidor and Warren. The children are within reach of these schools.

Thorn Chapel Sunday School.- I was informed at Pembroke that this school was held from 10 to 12 am, but after having Gilead Chapel, on arriving at Thorn I found the school just closed, it being held from 9am to 11, that those who wish may have the opportunity of going to church at 11. Out of the 52 scholars under 15 years of age belonging to the school, 21 are the children of 6 farmers residing in this neighbourhood, 4 are and the rest labourers children. The school is organised in 7 classes viz 5 elementary and 2 who read the scriptures. December 20th 1846 Wm. Morris Assistant

Tenby

NOTE from Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments 1923

As a parish under its single distinctive name Tenby has no existence. The administrative parishes are termed St Mary in Liberty and St Mary out Liberty, with the word Tenby occasionally added for the advantage of non-Pembrochians; but it is hardly necessary to state that these are quite recent parochial divisions, though they may correspond to some of the earlier townships. Tenby seems to have commenced its existence as a Viking settlement under the early Norse form of Tembych. This may of course , have been preceded by an earlier Celtic settlement, but there is no archaeological evidence in the nature of camps or megalithic remains for such a view.

Introduction

Part of this is from research for a series of lectures I gave in Tenby – The information that Tenby St Mary's had once belonged to a Brothel did not go down well with one member of the audience but the rest especially the old Chapel ladies were very amused.

The name Tenby is an anglicised version of Dynbych (little Fort) and to distinguish it from Denbigh it was called Dynbyych y Pysgod, (Little fort of the Fishes).

Today it is the leading Pembrokeshire holiday resort whose population more than trebles in the summer months.

The town is very old - from coins found very old indeed, older than the Romans. One very interesting coin is the one found at Tenby in 1881. This was a silver drachma of Menander King of the Punjab in 167-145 BC. According to the National Museum of Wales it could not possibly have been found but it was. Does this indicate that trade from the town, to the Mediterranean and beyond was going on before the birth of Christ? The history books tell us that the Romans never came to Pembrokeshire but after they were written a Roman Road was been found.

At and near Tenby a bronze fibula and scattered coins have been found, including Vespasian (found with animal bones and coarse sherds), Domitian, Marcus Aurelius, Faustin Junior, Probus, two of Maximianus, Carausius, Dioeletia, Constantinopolis, and Constans.

There was a Welsh settlement here before the Normans arrived, but the castle (of which little remains) was part of the fortified town. The town walls are massive, and the parts that remain are still in a good state of repair. In 1289 William de Valence Earl of Pembroke started work on the town walls and built the hospital of St John for the poor and sick. In the early Norman period it was captured by the Welsh several times. Under Lord Rhys and his brother Maredudd in 1153, Rhys's son Maelgwyn took it in 1187 and Llewelyn the last took it in 1260.

The first historical reference to the place occurs in connection with the destruction of the castle and the slaughter of the garrison in 1150 by the Welsh, because the stronghold sheltered some Flemings who had attacked a Welsh Prince, while he was hunting near Saundersfoot. Between 30 and 40 years later, the Welsh by force won the town and burned it to ashes.

Tenby stands on a main Rokke, but not very hy, and is so gulfed about by the Severn Se, that at the ful Se, almost the third part of the Toun is in closed with water –the toun is strongeli waullid and well gatted, everi gate having his Port cullis, ex solido ferro.

In his day there were probably nearly 20 towers and 5 gateways.

It supplied ships and men for the Hundred year war with France, and was very prominent in the wool trade, having two pandies where the woven material was processed. It also had two hospitals one for lepers, as well as St John's, for the sick and elderly. Opposite the town wall about 40 yards short of the Five Arches, in the passage by the Old Oak Insurance Office, on its right side, there is a circular chimney. Possibly the oldest extant specimen of its kind as it is supposed to date from the 12c or the early part of the 13c. It is now part of a modern building erected on the site of an ancient structure which tradition says was the Lazar House or Hospital for Lepers.

Tenby the early 1300's it was a thriving borough with 241 burgages, 3 windmills, and a watermill. Colonised by Flemish and English settlers, local tradition credits the Flemish with establishing two wool pandies in the town.

Tenby was the principle herring port of South Wales and had a large trade in oysters which they used to fish for by Castle Point and off Monkstone Point, until over fishing killed the industry. In 1528, 20,000 oysters were shipped from the port, sometimes pearls were found as well.

Tenby had other sources of income as well!

In 1383 a great ship of Genoa laden with Gold plate and other precious merchandise was relieved of her cargo by men of Tenby. The King appointed 2 commissioners to look into it.

In Tudor and Stuart times the town was an important fishing and trading centre and there were many rich merchants. The Whites were one very important family. The Tudor Merchants House and Plantagenet House both date from the fifteenth century.

During the Civil war Tenby was held for the King until a three day siege and bombardment transferred it to the forces of the Parliament. A little later, mutineers held it for a few days against the Parliament. After that the local people used the walls as a quarry for building material. It was possible to walk around the parapet of the walls until 1830. Then the public footpath around the town walls was closed, abandoning the walls to the discretion of those whose property abutted them.

After the Civil War Tenby went into decline. The decay of Tenby continued until, in the early years of the 1700's, almost the whole town was in ruins. Its condition then is shown in Norris's picture in the local museum. A little later, seaside places began to grow in favour, with those who were in a position to gratify a desire for change of air and scene, and as the merits of Tenby as a holiday resort began to be recognised, the town entered upon a new era of prosperity.

In the middle of the 1700's the town became a popular health resort and many new houses were built above the two town beaches to accommodate the Gentry. The main developer was Sir William Pakenham, who built the sea water baths down by the harbour.

Descriptions of Tenby 1621 May,

CAMB. JOUR., 1862

"The Castle standes upon the North East, but altogether ruined. The Hand of Cawdie (Caldy) lieth on the south west side, and so doth the little Hand called Margate (St. Margaret's). The bay is upon the north side of the town. St. Katherine's Hand standeth East. The whole town is built with lime and stone, verie stronglie, and is sett upon a sand rocke in most places above the sea, at least 20 yardes. One windmill standes on the south side. There is a fresh brooke or little river that runneth west by south. The length of the town is north west, and south east.

" One windmill standes by the north side. The Coale mines lie on the north side, and the Coale is fetched into France, and into all the parts of South Wales lying upon the sea coast. The poorer sorts for the most part live by fishing. Tenby lieth very commodious for traffique with Spayne, France, and Ireland. There is before you come to the town by 3 miles a little valley between two hills called the Greene Streete, where the water runs into the ground 2 miles, and after comes above the ground again. To conclude : if the Hand of Cawdie be fortified, and the ile of Margates, and the ile of St. Catherine, the hill on the north side, and the Greene field at the windmill on the south side, and the wall made on the west side, I think it be no way pregnable, so long as men and victuals endure.

1769 Description of England and Wales, Tenby. Newbery and Carnan

On entering the south east part of this county from Carmarthenshire a road extends south west by south to Tenby or Tenbigh, which is seated on the seashore and has a good harbour for ships, at the distance of two hundred and eight miles from London. It was formerly fortified with strong walls and a castle, but they are both now decayed. The ruins of the castle are still remaining, and within its view are the isles of Caldy and Lundy, which are seated to the south west. This structure was well fitted out for the defence of the town and the bay. It was built by the Normans, and was taken by Rhys ap Gruffydh, prince of South Wales, in the year 1152, after which it was frequently contended for by the princes of Wales.

The town is governed by a mayor and bailiff, and except Pembroke, is the most agreeable of all the towns on the sea coast of South Wales. Besides it having a good road for shipping, it has a commodious quay, a large fishery of herrings, and carries on a considerable trade to Ireland, particularly in coals; for the inhabitants ship of yearly from hence seven or eight thousand chaldrons of coal and culm, and the coast of the bay abounds in iron stone. This town was anciently noted for a fishery on a bank called Will's Mark, in the Bristol channel but on the inhabitants growing rich, they forgot the old marks of their fishing bank, and thus lost the fishery; and though some attempts have been made to find it again, it has been without effect.

It has a market of Wednesdays and Saturdays, and five fairs, held on Whit Tuesday, the 4th of May, the 20th of July, the 20th of October and the 4th of December, for horned cattle, horses and sheep.

Tenby had a hospital or lazaret house dedicated to St Mary Magdalen, and endowed at the suppression with £2 a year

1839 Tenby Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

TENBY (DYNBYCH-Y-PYSCOD), a parish, including the In-Liberty and the Out-Liberty, the former constituting the borough, and comprising the sea-port, market-town, and fashionable wateringplace, of Tenby; in the hundred of Narberth, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales; 10 miles (E.) from Pembroke, 20 (S. E.) from Haverfordwest, and 245 (W.) from London; containing 2803 inhabitants, of whom 2512 are within the limits of the borough. This place was at a very remote period occupied by the ancient Britons as a fishingtown, for which its situation on the coast rendered it extremely favourable; and from this circumstance it obtained its Welsh name, of the first part of which its modern appellation of Tenby is an obvious modification. According to George Owen, an eminent antiquary of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, whose manuscript history of Pembrokeshire is now in the library of the British Museum, the origin of the present town is attributable to the settlement of the Flemings in this part of the principality by Henry I., who placed them under the protection and control of Gerald de Windsor, governor of Pembroke Castle, whom he ordered to provide them with habitations, on condition of their garrisoning the castles the king then had in Wales, erected by the Normans for the security of the territories which they had usurped by conquest. In order to protect themselves from the repeated attacks of the native Welsh, and to maintain possession of the lands that had been assigned to them, they soon found it necessary to build the towns of Tenby, Pembroke, and Haverfordwest, which they fortified with strong and lofty walls; and from that time Tenby began to assume a high degree of importance as a strongly fortified military post, and progressively to enjoy, from its advantageous situation, considerable prosperity as a maritime and commercial town.

In the year 1150, Cadell, eldest son of Rhÿs ab Gruffydd, Prince of South Wales, being on a hunting excursion in the neighbourhood, was suddenly attacked by a party of the inhabitants of Tenby, who lay in ambush for the purpose, and who, rushing from their concealment, soon put to flight the unarmed retinue by which he was attended: but Cadell resolutely defended himself against the assailants, of whom he killed several; and, though severely wounded in the conflict, ultimately effected his escape. Two years afterwards Meredydd and Rhÿs, brothers of Cadell, in order to avenge this outrage, assembled all their forces, and advancing to Tenby, scaled the walls of the town, surprised the castle, and put most of the garrison to the sword. During the minority of Isabel, Countess of Pembroke, the several castles in her earldom were entirely neglected, and that of Tenby, being unprovided with a sufficient garrison, was attacked by Maelgwyn and Hywel, who coming against it with an overwhelming force, destroyed the fortress, burned the town, and slew many of the inhabitants. It was a considerable time before Tenby recovered from the devastation it suffered upon this occasion: the castle was repaired, and its fortifications strengthened, by William Marshall, who, espousing Isabel, was created Earl of Pembroke; but the town remained for a much longer time in ruins. William had five sons, who all succeeded in turn to the palatinate: of these, Walter, the fourth son, gave orders for restoring the town and building a new church and an almshouse; but dying in 1246 before his intentions were carried into effect, Warren de Mountchensy, who married one of his sisters, and eventually succeeded in her right to the earldom, completed the plans of his predecessor, and made to the church a valuable present of plate and jewels.

During the wars of the houses of York and Lancaster, the fortifications were repaired and strengthened by Jasper, Earl of Pembroke, who, in the 36th of Henry VI. (1458), caused the platform along the summit of the walls to be widened, for the greater facility of posting soldiers on the battlements, and the moat by which they were surrounded to be much increased in depth and breadth. Henry, Earl of Richmond (afterwards Henry VII.), and his mother, sought shelter in the castle of this place, to which they were brought by David ab Thomas, one of the brothers of Sir Rhÿs, a zealous adherent of the house of Lancaster, from Pembroke Castle, where they had been besieged. Here they received due attention from the mayor of the town, and embarked for Brittany under the protection of Jasper, Earl of Pembroke, uncle of Henry, who accompanied them to the continent. In the reign of Elizabeth, a memorial was presented by the Bishop of St. David's, and the principal persons of the county, praying that fit persons might be sent to inspect the castle and fortifications of Tenby, &c., preparatory to putting them into a state of defence against the threatened invasion of the Invincible Armada of Spain. The walls were consequently restored by order of the queen, whose initials, with the date 1588, are still visible.

At the commencement of the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the castle and the town were garrisoned for the king; and in 1644, Colonel Laugharne, with a strong body of parliamentary forces, laid siege to the place, which was resolutely defended by Colonel Gwyn, the governor, for three days, when, a breach being made in the walls, it was taken by storm, and the governor, the high sheriff, and three hundred men were made prisoners. In 1647, the castle and town were seized for the king by the same Colonel Laugharne, who, in conjunction with Colonel Poyer (governor of Tenby for the parliament) and Colonel Powell, had abandoned the parliamentary cause, and embraced the royal interests. From the strength of the garrison, composed of three hundred men, with twenty-five pieces of ordnance, and from the abundant store of provisions and ammunition with which it was supplied, it proved a formidable obstacle to the entire subjugation of the country to the authority of the parliament. Cromwell, who soon after came into South Wales with an army of eight thousand men, sent a detachment of twelve hundred, under the command of Colonel Read, to besiege this place; while he himself proceeded to obtain possession of Pembroke, then held by the three royalist commanders in person. For five days it held out against all the efforts of the united forces of Colonels Read and Constable, by the latter of whom the former had been joined, until the suburbs were at length taken by storm, and a breach made in the walls; the garrison was then compelled to surrender at discretion, and among the prisoners were numerous gentlemen of the surrounding country.

The town is romantically situated on the eastern and southern sides of a rocky peninsula, stretching out into the Bristol Channel, and rising a hundred feet above the level of high water. It consists of one principal street, and several smaller streets diverging from it, which latter are in some instances inconveniently narrow. The houses are in general well built and of respectable appearance, and some of them command fine views over the sea. Considerable improvements have been made of late years, among which may be noticed the erection of a new markethouse by the corporation, in 1829, and the formation, at a cost of £900, of a line of road, by which the approach to the town is greatly facilitated, and a steep and dangerous descent from Narberth and the eastern parts of the adjacent country avoided, and which was opened to the public in 1831. In the session of 1837-8 an act was passed for the improvement of Tenby, and the regulation of its harbour. The main street is well paved, and lighted, and the town is amply supplied with water, brought to the different houses, at the expense of the corporation, for which the occupiers pay from 10s. to 30s. a year, according to the value of their houses. The surrounding scenery is beautiful: the majestic masses of rock, of various forms and hues, that line the coast; the numerous bays and distant promontories stretching into the sea; the receding coasts of Carmarthenshire, with the projecting headland of Gower, inclosing the great bay of Carmarthen, on the western boundary of which the town is situated; and the small islands of Caldey and Lundy, with the shores of Somerset and Devon, combine to impart a high degree of interest, variety, and beauty to the sea-view, which is also pleasingly enlivened by the frequent passing and repassing of vessels navigating the Bristol Channel. On one side of the town is a drive of ten miles to the ancient town of Pembroke, through a fine champaign country, studded with churches, old castles, villages, and gentlemen's seats surrounded with plantations and pleasure-grounds. On the other side, the country is agreeably diversified with swelling eminences clothed with verdure, and small valleys richly wooded. The beautiful situation of the town, the fine beach and firm and smooth sands, extending two miles in length to the south, and one mile to the north, the transparency of the sea-water, and the pleasant walks and rides in the vicinity, have rendered Tenby a fashionable place of resort for bathing, and, since the close of the last century, raised it from the decline into which it had for many years previously fallen, to a high rank among the most favourite watering-places. Many good lodging-houses have been built for visitors, and a number of respectable private houses are also appropriated during the season to the reception of families.

Baths, provided with every convenience, were erected by the late Sir William Paxton under the castle hill, and are supplied from a capacious reservoir filled from the sea at every tide. The establishment comprises two spacious pleasure-baths, one for gentlemen and one for ladies, four small cold-baths, and also warm sea-water and vapour baths, with apparatus for heating them to any degree of temperature required: the same building contains lodgingrooms for the accommodation of such invalids as may find it inconvenient to be at a distance from the baths, and a general room as a promenade, and for taking refreshments. The exterior of the edifice is neat, though without any pretension to architectural style; and an excellent carriage-road has been made to the house, which commands a fine view over the sea, on one side, and, on the other, of the shipping in the bay. A small theatre was erected about the year 1810; but dramatic performances not being much encouraged here, it has been converted into dwelling-houses. A literary and scientific society was established in September 1847, which has a well-supplied reading-room; and in the High-street, opposite the church, is a good subscription library and reading-room. There are two billiard-rooms, and balls are held every fortnight during the season under the direction of a master of the ceremonies: races take place in the middle of August. The sands afford delightful promenades, and abound with shells of various descriptions, not less than one-half of the British collection of six hundred varieties having been found on this coast, on which many valuable shells commonly esteemed foreign have also been found.

Soon after the settlement of the Flemings at this place, the small harbour was greatly improved for the convenience of the shipping employed at the port. The trade, from that time, progressively increased; and a very considerable part of the population was engaged in carrying on the woollen manufacture, which was introduced by these settlers, and continued to flourish here for many years. From what cause the commercial and manufacturing importance of the town first began to decline, has not been clearly ascertained, but its manufactures have been neglected for a great length of time. The trade at present chiefly consists in exporting to the western and southern coasts of England the coal, culm, and limestone raised in the Out-Liberty of the parish, and which are shipped from Saundersfoot, in the parish of St. Issel's, three miles to the north; and in the importation of shop-wares from Bristol, between which city and Tenby a regular communication is maintained by means of steampackets. Considerable benefit will be derived from the Tenby and South Wales railway, authorized by act of parliament in 1846, and which will have a short branch to Saundersfoot; the total length being seven miles and a half. The works of this line, however, have not yet been commenced, as their construction depends on the progress made in the great South Wales railway, which is not yet brought into this part of the country. According to the custom-house regulations, the harbour is a creek to the port of Milford. It is dry at low water, and is sheltered from the south and west winds by the lofty peninsula on which the town is situated: on the east it is protected by the castle hill; and on the north by a small but handsome pier of ancient erection, which, stretching north-westward from the castle hill, in an irregular curve, terminates in a kind of circular bastion, the whole forming a remarkably picturesque object. The mouth of the harbour is daily cleared by a body of water retained each tide by flood-gates. The adjacent bay of Carmarthen abounds with almost every species of fish; there are several fishing-smacks belonging to Tenby, and the bay is also frequented by vessels from the neighbouring and opposite coasts.

The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, and the fish-market, which is plentifully supplied with excellent fish, is opened daily. Poultry, to the value of £100 a week, and large quantities of fish, are sent to Bristol by steamer. Fairs are held on May 4th, Whit-Tuesday, July 1st, October 2nd, and December 4th: that called St. Margaret's may, by charter, continue for three days; but since the establishment of the fair at Narberth, in the reign of Charles II., in consequence of the more central situation of that place, the fairs of this town have been on the decline, and are now but very thinly attended. A new market-place, as noticed above, was constructed in the High-street, at the expense of the corporation, in 1829, on a site purchased for £450; it is commodiously arranged, and has a handsome façade, with the arms of the borough sculptured in relief, on a shield of white marble, in the tympanum of the pediment above the entrance. A new fish-market was opened at the end of Belle Vue, near the top of Quay Hill, in the year 1847.

The inhabitants were first incorporated by William de Valence, with the consent of his consort Johanna, by whose right he had succeeded to the palatinate. This nobleman's charter, which is still extant, ordains that the burgesses should choose annually from among themselves two portreeves, and that they should have free common over all his lands from mowing and reaping times until the feast of the Purification. It was acknowledged and enlarged by his son, Aymer de Valence, also Earl of Pembroke; and, in the 16th of Edward III., by Laurence de Hastings, Earl of Pembroke. The latter earl's charter was confirmed by Edward himself in the 49th year of his reign. Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester and Earl of Pembroke, extended the privileges of the burgesses, and made the mayor an independent justice; and all the charters granted by the earls, as well as those bestowed by the reigning sovereigns, were ratified by their successors from the time of Edward III. to that of Elizabeth. Henry IV., by charter conferred in the year 1402, first placed the government in a mayor and two bailiffs, to be elected annually; and in the 23rd of Henry VI., the crown granted to the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, that they should be free from all murage, pontage, &c., at the port of Bristol. Elizabeth, in the 23rd of her reign, confirmed all preceding charters, and incorporated the inhabitants under the designation of the "Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses of the borough of Tenby," granting them power to elect a second justice of the peace from among the aldermen, who, with the mayor, should hold courts of quarter-session, with authority to punish for all felonies, trespasses, and misdemeanors, not affecting life or limb. Charles I., in his 6th year, added a third justice of the peace, and two serjeants-at-mace, one to be nominated by the mayor, and the other by the bailiffs, whom he made keepers of the common gaol and house of correction, and also charged with the execution of all writs. Under these various charters the control was vested in a mayor (who was also coroner), two bailiffs, two justices, and an indefinite number of common-councilmen and burgesses, assisted by a townclerk, two serjeants-at-mace, and other officers.

By the act 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76, the corporation is now styled the "Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Tenby," and consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, together forming the council of the borough, of which the municipal and parliamentary boundaries, including about 600 acres, are the same. The council elect the mayor annually on Nov. 9th, out of the aldermen or councillors; and the aldermen sexennially out of the councillors, or persons qualified as such, one-half going out of office every three years, but being re-eligible: the councillors are chosen annually on Nov. 1st, by and from among the enrolled burgesses, one-third retiring every year. Aldermen and councillors must each have a property qualification of £500, or be rated at £15 annual value. The burgesses consist of the occupiers of houses and shops who have been rated for three years to the relief of the poor. Two auditors and two assessors are elected annually on March 1st, by and from among the burgesses; and the council appoint a town-clerk, treasurer, and other officers, on Nov. 9th. The income of the borough in the year 1810 was £287, in 1820 £572, and in 1830 £616; and according to the report of the Municipal Commissioners in the year 1834, it then amounted to £801, of which £622 were derived from lands and houses, £64 from tolls, £10 from water-rents, and £105 from harbour-dues. Some opinion may be formed of the importance of the property belonging to the corporation, from the circumstance, that during the period of twenty-two years commencing in 1810, about £7300 were expended in general improvements; namely, £1700 for the erection of a market; £1297 for supplying the town with water; £309 for paving and repairing the streets; and about £4000 for improving the place, removing obstructions, and for labour. Of the sum paid for obtaining a due supply of water, £100 were for a reservoir, and £700 for pipes.

This borough, with Wiston, was, in the 27th of Henry VIII., made contributory to Pembroke, in the return of a parliamentary member: by the act of 1832 to "Amend the Representation," Milford was added to the district of boroughs. The elective franchise, until the passing of that act, was vested in the burgesses at large, in number nearly 400, of whom about 130 were resident. It is now exercised by the old resident burgesses, and the £10 householders: the number of houses within the limits of the borough, of value sufficient to qualify their tenants, is 220. Tenby is one of the places at which the poll is appointed to be taken at county elections.

The corporation formerly held quarterly courts of session for the borough, on the Friday after the county-sessions were held, for the trial of all offenders, of whom the punishment did not affect life or limb; a court of record for the recovery of debts to any amount above the sum of forty shillings, called the monthly court, which was held on the first Thursday in every month, and had power to issue process to hold to bail in actions for debt; and a court every fortnight, on Monday, for the recovery of debts under forty shillings. The jurisdiction of these courts extended over the entire In-Liberty of the parish, constituting the borough, in which neither the county magistrates nor the sheriff had any authority. By the Municipal act of the reign of William IV., the borough was deprived of its exclusive jurisdiction, and other privileges, such as exemption from county rates, the ballot for the militia, &c.; the county magistrates have now concurrent jurisdiction with the borough magistrates, and all cases of moment are referred to the general or quarter sessions at Haverfordwest, the county town. The town prison is used only as a place of temporary confinement, or prior to the committal of prisoners to the county gaol at Haverfordwest.

The living consists of a consolidated rectory and vicarage, in the gift of the Crown; the rectory rated in the king's books at £26. 10. 10., and the vicarage, which is discharged, at £13. 6. 8. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £236; and there is a glebe of fifteen acres, valued for the poor-rate at £52 per annum, with a house, valued at £42 per annum. Tenby church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a venerable and spacious structure, principally in the early style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a lofty spire, 152 feet in height: being situated in the centre of the town, it forms a prominent feature in the view of it from the sea and the surrounding country. The present edifice was erected in the year 1250, by Warren de Mountchensy, Earl of Pembroke, after the destruction of the town by the sons of Rhÿs ab Gruffydd. The body consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a chancel; and the church is richer in sepulchral monuments than any other in South Wales, excepting the two cathedrals. Of these, the most remarkable are the monuments of John and Thomas White, brothers, and eminent merchants of the place, which are sumptuously embellished and elaborately sculptured; each has the effigy of the deceased, in the costume of the time, and in each also are four compartments, containing effigies of other members of the family, of whom was Griffith White, mayor of the borough when Henry Earl of Richmond embarked here for the continent, and to whom, after his accession to the throne, that monarch, in recompense for his services, granted a lease of all the crown lands in the vicinity of the town. An altar-tomb is still remaining, to which a brass representing a bishop was formerly affixed, supposed to have been the memorial of Tully, Bishop of St. David's. The western entrance to the church is beneath an arch surmounted with the inscription, in characters of the 13th or 14th century, "Benedictus Dominus in Domis Suis." The ceiling of the nave is of neatly carved wainscot, and that of the chancel is of wainscot much more richly ornamented; it is divided into square compartments with a knot of curiously carved work in the angle of each panel, the ribs resting on figures rudely carved holding escutcheons for arms. Some repairs were effected in the building in 1847, partly by a rate, partly by subscription, and partly by the aid of Mr. and Miss Tudor. According to Mr. Fenton, three chantry priests were appointed to officiate in the church, one at the altar of Jesus, another at that of St. Anne, and a third at the "Rood of Grace;" for which services, lands producing at that time £13. 3. per annum, together with thirteen shillings and fourpence for lamps, were settled on the church. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Baptists; and a building on the pier, said to have been dedicated to St. Julian, and used as an oratory, in Roman Catholic times, by seamen, prior to their setting out on a voyage, has been occasionally used by the dissenters as a marine chapel. National schools for boys and girls were built in 1831, on the castle hill; an infants' school is held, and there are several Sunday schools. A dispensary was established in 1843 for the benefit of the poor, supported by subscriptions, under the management of the medical practitioners of the town.

A hospital in the town, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was founded at a very early period, but by whom is unknown: about the year 1236, it was endowed by Gilbert Marshall, Earl of Pembroke, with lands for the relief of the lepers therein; and its revenue at the Dissolution was valued at £3. 5. Queen Elizabeth, in the 23rd year of her reign, vested the lands in the corporation, in trust for the benefit of the poor; and in the 43rd of the same reign, by an act of parliament for the better regulation and support of the poor, these estates were transferred from the former trustees to the overseers and churchwardens of the parish of St. Mary, Tenby. The present income is only about £14 per annum; but on the expiration of the leases, which were granted many years since, the revenue will be much increased. Two marks, or £1. 6. 8., per annum, are paid to the poor in a monthly gift of bread, by the proprietor of the estate of St. Botolph's, in the parish of Steynton; being a bequest made about the year 1633 by Richard Budd, in consideration of his having been saved from shipwreck by taking refuge within Tenby pier. William Risam, in 1633, bequeathed £50, and £200, to be lent without interest to, and to provide coal for, the poor; and to be employed in putting out apprentices: these sums are now lost, having been improvidently lent; as was likewise a bequest of £10, left by Thomas Barret, in 1623. Dr. John Jones left in trust to his brother, the Rev. William Jones, certain property, to be applied to such charitable uses as he might think proper; and, in 1703, the latter gentleman appropriated £413, to be vested in the purchase of land, now producing £63 per annum, for apprenticing children, and towards the maintenance of such persons as cannot support their families by their own labour; to which purpose is also applied the interest of a bequest of £40, by Anne Hitchings, in 1813. Of the charities until lately administered by the corporation, the principal are a bequest of £250, by Abra Bowen, in 1679, another of £40, by Mrs. Anne Lloyd, and a third of £6, by Mrs. Hunt; with which certain lands were purchased, now yielding £27 per annum, the chief part of which is divided among three aged natives of the town, and the residue among the poor generally; together with the produce of £50, left by Mary Lewis, in 1783, in money and bread. The charities till lately under the control of the churchwardens, exclusively of Budd's gift, noticed above, consist of donations in bread, arising from some small bequests for the purpose. Among what were the overseers' charities, besides the hospital lands, are some fields in Knowle Park, purchased many years since with a bequest of £50, by Thomas Wyatt, in 1644, and now let at £15 per annum; and a rent of £2. 16. from Upper Cwm Park, bought with bequests of £10, by Elizabeth Pint, in 1656, and £45, by Anthony Williams, in 1696. Since the passing of the Municipal act, the public charities have been under the control of nine charity-trustees appointed by the lord chancellor. Some of the charities have been lost, and the principal of others laid out in the purchase of land; the whole of those still in existence are now comprised under three heads, Dr. Jones's, Almshouse, and Abra Bowen's, and their gross annual value is about £190. There is also property for the repair of the church, consisting chiefly of land, and producing from £60 to £70 per annum: and besides the harbour-dues, there are certain funds for the maintenance of the quay, pier, and harbour, consisting of nominal rents for houses, stores, and pieces of land, near the shore and other parts of the town.

The remains of the castle are very considerable, though mostly in a dilapidated condition. The fortress once comprised within its defences the whole of the little rocky peninsula which, projecting eastward from the eastern extremity of the town, forms the southern limit of the small bay of Tenby; but the only portions now sufficiently entire to convey any idea of its original strength are, a bastion and a square tower, in tolerable preservation, some portions of the walls, and the principal gateway entrance. The state apartments may still be traced among the ruins, and they exhibit the appearance of a splendid baronial residence, rather than the features of a military fortress. On the north of the grand entrance are the ruins of a once stately hall, a hundred feet in length, and twenty feet wide; and near the gateway are the remains of another apartment, eighty feet long, and thirty wide; attached to which are smaller rooms, that seem to have been offices and barracks for the garrison. A portion of the keep also remains, occupying the most elevated part of the castle hill, and presenting an appearance of great antiquity. The ancient walls by which the town was surrounded are still in some places entire: the path along their summit, from the northern extremity of the fortifications to the south gate, may be traced; and the pointed arches by which the platform for manning the battlements was supported, are also discernible. There yet remain two of the towers by which they were defended, the battlements of the towers being supported by corbels; and likewise the south gate, surmounted by a low semicircular bastion of great strength: and besides these, some other towers of smaller dimensions, chiefly circular, and a square turret near the eastern extremity, are in tolerable preservation. Several of the towers are richly mantled with ivy, and the whole convey an imposing idea of the ancient importance of this fortress.

Numerous specimens of old domestic architecture, formerly existing, have been removed for the purpose of widening the streets, and otherwise improving the town; but sufficient yet remain to give some notion of the style prevailing in Tenby during its occupation by the Flemings. Several beautiful engravings, also, of remains of early military and domestic architecture, now entirely destroyed, are preserved in the "Etchings of Tenby" by C. Norris, Esq., published in 1812. Among the ecclesiastical establishments that existed at the place were, an hospital or free chapel, founded by William de Valence, and dedicated to St. John the Baptist, which, at the Dissolution, had an endowment of £9. 3. 2. for an officiating priest; and a convent instituted by John de Swinemor, in 1399, for Carmelite friars, and in honour of St. Mary. Of this latter, some beautiful doorways may still be traced. Near the coast to the east of the town are several gentlemen's seats, some of them of very ancient date; among which are, Kîlgetty, Hên Castle, Merrixtion, Bonville's Court, and Amroath Castle. To seaward are some insulated rocks of romantic character, in which curious natural caverns have been excavated by the action of the winds and tides; some of these are accessible on foot at low water, and one, off the Castle point, called St. Catherine's island, has been completely perforated by the force of the waves, and presents a very interesting appearance. About two miles and a half from the pier at Tenby, is the extra-parochial island of Caldey, which is described under its own head: it contains 87 inhabitants; and the extra-parochial island called St. Margaret's has 22 inhabitants. Robert Loughor, LL.D., distinguished by his literary attainments, and by the offices which he filled in the university of Oxford, was born at this town, where he died in 1585. Robert Record, M.D., also a native of Tenby, is mentioned by George Owen, as having been renowned for his works on cosmography, arithmetic, and geometry; he died in the reign of Queen Mary.

1844 Tenby South Wales directory

Tenby is a market town, contributory borough and sea-port, in the parish of Saint Mary, county of Pembroke; 242 miles w. from London, 10s. from Narberth, and the like distance east from Pembroke; pleasantly situated on the west side of Carmarthen Bay, upon a point or neck of land running out into the sea---protected on the south, by the islands of Caldy and Saint Margaret, from the waves of the Atlantic and Saint Georges channel.

Tenby appears to have been a place of great strength, from the remains of its walls, towers, and castle, the latter a venerable remnant of antiquity. The present town consists for the most part of one long winding, well-paved street, of good breadth. The principal advantages enjoyed by Tenby over other sea bathing places, consist in the variety of its aspect and delightful views, the strength and clearness of the salt water the firmness and extent of its sands, purity of its air, and freedom from the smoke of works, and the noise and confusion of more frequented sea-ports. Almost every convenience and accommodation appropriate to a watering-place may be obtained in Tenby: there are reading and news-rooms, good libraries, baths of all kinds, comfortable lodging-houses, in pleasant situations, together with excellent inns suitable either to the economical tourist or fashionable visitor. Among the improvements effected within these few years, is lighting the town with gas.

The principal trade carried on here is in exporting oysters, in the shell and pickled in small jars, of which great quantities are shipped annually; the largest oysters in Great Britain or Ireland are obtained in Caldy-bed, between that island and Tenby. Mines of stone-coal and culm are worked within three and four miles hence; and iron - ore has also been found near the coal mines.

Tenby is governed by a mayor, four aldermen and twelve councillors, with the usual assistant officers. The borough is exempt from the jurisdiction of the sheriff of the county, having two sheriffs of its own, called bailiffs, who are elected annually by the burgesses. Sessions are held four times a year, before the magistrates of the borough; and courts for the recovery of debts, &c. to any amount above 40s. monthly, and every fortnight for sums under 40s.: the mayor for the time being is lord of the manor, and judge of both these courts, and holds a court-leet and view of frank pledge at Lady-day and Michaelmas. This borough shares, with Pembroke and other places (named in the description of the latter town), in the selective franchise.

The church, which stands in the centre of the town is supposed to be the largest parish church in Wales; it has a square tower, surmounted by a lofty spire of white freestone, serving as an excellent and conspicuous sea-mark. The living is a rectory, in the gift of the Crown. There are places of worship for dissenters; a school conducted on the national plan, and one for infants. The corporation have two charities under their control, both for the decayed housekeepers; to one of these is attached a fund for apprenticing poor children.

The land around the town is mountainous, and not remarkably productive; but the views are very pleasing, and the north east aspect of the town has an extensive prospect over the whole of Carmarthen bay, seen beyond its own beautiful cliffs and promontories.

The markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday; and the fairs, on the 4th of May, at Whitsuntide, the 31st of July, and two days after; the 2nd of October, and the 4th of December.

The town of Tenby, and parish of St. Mary (within and without the town) contained, by the returns for 1831, 2,128 inhabitants; and by the census for 1841, 2,912.

1850'S Victorian Naturalists In Tenby (Extract)

Margaret Davies, C.B.E., M.A., Ph.D.

The mid-19th century saw a remarkable surge of interest in plants and animals. and, particularly, in the fascinating and colourful life of the seashores of expanding holiday resorts. Victorian energy and inventiveness, which expanded the railway network and produced the salt-water aquarium, led to the heyday of natural history'. Tenby, on its rocky peninsula flanked by superb beaches and outlying islands, played its part in this heyday, attracting biologists of the calibre of T. H. Huxley and P. H. Gosse. Both were befriended by a resident marine zoologist, Dr. F. D. Oyster.

In 1850 Tenby town still lay largely within its medieval walls. Cottages and fine town houses lined the Norton, originally a medieval 'suburb'. The Croft had its dignified terrace of lodging houses, and a few villas set in 'pleasure grounds' had been built on Greenhill and in Heywood Lane, overlooking the Green. Developments by Sir William Paxton, the Town Council and leading townsfolk had made the resort attractive to well-to-do visitors from London, the Bristol-Cheltenham area and South Wales. Tenby was also becoming well-known as a healthy retreat for invalids and for the retired, especially military and naval officers. By 1854 the main London Haverfordwest railway brought passengers to Narberth Road (Ciynderwen) station, from which they travelled to Tenby in coaches supplied by the Cobourg or Lion hotels.

By 1804 the virtues of sea water were well advertised and the naturalist at rock pools was liable to find "the female peasantry enjoying, without disguise, the delicious coolness and delight of bathing in the open sea". Donovan also observed starfish, sea urchins and crabs feeding on the overfished oysters of the beds between Caldey and Penally. Tenby's fishermen, with their small open boats, had dredged and pickled oysters for fifty years. Now they were being displaced in fishing and dredging by Torbay men who had larger boats; they sent their catches twice weekly to Bristol and came into Tenby for weekends. Because the Tenby men had refused to pay their fish tithes and to worship at St Julian's Chapel on the old curved pier, the chapel had been transformed by Esau Jones "an intelligent apothecary of Haverfordwest" into Tenby's first bathing house.

In 1847 two physicians, who lived in the handsome St Julian Street houses which overlook the south beach and Caldey, were fostering interest in natural history among both residents and visitors. Dr Randle Wilbraham Falconer founded Tenby Literary and Scientific Society in 1847: its well-stocked reading room and meeting room were at the Paragon end of Cresswell Street.

Tenby Museum was not established until 1878.

Frederick Daniel Oyster (1810-1893), M.D., F.L.S., came to 2, Rock Houses, St Julian Street in 1847 from Madeira, where he had settled for health reasons and had acted as unpaid medical officer. He gave £200 to clear Tenby Hospital's debt when it was opened in 1871 and built a women's ward there in memory of his wife Fanny Guillemard, a descendant of Huguenot refugees". Oyster served on the Town Council from 1866 to 1872 and was mayor of Tenby in 1867-8. He promoted Tenby Savings Bank, gave St Mary's an organ and erected the drinking fountain in Tudor Square as a memorial to Lt. Col. Thomas Wedgwood of St Mary's Hill, Tenby, a Waterloo veteran and grandson of Josiah Wedgwood. Dr Oyster was a founder trustee of Tenby Museum.

1860-1863 Tenby area From The Cambrian Journal

TENBY, with its environs, is one of those interesting localities that has something to show or tell to each of its many friends. In my case it suggested the hints here thrown together. Meagre though they be, they suffice to show the extensive and engaging nature of the remains abounding in the neighbourhood.

It struck me, however, with surprise, that whilst the natural productions of the district have been ably described, so little has been done to follow out its historical antecedents and mediaeval relics. There are, it is true, several attractive volumes relating some of the more salient events of bygone times, but they are treated in a general way only, and leave the antiquary dissatisfied, and anxious for more specific information. That this is to be had for seeking, no one can doubt who is at all acquainted with the facilities that the present day presents for investigating the lore of the middle ages.

Several highly competent gentlemen reside near, whose local knowledge, combined with their antiquarian acumen, points them out as well able to investigate this subject : may they they be induced to undertake a thorough prosecution of it.

It will at once be observed that Tenby Church varies in the style and age of its different parts.

Severely simple in character, and constituting the nucleus of the whole, the Tower must be pronounced the oldest portion of the Church, yet one that has undergone least alteration, either in itself, or in relative position, still spanning the middle of the south aisle. Only when its spire was added, to a height equal to the length of the fabric, probably in the fifteenth century, something was done to strengthen the piers, though they were afterwards cut away, the better to open views of the altar from the west, which may have been then raised to its present elevation.

Whilst the tower somewhat resembles those of other neighbouring churches, its battlements and loop-hole windows are more military looking than ecclesiastical, and its masonry and archings so nearly correspond with the town walls and towers, as to indicate a common origin. These have been attributed to William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, who died in 1296.

Examining in the next place the body of the Church, its many incongruities, though pleasingly united as a whole, constitute a perplexing problem for the antiquary's solution. Thus the south side of the nave seems older than the north. Both of the east arches are larger than the rest, and none of the piers are opposite one another. An altar appears to have stood against a screen beneath the chancel arch, its north aisle being curiously contracted at the east end by the adjoining street. This part looks later than the rest, its roof necessitating the blocking up of the clerestory windows of the chancel.

The rich double altar-tomb of the Whites is, certainly as old as 1453, and the body of the building, judging by the general agreement in the tracery of its windows, is of nearly the same age. Hence most of the structure belongs to the first half of the fifteenth century. Indeed, John and Thomas White, the wealthy merchants of the town, and strong churchmen, as the correct character of their monument bespeaks, may have been the generous edifiers of this spacious temple. The elegant west door is so like Canynge's work at St. Mary's, Redcliffe, as to suggest familiar intercourse between them.

Tully, Bishop of St. David's from 1460 to 1482, may have also helped in carrying out the design, in common with the Rector, Doctor John Smith, who seems to have re-roofed a considerable part of the building.

And now let me ask your aid in placing before your readers some particulars respecting that remarkable feature of the domestic buildings erected by the former inhabitants of this locality, viz., the Flemish chimney shaft. Though for a century or two their removal has been going on, and less cumbrous appendages raised in their stead, yet they are sufficiently numerous to constitute a group of themselves. Even in Tenby several remain, whilst one or more may be found in the old houses sprinkled about in the hamlets and villages round.

They consist of a slightly tapering cylindrical shaft, the top being made conical, built up with fragments of stone, and a liberal amount of mortar, on a square base.

Whilst such is their invariable type, the buildings to which they are severally united belong to different eras. Sometimes they form part of an Edwardian ruin, as at Manorbeer, &c., or else of an Elizabethan one, as at Scotsborough, &c. Yet their appearance is one and the same. In size they are nearly equal, the only appreciable difference being that the older are of better workmanship.

None, however, of the structures with which they are incorporated exhibit marks of much earlier date than the fourteenth century. Hence, if a higher antiquity is sought for these chimneys, it must be obtained in some other way. A Flemish origin has been ingeniously claimed for them, and therefore one that reaches away to the twelfth century. Such presumption cannot however be supported. Nothing like them exists in Belgium, and they occur beyond the limits of the territory colonized by that people. A more natural solution of their source is to be found in the building stone of the neighbourhood, combined with the admirable lime it affords. This latter is so binding and durable, as to fit it for firmly uniting odd shaped bits of rock, and retaining them together for ages. Hence the surprising durability of these chimneys. The stone of the district breaks so short, and is so hard, that a hollow square shaft can scarcely be made with it, consequently brick or cement are now used instead, as the angular flue is universally preferred.

Indeed, wherever building-stone similar to that of this district is met with, the oldest masonry is found constructed on the circular plan, be they towers, spires, pinnacles, or turrets.

In addition to the old, so-called, Flemish Chimneys that mark this neighbourhood, I find another topic worthy the attention of your readers, in the number of stone vaultings covering the churches, halls, &c., erected in South Pembrokeshire, circa A.D. 1300, if not before.

That in the tower of the Church here, indicative of similar arching over the whole building, as originally constructed, is a familiar instance. Manorbeer Castle appears to have been almost covered in by this mode, and it seems to have been largely prevalent at Carew, Pembroke, &c.

Similar examples occur in the Churches of Penally, Gumfreston, St. Florence, &c., so much so that a stranger, on raising his eyes when entering them, is struck by their cavernous look, which he immediately sees to be genuine stone vaulting, by the thickness given to the sustaining walls.

It is remarkable that a kind of medium span, not exceeding twenty feet, as well as pitch, usually comprising an angle of 60 degrees, is observed in each case. Neither ribs, bosses, or brackets, are found in any of them, so that they manifest the simplest construction.

Frequently the vaulting, by being made roof-shaped on its upper surface, serves both as a covering as well as a ceiling a double purpose that the admirable lime of the country has enabled it unimpaired to fulfil for ages and ages.

One interesting conclusion that seems deducible from such mode of covering in buildings, and the consequent total absence of wood in their construction, is that it resulted from the difficulty of obtaining timber, except at great cost. I infer, therefore, that there was a want of suitable trees, this part of the shire being kept bare of them by the Atlantic storms to which the district lies exposed. It is certainly remarkable that no large timber trees are to be found here, though it is pleasing to see how well some of those that have been planted in sheltered situations are getting up. Hence we observe how, by means of vaulting their buildings, the old architects of this locality yielded to circumstances, and made circumstances yield to them.

Although the ancient mortar of this locality is extremely good, yet nearly all old mortar is better than much that is made now. I have sometimes thought this superiority may be accounted for by supposing that as, before coal became known, lime kilns were supplied with wood fuel, this had a beneficial effect upon the stone. Whilst admitting, however, that in early times most of the lime used in Great Britain must have been prepared with charcoal, the true cause of its greater excellence seems to have resulted from the admirable way in which mortar was made, not, as is often the case now, chiefly of very fine sand, but always predominating in lime, the sand being coarse, with a considerable quantity of the local rock broken small added afterwards. A good example of such admixture is to be seen in the mortar of Pembroke Castle. On examination it will be found to abound in chips of old red sandstone, such as would be made in dressing the masonry of the building. By such means the consumption of lime would be economised, and the quality of the mortar uninjured.

But several of the old structures near here are formed of unworked stones, in which instances it is curious to observe how their builders continued to make the most of the lime, without reducing its excellence. The problem is solved in the rude old towers dotted over the country between here and Pembroke. In the mortar of these buildings no red sandstone chips occur, but in their stead we perceive bits of coal ; thus supplying the interesting information that the coal works of this neighbourhood were then in operation, being probably resorted to, for domestic uses, five hundred and fifty years ago.

The second point I desire briefly to dwell upon is the nearly total absence of buttresses from the buildings of this locality, for neither in its sacred, castellated, or domestic edifices, do they appear. The age of their erection abounds with them elsewhere; yet we find that in these parts the mediaeval architects did without them, by giving increased thickness to their walling, and by sloping their work inwards as it rose.

I feel sure that they were induced to carry up their stone work thus, because of the difficulty of adapting the limestone of the district to angular requirements, and therefore the craftsmen preferred to have as little of that sort of work in their buildings as possible. Here, then, is an instance similar to the so-called Flemish chimneys, exhibiting, in common with them, the adaptation of structure to materials.

For further observations on these archaeological particulars, I feel I cannot do better than refer to the remarks of the author of the Glossary of Architecture, as given in the Gentleman s Magazine.

I would now invite attention to the architectural details of the West Doorway of Tenby Church, as well as to the one opposite it, opening upon the site of the old Chantry.

Both of them appear to me to be Moorish, difficult as it may seem to account for such singularity of origin. I think, however, that this can be done by admitting the similarity between these doorways and the porch of St. Mary's, Redcliffe, which is, if possible, more Moorish still. Now, it is highly probable that these owe their erection to those contemporary and eminent merchants of the middle ages, viz., the Whites of Tenby, and the Canynoges of Bristol. They were, doubtless, well known to each other, and would be apt to include the coast of Spain in their trading circle, if they did not actually visit it themselves. "Tenby," says the writer of the Winnington MS., dated 1621, "lieth very commodious for traffique with Spayne." The Arab name of Jasper, or Gaspar, borne by one of the Whites, seems to point to the above intercourse. Adomar de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, who died, seized of such vast estates, in 1324, appears to have derived his name from a like source, i.e., Spanish Valencia, in common with an island on the Kerry coast of Ireland, not very distant from the town of Galway, which also contains several old Moorish buildings.

Passing on to another subject, let me notice the considerable depth below the level of the adjoining soil, that is occasionally found in the lanes about Tenby, &c. Upwards of ten feet may be detected in places, justifying the quaint old name of "Hollow Ways" Surely, such depression proves great antiquity, being the water-action, and wear of many ages and generations of men. There appears no other way of accounting for such formation. We may be certain they were not made so deep originally. No soil appears thrown up on their banks, and certainly no modern road-maker has taken them in hand. The lanes themselves are proved to be old, by the manner in which they determined the shape of the adjacent fields, or the position of some antiquated houses standing near.

Our high roads are often very ancient, and, no doubt, the old Tenby lanes are as aged as the oldest of them.

1883 English Towns and Districts; Freeman

'At Tenby itself, the huge church has nothing local but the tower; but the process by which it has swelled to its present form is worth comparing with Grantham and Great Yarmouth. The most really interesting thing at Tenby is the town wall, which remains very nearly perfect throughout the whole of one side Of the castle only fragments are left; but the peninsular hill stands nobly, looking over the sea two ways, to the island known as Caldyon the one side and on the other side to Worm's Head.

1895 Tenby-- Timmins Nooks and Corners of Pembrokeshire

One clear, calm evening in May of this drought year of grace 1893, we emerge dusty and sun-baked from the tropical recesses of the 'tunnel express,' alight at Tenby Station, and wend our way through the streets of that clean little town to seaside quarters overlooking a picturesque bay, where some fishing-craft lie quietly at anchor off the harbour mouth. Towards sundown a miniature fleet of trawlers sweeps gracefully landwards around the Castle Hill, looking for all the world like a flight of brilliant butterflies; their russet sails glowing in the warm light of the sun's declining rays with every hue from gold to ruddy purple, recalling memories of gorgeous scenes on far-away Venetian lagoons.

Hailing from many a haven between Milford and strong savoured Brixham, these handy little vessels ply their calling around our south-western shores; pushing their ventures, when opportunity serves, to the North Sea fishing-grounds, and even to the remoter shores of Scotland. The visitor curious in such matters soon learns to distinguish between the well-found Brixham trawler and the handy sloop from Milford, certain cabalistic letters painted upon the particoloured sails denoting the port where, according to custom, each boat is respectively registered.

Tenby town is in many respects happy in what a local historian quaintly terms its 'approximation.' Turning its back upon the quarter whence blow the strongest gales, and sheltered by the high ground of the Ridgeway, that part of the town most frequented by visitors faces south by east across the land-locked waters of Carmarthen Bay. Hence a pleasant view is obtained of the opposite coast of Gower and the more distant highlands of North Devon ; while Caldey Island lies like a breakwater against the waves of the open Channel. As shrewd old Leland observes :

' Tinbigh Town standith on a main Rokke, but not very hy ; and the Severn Se so gultith in about hit that, at the ful Se, almost the third part of the Toun is inclosid with water.'

Tenby can boast a fair sprinkling of good hotels and lodging houses. The town is made further attractive as a place of residence by a well-appointed club, a circulating library, excellent public baths and a small museum of local interest. Last, but by no means least amongst its attractions. Nature has provided a broad expanse of firm, dry sands, much appreciated by children and bathers at holiday times.

With a fair train-service upon the railway, good carriages and boats for hire, and steamboats calling at intervals, Tenby affords a convenient centre whence to explore the remoter recesses of South Pembrokeshire, for few and far between are the resting-places for the wayfarer in that rather inaccessible region.

Djnbych-y-Pysgod — the Little Town of Fish — appears to have been a place of some importance from very early- times. By the middle of the twelfth century we find the town in the hands of the Flemish soldiery ; and subsequently disasters came thick and threefold upon the devoted inhabitants. During the reign of Henry II., Maelgwyn ap Rhys, a person who is euphemistically described as ' of civil behaviour and honesty in all his actions,' ascertaining that many of the townsfolk were absent at the foreign wars, made a sudden onslaught, set fire to the ill-fated town, and burnt it to the ground. Less than a century later the place was again taken and destroyed by Llewelyn ap Gruffydd ; and after a further respite of about 200 years, the notorious Owain Glyndwr appeared before the walls, laid siege to, and made himself master of the little Western seaport.

Notwithstanding these misfortunes, ' the King's town of Tenby ' henceforth grew and prospered unmolested. In 1402 Tenby was made a corporate town ; and by the middle of the fifteenth century it had already become a centre of considerable trade and enterprise, encompassed by strong stone walls and towers built by Earl William de Valentia, Lord of Pembroke. The town walls are said to have been rebuilt by one Thomas White, the scion of a famous burgher family who was Mayor of this ancient borough in 1457.

When Leland passed this way in the reign of bluff King Hal, he found the ' Toun strongeli waullid and well gatid, everi Gate having hys Port collis ex, solide fcvro.' ' But,' says Fenton, writing in the early part of the present century, ' it was left for Queen Elizabeth, who was a great benefactress of the town in general, and whose initials are still extant over parts of the town walls, to contribute that strength and perfection to them which the present remains are a striking proof of.'

Earl William (who appears to have been a generous patron of the town) granted the first charter of liberties, which was afterwards renewed and confirmed by successive reigning sovereigns. Several of these interesting documents are still in the possession of the Corporation, including an illuminated charter of Richard III.'s reign, and another granted by Edward VI., which is enriched with a quaint, archaic portrait of that youthful monarch.

Tenby also boasts a handsome pair of silver maces, presented to the town by Charles II. They are about 2 feet in length, and are emblazoned with the royal arms, the arms of Tenby, and other appropriate devices, with the inscription ' Rice Borrow Maior, 1660.' The upper portion of the head is formed as a moveable lid, so that the mace could be used upon festive occasions as a loving-cup.

Since those turbulent days of its earlier career, Tenby has played the modest role of a town without a history, and has happily combined the avocations of a fishery town with the seductions of a modern watering-place.

Tenby Parish Church of St Mary's

Turning out into the steadfast sunshine, we now thread our way amid the intricacies of the older byways to the ' faire Paroche chirche,' whose steeple, soaring high aloft, appears a landmark to mariners far out at sea. Dedicated to St. Mary, this church is one of the largest and handsomest in the county, and is unrivalled in the beauty and interest of its monuments.

Here lie buried several distinguished members of that famous family, the Whites of Tenby, which has given many worthy citizens to the town. Beneath the right-hand tomb rests Thomas White, merchant and sometime Alderman of Tenby : whose recumbent effigy, habited in the distinctive costume of his calling, adorns the monument. He it was who enabled Henry, Earl of Richmond, to escape after the battle of Tewkesbury, by concealing him in his house at Tenby until such time as he could ship him safely off in one of his own vessels to France. In gratitude for this yeoman service the Earl, upon his accession to the throne, presented his trusty friend with the lease of all the Crown lands around the town. The adjacent monument, which closely resembles its neighbour, records another member of the White family. Both these tombs are enriched with figures, in panels of bold relief, with a running inscription in medieval character carved upon the margin.

Our attention is next attracted by the gaily-tinted effigy of William Risam, who, clad in aldermanic robes, kneels beneath a canopy built into the chapel wall. The figure is coloured in such a life-like manner that, as the story goes, a Parliamentary soldier fired at the supposed enemy ; in witness whereof a bullet-hole may be discerned above the head of the effigy.

Near at hand lies the last of that ancient family the Vaughans, of Dunraven in South Wales ; a man who, having run through his patrimony at breakneck pace, allowed the ancestral mansion to fall into ruin, and betook himself to a lonely turret upon the seaward cliffs. Here he is said to have spent his time in showing false lights along the coast, in order to lure passing vessels ashore and enrich himself by the plunder of their cargoes. One stormy night, during one of these sinister exploits, the body of his only son was washed ashore at his feet ; when, overcome by this ominous catastrophe, he quitted the neighbourhood, withdrew from all intercourse with his fellow-creatures, and ended his days in seclusion at Tenby.

Standing upon the chapel floor hard by, we espy a fine old fifteenth -century church bell bearing in black-letter characters the words SANCTA ► J" ANNA, with the initials K. T. This is the ancient sanctus-bell of this same chapel of St. Anne, which has descended to its present lowly position from the exterior of the tower, having been hung there, as is supposed, long years ago by Thomas ap Rhys, of Scotsborough, a descendant of the famous Rhys ap Thomas who played so important a part in the establishment of Henry VII. upon the throne. The memory of this worthy knight is kept evergreen by the gaudy and rather pretentious-looking monument seen on the farther wall. There he kneels, with folded hands, arrayed in ruffles and trunk hose ; his ' better half," who is represented as of gigantic proportions, reposing uncomfortably upon her side ; while in panels beneath appear the sons and daughters, arranged in symmetrical gradation.

A glance at the sketch will show the pretty contrast afforded by the diversified forms of the arches; while the lofty flight of steps ascending to the chancel, and the dark timbers of the roof supported by well-carved angels upon massive brackets, enhance the effect of the handsome interior.

Quitting the church by its massive south porch, we pause beneath the spreading elms that adorn the churchyard to admire a singular group of arches, set in a crumbling fragment of ruined wall, whose gray, time-worn stones are abloom with bright tufts of pink valerian. These appear to be the sole remains of a house of Carmelite nuns, established A.D. 1399 by one John de Swynemore ; and so graceful are these richly-moulded arches that we can but regret that more of the structure has not been spared to us. It is probable that these ruins are of coeval date with the adjacent western doorway of the church, which has a peculiar ogee arch surmounted with the following inscription in Gothic characters:

BENEDICTUS DELS IN DONIS SUIS.

Rambling haphazard around the little town, such names as Frog Street, Crackwell Street and the like, tickle our fancy as a quaint relief to modern street nomenclature, which, usually devoid of originality, too often supplants local names racy of the soil. A sudden turn down a narrow lane, hanging, as it were, upon the steep hillside, reveals glimpses of old-world Tenby which beguile our wandering steps from the hard highway. At a secluded corner of these by-lanes a gray and weather-beaten old house stands, forsaken and neglected, amid the meaner dwellings that encompass it. The well-proportioned windows and pointed door-way which adorn the massive front lend a certain air of faded dignity, as though the old place had once 'seen better days': while above the high-pitched roof peers one of those curious, rounded erections called hereabouts 'Flemish' chimneys. In conjunction with the ancient gables at the rear of the adjacent saddler's shop, this interesting old structure forms one of the most picturesque relics yet remaining of the Tenby of 'auld lang syne.'

Following hence the groups of stalwart fisher-folk as, with large air of leisure, they stroll adown the hill, we soon find ourselves upon the 'Peere made for Shyppes' which encloses the little harbour. Here stood in olden times the seamen's chapel of St. Julian, which was subsequently converted into a bath-house: thus 'cleanliness comes next to godliness'; and a pretty modern chapel now stands beside the quay.

Close at hand, in a sheltered cove, the lifeboat lies in wait beside a rudimentary iron 'peere,' which threatens to stretch its spindle shanks athwart the comely crescent of the bay beneath the fortress-crowned islet of St. Catherine.

The adjacent Castle Hill is crowned by a lofty watch-tower, some ruined outworks of the ancient city walls, and a handsome marble statue of the late Prince Consort, of heroic size: lower down stands a small but well-arranged museum, which contains a representative collection of local natural history, besides valuable cases of shells, coins, etc. Archaeologists will notice with interest the small alabaster group of St. George and the Dragon, rescued from a cottage in course of demolition at Tenby; and a fine specimen of a quern, used for grinding corn, found near Popton. The exterior is fashioned into the form of a human face, and as it is known that only the earlier examples were ornamented, this quern is considered to be of very high antiquity.

The seaward face of the hill is laid out in winding walks, with sheltered seats at intervals, where visitors and townsfolk congregate upon the sunny slopes to indulge in a spell of dolce far nicety, or to enjoy the wide panorama of land and sea that lies outspread around.

The return to the town may be varied by strolling along the broad, firm sands beneath curiously contorted rocky cliffs, aglow just now with masses of the white and red valerian. Clambering up a long flight of steps, we soon find ourselves abreast of the massive walls which in olden times protected the town upon its landward side, and terminated upon the precipitous edge of the clift in the quaint, ivy-clad tower that rises right here before us. These ancient walls are still (in spite of hard treatment in bygone times from vandalistic hands) in a fair state of preservation; and form, with their boldly-projecting towers and broken battlements, the most striking and picturesque feature of the town. They are perhaps seen to the best advantage from near the north-west corner.

Sauntering under the shady trees on the site of the ancient moat, we pass beside the south-west front, to which, as by far the most complete, we now devote our attention. Here we notice how the sturdy round tower which guards the converging angle spreads boldly out at its base; anon we observe another tower of similar form, through which the easy-going authorities of some past time have actually permitted a huge opening to be hewn to admit the passage of a ropewalk !

A stone's -throw farther on rises the broad bulk of the great St. George's Bastion, marking the entrance to one of the principal town gates, and pierced with five archways, in two of which the grooves for the portcullis may still be discerned. Overhead a gangway ran around the inner face of the wall, which is provided with lancet-holes for the use of archers, and is crowned with the usual corbelled battlements. Altogether this fine old structure presents a most picturesque appearance ; its ancient archways being frequently enlivened by groups of market folk passing to and fro, while the rough gray stones of its venerable walls are wreathed with masses of flowering plants. A number of shabby dwellings which encumbered the approach have recently been swept away ; one dilapidated old building with curious circular chimneys (said to have been used as a lazaret-house) alone being spared.

Beyond St. George's Bastion rises another ivy-mantled tower, near which we espy a stone panel let into the wall, bearing the superscription ' A " 1588, E. R.' Being interpreted, this inscription records that Tenby walls were repaired in the thirtieth year of good Queen Bess's reign.

Farther on the wall is pierced with a wide open archway, and terminates abruptly upon the precipitous edge of the cliff in a square, battlemented turret bearing a strong family likeness to the church towers of this locality. The walls seem to have been pierced with a double row of lancet-holes for the use of archers, the upper tier being commanded by a gangway carried upon pointed arches, while the lower row is accessible from the ground.

The Castle and Town Walls

The earliest historical buildings of which definite indications exist at the present time in Tenby are the castle, built in the latter half of the 13th century (probably by William de Valence, who had obtained the earldom of Pembroke by marriage with the daughter of Warine de Munchesney, who himself had married one of the Marshal heiresses) and the walls that encircle the small borough. Of a previous mound castle not a trace is discoverable, though such a post unquestionably existed, there being record of the burning of the wooden defences several times during the 12th and early 13th centuries. The present church, in its earliest parts contemporary with de Valence's castle, has doubtless preceded an earlier building. "This Church, which is revealed to us only by remains of its foundations, appears to be the edifice of which Gerald de Barru [fl 1190] was rector, and Maelgwn ap Rhys destroyer. [c1186]" (Laws, Little England p146). An admirable account of the castle and attendant mural towers, illustrated by early plans and prints, has been written by Mr Laws, and printed in Arch Camb for July and October , 1896.

Much of the walls and almost all of the towers have been removed, but enough still remains to permit the area of the medieval borough to be traced without difficulty. It need hardly be said that both castle and town walls have suffered many transformations. A stone in the west wall records one of these in the year 1588, and as the town was a scene of activity in the Civil War of the next century, many of its early features have altogether vanished

Notes On The Fortifications Of Mediaeval Tenby.By Edward Laws, Esq., F.S.A.

The military architecture of Tenby, extant and recorded, falls pretty clearly into five periods : —

1. Such works as were in existence before Tenby was a walled town. These are on the Castle Hill, and were perhaps erected in the twelfth century.
2. Towers, gates, curtains, encircling the town, probably built by Earl William de Valence in the last quarter of the thirteenth century.
3. Additions to and enlargements of the thirteenth century work by Earl Jasper Tudor, 1457.
4. Elizabethan restorations, 1588.
5. A few unimportant alterations made between 1643 and 1648.

Notwithstanding the chronological adaptability of these buildings, it will perhaps be advisable to consider the gates, bastions, and curtains in the order they occur on a plan of the town, so that their original form may be discussed, and attention duly drawn to alterations and insertions. In reconstructing the fortifications of Tenby we can hope for no assistance from map-makers, for the earliest existing plan was drawn in 1811; and though the whole town is included, Corporation property only is dealt with in detail.

The Rev. J. Evans, in a book called Letters written during a Tour through South Wales in the Year 1803, on p. 245 quotes from some unknown author to the following effect: " It (i.e., Tenby) had formerly twenty four bastions, and a parapet- walk wholly round the town; a wall on one side only now remains, having seven bastions, the centre one being much larger than the rest."

In 1803 there certainly were more than seven bastions in existence, without counting those on the Castle Hill ; for there are at the present day nine, if we add the one at Brechmaenchine, and the other near the Sluice, to those enumerated by Mr. Evans' authority.

However, it seems he was quite right when he put the original number of bastions at twenty-four.

We have absolutely no description of the work done in the thirteenth century, though, as will be seen presently, there are still considerable remains. The very extensive alterations and reconstructions effected by the orders of Jasper Tudor in 1457 also have to be sought out. His patent states that the walls had been unskilfully built and insufficiently repaired, and orders that they shall be made 6 ft. broad in every part, so that people may be able to walk round them for the purpose of defence. The Mayor, freeholders, and burgesses agree to dense the moat, and make it 30 ft. broad in every part. From this it is evident a moat was part of the original scheme of defence.

Tenby St Mary's Church

The church of St. Mary , Tenby, formed part of the possessions of the abbey of St. Martin de Seez in Normandy , and was probably included in the gift of St. Nicholas, Pembroke, made about 1098 by Arnulph de Montgomery to that abbey. As was the priory of Monkton at Pembroke. Church Book of St. Mary the Virgin, Tenby.

This is the largest medieval parish church in Wales and a testimony to the prosperity of Tenby in the late medieval period. The south doorway and the lower parts of the tower are 13th century, and the SE vestry and north porch are Victorian. The rest is all of c1450-1510. A cruciform two storied west porch built in the 1490s was removed in 1831. The nave has very wide aisles with arcades of five bays. There must have been a south aisle by the 13th century but it was widened c1500 when the chancel arch was removed and coved wagon roofs provided over the nave, chancel, and north chapel. The north aisle was added in the early 15th century but widened and heightened later. The long chancel is flanked on the north side by the irregularly shaped St Nicholas chapel of c1475-80 with a three bay arcade and an east window of 1885. On the south side lies the tower, with a later spire rising to 45m, and St Thomas chapel with a two bay arcade and a piscina probably reset from the chancel.

In the north aisle is a 14th century female effigy, a wall monument to John Moore, d1639, and a 15th century effigy of a skeleton representing John Denby, Archdeacon of St Davids. In the north chapel are the effigies of a 15th century merchant, Rector Hugo ap Owen, c1450, Margaret ap Rhys, d1610, and Robert Tully, Bishop of St Davids. The brass of the latter was modern. In the south chapel are monuments to Thomas White and his son John both 15th century mayors, Ralph Mercer d 1613, William Risam d1633. John Roch, d 1670, Thomas Roch, d1693, and Isabella Verney, d 146S, plus a 15th century font and bell lettered Sancta Anna. The pulpit is dated 1634. In the churchyard is one wall of a two storey building thought to have been a chantry chapel with a dwelling room for the priest above it.

The tower was used for centuries, by sailors, as a landmark navigational aid.

The nave and chancel both have fine 15th century roofs, the chancel roof of 15 x 6 panels is on 16 painted timber angel supporters with shields, each side, on stone 5-sided corbels. The church houses a number of exceptional 15th-19th century monuments including one to Margaret wife of Thomas ap Rees of Scotsborough (d 1610) and a 17th century memorial with recumbent figure of a wife below the kneeling figure of husband at prie-dieu, in armour. There are several tomb chests, including one which has small figures of 7 children; an ashlar tomb chest to Bishop Robert Tully of

St Davids (d 1482) with marks of a lost brass effigy and canopy, and others of Thomas White (d 1482) and his son John (d c1507), both finely carved figures in contemporary dress, and an effigy of a cadaver of a priest. Fittings include a 15th century font and a further 19th century late Gothic font, a 17th century pulpit and ornate 20th century oak stalls. ---- Cadw, Listed Buildings Database

1880 On Certain Monumental Effigies In Tenby Church, South Wales.

THE Annual Meeting of the Cambrian Archreological Association for the year 1880 having been fixed to be held at Pembroke, it can hardly be doubted but that one of the excursions will be to Manorbeer and Tenby. It is in anticipation of such a visit that I venture to give a few notes on the monumental effigies in Tenby Church, which, though not of a rare class, are yet of a description sufficiently interesting as to draw to them the attention of the antiquary.

1. In the north wall of the north aisle of the church, beneath an ogee-shaped arch enriched with crockets and a finial, and flanked by crocketed buttresses (the hollow moulding of the canopy containing the four leaved flower at intervals, whilst the soffit of the arch is cinquefoiled), lies the recumbent effigy of a lady. The original and proper position of this effigy has been transposed, and the head of the effigy placed eastward, a fault which ought to be remedied. Her dress consists of a cap and veil with a wimple over her chin; her gown is much abraded, and her sleeves are loose. From within these appear the close-fitting sleeves of the inner vest or garment. The hands are conjoined on the breast, as in prayer. The head is supported by statuettes of two angels, which, as we commonly find them in this position, are much mutilated; the feet also are mutilated. The stone out of which this effigy is sculptured is of a schistous nature. This monument is of the fourteenth century.

2. Under an arch in the north wall, west of the north door, is a high panelled tomb of the fifteenth century. On this lies the effigy of a corpse, represented as in an emaciated condition. This is partially concealed by a winding-sheet or shroud. The left hand is disposed at the side; the right hand is represented as holding the shroud. The drapery is well designed, and the sculpture is good. The custom of thus representing the body after death, in sculptured effigies, was introduced in the fifteenth century, and examples of this description are sufficiently numerous. The bodies are represented partly nude and partly covered by the shroud. In the sixteenth century the skeleton, "the lively figure of death", was not unfrequently sculptured on monuments; whilst in the seventeenth century effigies representing bodies totally enveloped in shrouds, the face only being visible, are not unfrequently found in our churches.

3. Between the chancel and a chantry chapel lying southward of it is a high tomb, the south side of which is divided into four recessed compartments with obtuse, ogee-headed canopies. Three of these are filled with sculpture in relief. In the first is represented the figure of a bishop in pontificalibus, the mitre on whose head is much mutilated. Two small female figures kneel before the bishop, one of which has the butterfly head dress. In the second compartment two similar figures of females are represented as kneeling before a statuette of St. Catherine. In the third compartment is the figure of a merchant kneeling before a faldstool. He is represented with his head bare, wearing a long side gown with gipciere or purse attached, cap and tippet.

In the fourth compartment is a mutilated inscription. On this tomb lies the recumbent effigy of a merchant. He is represented with his head bare, habited in a long gown, with a vent at the neck disclosing the inner vest. The sleeves of the gown are somewhat full, and cuffed or turned back at the wrists. The gown is belted round the waist, and on the right side is worn the gipciere a good example; the hands are conjoined on the breast, as in prayer. On the left side of the head is a cap attached to a tippet, which latter is worn over the left shoulder, falling down in front. Round the neck is worn a collar of rosettes. The head reposes on a peacock, whilst the feet rest against some animal, much mutilated. This is an interesting monument of a late period in the fifteenth century, and may be ascribed to John White.

4. Eastward of the above is another high tomb, of which the south side is divided into four compartments. In the first are sculptured female figures in relief, kneeling before the statuette of some saint, the drapery in which the saint appears is well defined. In the second compartment is the representation of St. John the Baptist, holding the Agnus Dei. He appears vested in a gown and mantle, with a nimbus round his head. In this compartment also are two female figures kneeling. The third compartment contains, sculptured in relief, a group of seven figures, more or less mutilated ; one is of a merchant kneeling in front. In the fourth compartment are sculptured three small figures of corpses, more or less enveloped in winding sheets. At the east end of the tomb a shield is sculptured.

On the top of this tomb lies the recumbent effigy of a merchant. He is represented bareheaded, with clubbed hair. He is clad in a long side gown, open in front at the neck, with the collar turned back and the sleeves cuffed at the wrists. On the right side the gipciere is worn; on the left, hanging over the shoulders, is the tippet, attached to which is the hat. The head reposes on a fish-like animal, and the hands are conjoined in prayer. This monument appears to be of or about the close of the fifteenth century, and may be ascribed to Thomas White.

5. On the left. side of the ascent to the altar is the matrix of a brass ; the incised effigy of a bishop, the indents of the mitre, and of the crook of the pastoral staff are clearly visible.

It is for some local archaeologist to determine the probable persons of whom the foregoing monuments are commemorative. Leland in his short description gives us no information. The slab on which was the incised effigy of a bishop is probably commemorative of Tully, Bishop of St. David's A.D. 1460-1482, who is said to have been buried in this church. The two high tombs on the south side of the chancel are commemorative of the family of White, celebrated merchants of Tenby towards the close of the fifteenth century. The eastern most being the tomb of Thomas White, some time merchant and Mayor of Tenby, who died A.D. 1482. The westernmost that of John White, the date of whose death is not apparent, but was probably later than that of Thomas.

1906 Old Font in Tenby Church Arch Camb

The interesting restoration to the Parish Church at Tenby, in the County of Pembroke, was carried out in January. The ancient perpendicular font, which for more than fifty years has been exposed to all weathers in the adjoining churchyard, has been taken into the church, and placed in the Chapel of St. Anne's, near the organ. This font was discarded by a former Rector, and its place taken by a modern one, which was also removed by the late Rector, the Rev. G. Huntington, and given to the Parish Church of Clarbeston, near Narberth, when the Chater family gave the present one as a memorial.

But to return to our old friend. In the year 1882 an attempt was made to interest the parishioners to have this font replaced in the church. It stood under a tree, on the north-west side of the west door, and so was kept in view of the public gaze; and by some kind friends, as the height of sarcasm, was filled with growing flowers— chiefly "forget-me-nots."

The font is of soft oolite (lime)stone, and consists of two parts : an octagonal basin, 33 ins. in diameter, depth 14 ins., and stem 9 ins., with base of shaft about 5 ins. On removal, it was found necessary to have an other base, This base is of limestone, and formerly belonged to a disused drinking- fountain, and was given by the Corporation of Tenby for the purpose for which it is now used. It serves to show that, being of limestone, the basin and base are of different periods. On removing the font from the churchyard, there appeared on the surface of the stem, immediately under the bowl, an octagonal line following the edge of the stem; in it a very interesting mason's mark.

Unfortunately, when the font was fastened together, this mark was hidden; hard cement was carefully avoided, so that when time font is again taken to pieces the mark will be as fresh as ever. It has been bonded together by a copper bar, so that there should be no fear of its splitting the stem. The cost of removal was defrayed by Mrs. Thomas Allen, and the work ably carried out by Mr. Morley, Borough Surveyor, under the superintendence kindly given by Mr. Edward Laws, F.S.A.

There was also within the parish a Hospital or free chapel of St John and there was also another Hospital or Spittel for lepers.

Besides these two

Chapel of St Julian

There was a Chapel of St Julian which stood on the quat at the foot of the castle. It seems probable that its sole means of support was the offerings of the traders and fishermen who visited it before setting out for a cruise and their safe return therefrom. According to Mr Laws, it was swept away many years ago. No records relating to it have been discovered.

The Carmelite Friary or Convent

Following Fenton and Norris, Mr Laws (Little England p256) refers to a friary of Carmelites founded by John de Swynemore on 1399, as standing on the western side of the parish church. Norris has several sketches of a house standing on this site which was called “the Convent” There was certainly some sort of building here in 1490 but there is no ground for associating it with Carmelite friars or nuns. Whatever its medieval purpose it appears to have become the residence of Dr Robert Loughor, chancellor of York, who married Elizabeth ,heirress of John Rastall (d 1585), chief Justice of South Wales. The only surviving feature of the house is a mullion of the large window which is built into the back premises of the modern house (Laws)

The Hospital of St John Baptist

Of this not a vestige remains. It possessed a well which was doubtless regarded as having curative properties, and was also the main source of the town’s water supply. Leland in his notice of the town says “ One thing is to be merved at, there is no well yn the towne yt is said, whereby they be forced to fesh [fetch] theyre water at S Johns without the towne”.

The Mawdlens, or Hospital for Lepers

Writing in 1896, Mr Laws observed of this establishment, “Some small remnants yet exist. They consist of a square chimney and some walling” at the present day these have almost completely disappeared. The Chantry Certificate does not contain any details of this charitable foundation.

Stone Structures Domestic RCAM

The delightful natural situation of the town made it a favourite resort of the neighbouring gentry and wealthy merchant princes of the tudor period whose handsome residences remained until the beginning of the 19th century, though in a state of steady declension towards complete ruin and decay. Our illustrations afford an excellent impression of the pleasing examples of Tudor domestic architecture in Tenby at the opening of the modern era.

Roman Coins

"In 1878 a coin of Vespasian was dug up on the Esplanade in Juxtaposition with goat and small ox bones. Two years afterwards a silver Bactrian coin was discovered close by. It lay two feet under the surface, and was unearthed while the workmen were digging out the foundation for Mentmore House, immediately opposite the new archway made in the town wall near the south west corner. It is a drachma of Menander, king of Bactria, in the 2nd century B.C. The authorities in the coin department of the British Museum, who kindly identified the coin for me, insist that it cannot possibly have been found in Britain; but for all that it was, and what is more, seems to have been placed where it was discovered in the 1st century AD. It is in the Tenby museum with the Vespasian. I myself saw the latter dug up (Laws Little England p44). Other Roman coins found at Tenby, and in the museum there, include a Marcus Aurelius Probus Carausius (found on St Margaret's Island, Diocletian).

Bronze Fibula

A bronze fibula, having signs of gilding, and other personal objects (a bronze [?silver] seal ring bearing the letter I, of the 15th century, and a medal of Pope Pius VI are specially mentioned, found in Tenby, were exhibited to the Cambrian Archaeological Association, in 1851, by a Miss Tudor. Nothing could be learnt of the present whereabouts of these articles.

The building soon after became a total ruin.

Scotsborough RCAM 1923

The House Of Scotsborough,By Edward Laws, Esq.. F.S.A. 1906

The reappearance of a building lost to sight for eighty years is a somewhat unusual occurrence. Such, however, has been the fate of Scotsborough House, by Tenby town.

During the first quarter of the nineteenth century this old mansion was in a ruinous condition, but the west front had been patched up, and converted into cottages. A terrible epidemic of confluent small-pox broke out in these tenements in or about the year 1824, and such of the occupants as did not die fled in panic from the place.

Since that time, Scotsborough has not been inhabited, and for many years after the small-pox outbreak was looked on as an accursed place.

In Pembrokeshire, ivy makes rapid and enormous growth ; and in the course of years so prodigiously had vegetation spread that it quite concealed two sides of the building at Scotsborough, and so masked the remainder that window-spaces and chimneys were hidden from view.

Mr. Stokes (the owner) has had the ivy and brushwood cut back, so that now it is possible not only to make out windows and doors, but to trace bondings, and so differentiate the dates of buildings.

Scotsborough stands on the eastern shore of the eastern branch of an inlet called Ritec in the Liber Landavensis. At several periods this creek has been reclaimed from the sea by man, with but indifferent success.

When well-to-do folks abandoned Scotsborough, its grounds were still lapped by the sea. Now, the tide has been shut out, but the land reclaimed is little better than a snipe-bog. There are indications which pretty conclusively prove that the earliest dwelling, or dwellings, on this site were defended by earthworks.

These fortifications were probably erected to protect the inhabitants from pirates, who scourged the western seas until Elizabethan times.

Apparently, the oldest masonry standing is a large room. It was entered by a well-marked Early English door. This is concealed in by a comparatively modern porch, and the matrix of a second is to be seen on the southern side. In the north-east corner is the base of a small round tower, which covered the entrance door, and served as a stairway to an upper chamber, which had certainly one original deeply-splayed light. In the eastern wall of this upper chamber a long, low Tudor window has been inserted.

In the angle formed by the little tower and the eastern wall of chamber a wall has been built up, part of the fortification of a ward or 'bailey,' shaped like an inverted T, the house itself forming the top of the letter L. This wall is pierced with triangular loops, to serve arbalasts. Now, the cross-bow went out of fashion in the beginning of the fourteenth century, so these loops give a rough date. To the southward of chamber is a room vaulted, and had an upper chamber. The lower chamber was connected by doors with an open courtyard. The chamber above have a turret in the corner, divided into two stories by a vault. The upper was, perhaps, a garderobe ; the lower a store, or lock-up. This portion of the house is not bonded to the Early English room. It was evidently built as a fortress, and the eastern wall is a fighting front, pierced with loops and covered by the T-shaped ward.

In the south wall of the vaulted chamber is an opening (window or door), which gave ingress and egress to and from the T-shaped ward in times of danger. This opening was covered by a loop in the turret, so closely placed that a pike or spear could be used to defend the opening.

The vaulted chamber is connected with and bonded into a crenellated wall, which forms the southern side of the little courtyard.

In this wall was once a large gate, which has entirely disappeared. On the western side of the great gate the building of the second period ends, and that of the third begins. This latter is purely domestic, and has no military features at all. It extends along the whole of the western front. The basement seems to have been divided into three chambers and a turret had huge chimneys. The former has fallen; the latter is of that circular sort common in South Pembrokeshire, and erroneously called Flemish. It is not bonded to the buildings.

This was the part of the house which was converted into cottages. There are no details left in these basement rooms, but upstairs are the remains of a fine chimney-piece which probably heated the great hall.

The windows of the third house resembled the chimney-piece in configuration. One may be seen on the north front, and there are indications showing that the western front had the same sort of light. These, however, were blocked up, and mean cottage windows substituted. The architects built a porch, i, in front of the Early English door. Over this was a room, and the stables,

The Owners of Scotsborough.

The affix " Scot " occurs in several Pembrokeshire place-names: Scotch Wells, Colby Scot, Scotland Wood, etc. ; but as Scotts never were a landowning family in the county, most likely the word is not personal, but means " tax," or "* payment," as in the phrases " Scot- free," " Scot-and-lot."

The earliest owners of Scotsborough on record are the Perrots. Lewis Dwnn gives two pedigrees of this family, A generation seems to be missing between John, who died in 1349, and Thomas Perrot, of Scotsborough, who negotiated the truce with Owain Glyndwr, in 1405. Irrespectively of these pedigrees, the earliest notice concerning a Scotsborough Perrot seems to be the grave-slab commemorating Isabella Verney, wife of John Perrot, in Tenby Church. She died in 1413; but there is a document among the Corporation (Tenby) papers by which John Chepman conveys Saltern and other lands to Thomas Perrot, of Scotsborough, and Alicia his wife; and as it is dated 3 Henry V, i.e., 1415, and witnessed by Philip Smith, Mayor of Tenby in that year, Isabella must have died in the lifetime of her father-in-law, and his second wife Alicia. A Robert Perrot was bailiff of Tenby in 1454, and Mayor in 1458 ; and a Jenkyn Perrot was killed in the Battle of Banbury, 1469.

John Perrot, of Scotsborough, was Sheriff for Pembrokeshire in 1551. He is also styled as of Cornish Down. He was son of William by Anne, daughter of Thomas Wyrriott, and married Jane, daughter of John Lloyd, of Tenby, and had an only daughter, Catherine, who married John ab Rhys, of Rickeston. This account is taken from Allen's Sheriffs of Pembrokeshire and does not quite accord with the story told by Lewis Dwnn. to ascertained facts. Catherine died the 17th day of September, 1614, and was buried in Gumfreston Church. With her disappeared the Perrots of Scotsborough, after an occupation of something over two centuries.

John ap Rhys, who married the Perrot heiress, Catherine, was a great-grandson of Sir Rhys ap Thomas, through a bastard line. He probably was buried in Gumfreston Church, by the side of his wife, Catherine Perrot, though there is no inscription on the stone.

John ap Rhys, the new owner of Scotsborough, served as Sheriff for Pembrokeshire in 1582. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, who married Margaretta Mercer in 1598 (see her tomb in Tenby Church). The Mercers had been friendly with the Ap Rhys family for some time. In 1596, Alban, eldest son of George Owen, Lord of Kemes, married Lettice (or Miriam), daughter of William Mercer, deceased : and Maximilian Mercer, of Ewelme, in the County of Oxford, was co-trustee with John ap Rhys of the marriage settlement Margaretta seems to have been sister to Madam Alban Owen ; and Rudolph Mercer, who married Anne, daughter of Edmund Smith, Rector of Tenby (see tomb in Tenby Church), was son of Maximilian Mercer, Margaretta's brother. Thomas ap Rhys was Sheriff in 1610, and the same year lost his wife in childbirth, she having borne her husband ten children.

Thomas buried her under a very elaborate monument in Tenby Church, on which is much heraldry.

Thomas ap Rhys seems to have lived to a good old age. and it was perhaps his senility that saved Scotsborough from destruction during the Civil War. Almost every house in Pembrokeshire that was capable of defence was beleaguered during that disastrous period ; but though Tenby town on one side, and Trefloyne on the other, bore full brunt of war, Scotsborough seems entirely to have escaped, and is not even mentioned in despatches. We find from " Mercurius Aulicus," September 26th, 1643, that Thomas Price, Esq., with other notabilities, signed an address, in which they declared that they would, to the utmost of their power, endeavour to reduce Pembroke Town and Castle to His Majesty's obedience, and to the utmost of their power preserve this county from incursions of shipping ; " but it does not follow that Thomas ap Rhys was a Royalist because he signed this document addressed to Lord Carbery, for nearly all of the twenty-four signatories at one time or other bore arms against the King. ,

Thomas was married in 1598, so he must have been getting on for seventy when he signed this letter, and that was at the commencement of the war.

Perrot ap Rhys succeeded his father Thomas, and married the sister of Sir Thomas Littleton, Lord keeper, etc.

They left two sons, John and James. It is not very clear which was the eldest. John took Scotsborough, James, Rickerston ; but as James served as Sheriff in 1655, and John not at all, it rather looks as if James were the elder brother.

John, at all events, succeeded to Scotsborough, and married Elizabeth Newsham, of Abersanan, county Carmarthen, and died June 2nd, 1672, aged thirty-seven. (See legend painted on Scotsborough monument in Tenby Church by his widow.) His brother James, of Rickerston, who married Anne, daughter of Sir Rice Rudd, of Aberglasney, Bart., was already dead, so James, the son of John and Elizabeth, reunited the properties. He seems to have taken Rickerston for himself, and left Scotsborough to his aunt.

From a document among the Tenby Corporation Papers, we find that she prosecuted one Henry Philp in 1682: in that he, Henry Philp, had violently broken into her property, called the Old Walls, and carried thence one pig and one sow, to the value of forty shillings. James ap Rhys, of Rickerston and Scotsborough, served as Sheriff in 1688. He married Elinor Powell, of Ludchurch.

October 3rd, 1681, James ap Rice, of Rickerston, granted to the Tenby Corporation lands known as the Cornish Park and Causey Park, but by endorsement reserves the quarry and limekiln in the Clicketts for himself.

September 5th, 1682, James ap Rhys and Eleanor his wife mortgaged Scotsborough to Griffith Dawes, of Bangeston.

In 1689, James ap Rhys and Griffith Dawes let Scotsborough for a term of ninety-nine years to Thomas Smyth, gent., Jane his wife, and Jane his daughter.

On October 8th, 1706, James ap Rhys, of Tenby, and Cecilia his wife, eldest son and heir of James ap Rhys, late of Rickerston, sells the freehold of Scotsborough to John Rickson, of Pembroke, merchant. So passes away the Ap Rhys dynasty. According to Fenton (p. 40), Rickerston was also sold early in the eighteenth century, in consequence of the failure of issue. He adds : " When I visited it, about twenty years ago {i.e., 1790), I was told by some of the old inhabitants, who had heard it from their fathers, that in that court had often been seen three or four coaches and six at the same time, and that the family were known to attend the parish church of Brawdy in such an equipage."

Be this as it may, probably the failure of cash rather than issue led to the sale of Scotsborough and Rickerston by James ap Rhys and his wife Cecilia — for it must be noted he calls himself the eldest son of his father James. Certainly, in 1770, an unknown Elizabeth ap Rhys restored the Mercer tomb in Tenby Church.

To return to Scotsborough. Thomas Smyth, gent., in a deed dated July 12th, 1693, underlet Scotsborough to Henry Hilling, yeoman ; the aforesaid Henry Hilling, of Scotsborough, yeoman, disposed of his interest to Walter Middleton, Esq., of Tenby. The lease under which they held was for lives, not for a term. It extended to ninety-nine years, if either John Smyth, Jane his wife, or Jane his daughter, should live so long. When it expired we know not, but as there was no clause enforcing repairs, it proved to be the destruction of the mansion.

The freehold remained in the hands of the Rickson family until 1764, when a William Rickson conveyed Scotsborough to his brother-in-law. Rev. Hugh Thomas, D.D., Master of Christ College, Cambridge.

Dr. Thomas left the property to his son William, whose widow having (March 19th, 1800) married Mathew Campbell, Esq. (cousin of the first Baron Cawdor), settled Scotsborough, under certain trusts, on Richard Parry, junior. ^ September 3rd, 1810, Richard Parry sold Scotsborough to John Owen, of Oriulton, Esq. This gentleman, who was created a baronet in 1813, sold on February 13th, 1817, to Jacob Richards, Esq., of Tenby. Charles William Rees Stokes, and his wife Harriette Jane, daughter of the late Rev. John Phelps, one time Vicar of Carew, and grand-daughter of Jacob Richards, purchased Scotsborough from the representatives of William Henry Richards, deceased, who was grandson of the aforesaid Jacob.

Mr. C. W. R. Stokes is one of the Rees family, originally coming from Roch, who claim descent from David Rhys, of Rickerston : so that the old house of Scotsborough has again become the property of the old family.

Lady Well

Two fields on Moysland Farm, on which is a strong spring now utilised for the water supply of Tenby. A few years ago some ruined walls were visible near the spring, and in the vicinity was found a white carnelian seal bearing a mitre and coat of arms of which nothing could be learned

Tenby Pier

The mediaeval pier built 1328 curved West and had the fisherman's chapel of St Julian dating possibly from the 15 century at the end.

The chapel became baths in 1781 and was demolished in 1842 when the pier was rebuilt to the present shape, the old pier being within the new larger structure which extends straight North west from the bottom of Pier hill Stone pier with parapet on seaward side and granite large coping stones on harbour side. Rough and irregular seaward side has various masonry breaks. Steps down at extreme left, next section built on rough and very large boulders, then a projecting rounded bastion, then further stretch of irregular masonry before pier-head projecting NE to seaward with 19century squared grey limestone masonry to battered walls and curved corners. Inner face is all of squared limestone with granite coping stones. One broad flight of steps down inset towards the left end. Raised square platform at seaward end with granite edging. Three cast iron bollards marked David & Co Foundry Saundersfoot and one former cannon. Seaward side parapet has rough stone coping, plaque records rebuilding after storm of 1896. Large boulders visible low down on the seaward side of the Pier could be ancient.

Prince Albert Memorial

The memorial to Prince Albert, Tenby, was erected in 1864-5 as the Welsh National Memorial to the consort of Queen Victoria, who died in 1861; a counterpart to statues in Edinburgh and Dublin. It is a Sicilian marble statue of the prince in uniform designed by John Evan Thomas (1810-73) on a tall pedestal and a square platform of grey limestone. The proposal to erect the Welsh national memorial in Tenby was made by the mayor, anxious that Tenby should take the lead in Wales.

The standing figure is some 2.7m tall, in uniform, with the mantle and collar of the Order of the Garter and holds a field-marshal's baton. The pedestal is robustly detailed with battered sides, chamfered angles and a heavy cornice. Coved lower moulding between large recumbent console scrolls extending out diagonally. On the pedestal are 4 tablets of white marble with arms of the Prince Consort, of the princes of Wales, the monogram of Victoria and Albert supported by a Welsh dragon, and to the front an inscription: 'Albert Dda, Priod Ein Gorhoffus Frenhines Victoria Albert the Good Consort of our Beloved Queen Victoria'. The high plinth has a front inscription recording the dates of foundation and unveiling, and the rear inscription reads: 'Born 26.8.1819 Died 14.12.1861.

The white marble has eroded significantly.

After the confiscation of alien priories and abbeys in 1441

After the confiscation of the property of alien abbeys, in England and Wales the priory of Pembroke, which held the advowson of St. Mary, Tenby, was granted in 1414 by the crown to Humphrey de Lancaster, Duke of Gloucester and Earl of Pembroke, who on 7 June, 1441, gave the same to the abbey of St. Albans. - Whethamstede, Vol.1. p. 46.

The Abbot of St Alban's passed the church on to his sisters in the Convent of St Mary de la Pre. This convent had been founded by King John "for the health of his own, his ancestors and his heirs souls and built for God, lepers and diseased women" in a meadow near St Albans.

1484 May. This year John Morton, Cardinal Arch bishop of Canterbury, obtained a bull from Pope Alexander VI, authorising him to visit and inspect the religious houses of the realm, as great irregularities were reported. The result of this visitation was a letter addressed to the Abbot of St. Alban's informing him that the state of affairs in the nunnery of de la Pre was most unsatisfactory. "The Abbess, Elena Germyn, was a married woman who had separated from her husband, and had lived in adultery with another man; at present she was the mistress of Father Thomas Sudbury, and the convent was run as a brothel." (According to Laws it seems more than probable that Elena Germyn, or rather her husbands came from Tenby, for this was a well-known name in the town during the first half of the sixteenth century).

As we all know the authorities of the Church work very slowly either that or the Convent had some very powerful or satisfied friends for it was not until 1528 that there was an order from the Pope; "in as much as we learn the discipline is greatly relaxed in the monastery of the nuns of the meadow.... it must be wholly suppressed and the properties, farms and all rights must be returned to the Monastery of St Albans".

1471. Jasper and Henry Tudor defeated at Tewkesbury and fled to Tenby. Thomas White, Mayor of Tenby assisted by the then rector hid them in the White's mansion cellars (under Boots the Chemist) then helped them flee to France. Henry returned later to become the first Tudor King. There was supposed to be a passage from the Church to the House of a merchant family called White. Today it seems very strange to realise that his mother Margaret, gave birth to Henry 8 months after she was widowed, when her husband had been executed and she was only 15 at the time of the birth.

1539. Dissolution of monasteries and St Mary's church passed to the Crown.

On the surrender on 5 Dec., 1539, of the abbey of St. Albans to the Crown the advowson of St. Mary, Tenby, came into the hands of the King, who presumably granted it, or probably only the right of the next presentation, to William Gwynne, a priest and parson of St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (London), and he by his will, dated 26 Oct., 1540, bequeathed the advowson of Tynby to his nephew William Rogers.

1656 10 July. The Commonwealth approved of the union of the parishes of Tenby and Gumfreston.
- State Papers.

1668. Guns and ammunition stored in the Church.

1711 18 September. Licence was granted by Queen Anne, on the petition of the inhabitants of Tenby, for the consolidation of the rectory and vicarage of St. Mary, Tenby, into one rectory to be called the Rectory of the Parish Church of St. Mary, Tenby. The patronage of which was reserved to the Crown. On the death of Roger Lloyd, the last sinecure rector, John Howell was instituted in 1712 to the consolidated rectory.

1770-1 or 1772-3. [Thomas Williams was mayor in 1770-1 and 1772-3]. The Mayor, Justice, Common Council, Burgesses and inhabitants of the borough and Parish of St Mary, Tenby, to Charles [Moss], Bishop of St Davids.

Petition

Humbly sheweth unto your lordship that we have lived in a very unhappy state in regard to our religious worship since our present rector has come here, whose vociferous method of preaching is truly disagreeable to us. And though we have made frequent applications to him to preach by notes as his worthy predecessor always did, and all other clergymen of the Church of England still do, yet he obstinately persists in following his methodistical custom of preaching extempore, and that so harsh and unintelligible to all capacities as he has prevented many well disposed Christians from frequenting the church. This obstinate behaviour of our rector being truly grievous to your petitioners, they, by their churchwarden presented him in your lordship's court at Haverfordwest at your lordship's last visitation, and also at two subsequent courts. In order to prevent your petitioners from having justice done then, our rector has for these two years last past, elected one Thomas Howells (a man of a despicable character) to be his churchwarden who acts agreeable to the rectors desire and has in his presentment contradicted your petitioners churchwarden's presentment. As your petitioners have hitherto had no redress, we humbly apprehend we have no other method of being relieved but by applying to your lordship by petition.

Your petitioners humble hope that your lordship will take their unhappy case into consideration; unhappy, we may truly say, as we cannot go to our own church with any comfort to hear his thundering incoherent doctrine, and grant us such relief as to your lordship shall see fit.

There is a memorial in St Mary's Church to Robert Recorde, he died in a debtor's goal. Robert Recorde the mathematician was born in Tenby. He introduced algebra into England and was the first to use the signs +, and =. His book "The whetstone of witte or the second Part of Arithmetike", 1557 on algebra, is mentioned by Sir W. Scott in his book The fortunes of Nigel.

Another is to Peggy Davies the old bathing woman.

1809. Peggy Davies, bathing woman died in the sea aged 82.

One with a connection to Pembroke is that to Dr Reid (Reid Douglas Arthur MD. JP.) who served in the Crimea with the 90th Regiment and at his death was the last medical officer to have served in that conflict. He died in London March 22nd 1924 at the age of 90. Previously his wife died in Tenby in 1912 age 74. They had 3 sons. Previously he had a practice in Pembroke and gave medical attention to the accident on Westgate Hill Pembroke in which two people lost their lives.

The old house - Tudor Merchants house.

Last survivor of the many fine Tudor mansions that formerly adorned Tenby. Dates chiefly from the 15c or early 16c and originally formed part of a much larger building including the houses on either side, approached by what are now blocked doorways. Built of stone with round Flemish chimney contains some original fireplaces and windows. On the one remaining original partition on the ground floor under 23 coats of whitewash was discovered some painted decoration on the plaster in red, black and white.

St Catherine's Island.

St Catherine's Island is a half-tide coastal islet. St Catherine's Fort is set upon St Catherine's Island which borders south beach in Tenby. The Fort dates from 1868-71, and the remains of St Catherine's Chapel were reportedly demolished during its construction. It was one a chain of Palmerstonian forts built to protect the Admiralty's ship-building yards at Pembroke Dock, this imposing structure cost £50,000 to build and was manned by 100 men and officers.

This ancient chapel site is located within the south-eastern section of St Catherine's Island and is thought to have been dedicated to St Catherine It is mentioned in documents of 1525 and 1585 and its remains in 1812 were said to have overhung the further end of the isle. The chapel was demolished in 1868-1871 when three third century AD Roman coins were discovered during the construction of the fort. Besides the 19th century fort an 20th century gun platform was constructed with a concrete base to mount a 4in quick fire gun surrounded by a low concrete wall complete with magazine.

Education: The State of Education in Wales(The Blue Book) 1847

I WAS in this town during the Christmas holidays, and found no schools in operation. It appears to be well supplied with schools, and to have considerable resources for maintaining them. Evidence of Dr. Falconer, M.D.

There are three society's for mutual assistance in the town. The funds of the three amount to between £1200. and £1300. The members are 326; nearly all from the town and immediate neighbourhood. These clubs, besides the more direct benefits of them, are useful in teaching habits of business to the members. In one of them, when they take their degrees (the Ivorites), the members are bound to sign their names; this is generally well done; out of 50 or 60 only two put marks!. Many of them as officers in the clubs have to read documents; in this they are rather deficient. The younger children are sent to school, but the feeling of the parents is chiefly to get them out of the way. The elder are kept at home as soon as they can earn anything.

The Dissenters make no objection to sending their children during the week, but as soon as they grow up they attend chapel. The Infant-school receives more support than the National from visitors and voluntary teachers. There is abundant school accommodation in the town. Several attempts have been made to establish mechanics' institutes in the town, and for lending libraries. These attempts have generally failed: there is, however, still a book club of 200 volumes on subjects connected with the professions of various mechanics; the books are well used and read. The lower classes are very fairly off. Their character is generally good, except the sailor population, who are some of them a very bad set. There are 20 or 30 boats, with three men to a boat. Few of their children go to school. There is no foundation for the reports of wrecking in this neighborhood. The people are very honest. This may in some degree be connected with the system of "bundling," which must be discontinued if the visitors were dishonest.

Bastardy is less frequent here than elsewhere in Wales.

There is a great disposition to subscribe for charitable purposes in Tenby. •

RANDLE WILBRAHAM FALCONER, M.D.

National School.-I visited the building in which this school is held on the 29th of December. It is part of the old castle, and occupies the extremity and summit of a rocky promontory. It is approached by a path winding upwards from the town through the ruined walls. The school is held in two rooms, the upper for the girls, and the lower, which is flagged, for the boys. The rooms are commodious and the windows command fine sea-views. The spot is exposed, but must be very healthy. The path approaching it runs along the edge of the cliff towards its upper end, where it is fenced with a very low wall, and would be considered highly dangerous for English children. In the boys' school there are a black board, cards on the walls, maps of the World, of England, three of Palestine, of the wanderings of the Israelites in the Wilderness, and a table of chronology. The writing was good. There were no prints of any kind.

Attendance on Sunday is not enforced; few however of the parents keep their children away on that day, though themselves Dissenters. No child can attend the Sunday who does not attend the day school. The master considers that this works ill for the Sunday-school, and that more would attend it if it were not restricted by this condition.

Infant School I visited the building in which this school is held on the 29th of December. I did not find the school in operation. The master had just given up his situation and was going to conduct an infant-school under the Rev. Wm. Curl in, St Saviours., Southwark. The school is something more than an infant-school. The premises are very good and convenient. There are reading and spelling cards on the walls, a clock, maps of the World, Europe, Asia, and Palestine, as well as a large sheet covered with pictures of animals drawn in their relative sizes. There is a small playground attached, containing a stepping-board, a circular swing, and see-saws with backed seats on them, Captain Cook's School.- The schoolroom is a ground-floor room in a stone-built and slated home.

The furniture consisted of the Captain's desk, two large desks, two tables, a clock, and five benches

Most of his pupils are tradesmen's, mechanics', and (a few of them) labourers' children.

Few only were present, and these (it was said) not the best scholars.

The 14th chapter of Romans was read. No answers could be had from the chapter The Captain is not in the habit of questioning his scholars when reading the Scripture!, He professes to understand the classics, several branches of the mathematics, and French (having been a prisoner in France nine years, from 1805 till the general peace In 1814). To questions proposed by me the scholars said that 'Pembrokeshire is bounded on the E. by Carmarthenshire', on the S. by the Bristol Channel-called so because it is the channel that takes us to Bristol-on the W. by the Irish sea-because Ireland is the other side.

Captain Cook informed me that only 20 seafaring men are engaged in the coast trade, who get from 40s. to 4.5s. a-month with provisions. The fishermen's earnings are very uncertain. About 100 are employed in this trade in the summer season: 20 men are employed in trolling, which, here, means dragging a large net with a 30-feet beam to spread it at the bottom; and 20 more in small boats, fishing and piloting. Did not know their earnings. Dec.30th, 1846. WM.

Mr. Eddy School.-The master speaks very correctly, having been, and still occasionally being a preacher with the Independents, He complained that his school had fallen off lately Some of the copy-books were fairly written.

December 30th, 1846. WM. Morris, Assistant

Miss FitzSimmonds's School.-The mistress appeared a very amiable and intelligent person, who had received a superior education and profited by it.

December 30th, 1846. WM. Morris, Assistant.

Mrs. Griffiths's School.-The mistress appeared to be a clever woman. She had taught navigation to many captains of vessels. She expressed herself well.

Several of the copy-books were nicely written.

December 30th 1846. WM. Morris, Assistant.

Sunday School.-Ebenezer School.-On the 27th of December, 1846, visited this Sunday- school, which belongs to the Baptists. The one superintendent present (the other being in Bristol) informed me that the Sunday-school and everything connected with that chapel had been greatly injured by the drunken habits of the late minister. There is no stated minister here at present. The congregation is supplied with ministers from Pembroke, Narberth, and Haverfordwest. The inclement weather, he said, had also had an injurious effect on the school-all the scholars had not been present since the late snow. I found only 2 classes present reading in the New Testament, collectively, and 2 elementary classes, taught simultaneously. One Testament class read the 13th chapter of St. Matthew tolerably well, and to questions proposed by the superintendent said that the seed in "the parable meant the Word of God-the sower, those who preach the Gospel-stony ground, wicked people-did not know what sort of people the thorns nor the wayside meant-good ground meant good people-those who receive the Word of God into their hearts. The other class read the 16th chapter or St. Luke, about the unjust steward-did not know who was meant by him- no ready answer could be had in either class. All the scholars present, and those who belong to the school, are under 15 years of age,

To questions proposed by the superintendent at the close of the school the scholars said that --Adam was the first man--God made him- Eve the first woman- Adam was made of the dust of the earth- Eve formed of one of Adam's ribs-Jesus Christ is the second Adam-he is the Son of God-died on the cross for sinners-is able to save to the uttermost those that come to God through him. A little girl recited an anniversary hymn and the 'Happy Negro,' after which the teachers and scholars sang a few verses, the superintendent prayed, and the school was dismissed.

Wesleyan. School. On the 27th of December, 1846, I visited this school. When I entered the superintendent was engaged in prayer. Having concluded, the scholars resumed their seats, and teaching commenced. There were three classes reading the Scriptures collectively; the elementary classes were taught, principally, by the individual mode.

All the scholars, both those present and those absent were under 15 years of age. There was no fire in the chapel, although the weather was bitterly cold. One female class read the 12th chapter of 2 Samuel. The teacher declined asking questions,

The girls in this class read with great ease.

Another class (boys) read the second chapter of St. Luke's Gospel,

. At this time the Reverend Mr. Woolmer came in; the books were collected. a girl, apparently about 13, repeated the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes very correctly to the minister, after which he addressed the school on the Incarnation of Christ. He then gave out a hymn (which was sung) prayed, and the school was dismissed

In the latter half of the year 1657, George Fox, the Quaker, visited Tenby.

He was well received, a Justice of the Peace desired Fox to stay at his house, and the Mayor and Mayoress attended his meeting. One John ap John, a fervent Quaker, left the meeting-house and strolled into the parish church, where he was arrested by order of the Governor. When Fox heard of this he sought out the Governor, and inquired why his friend was cast into prison. — "Governor:

" For standing with his hat on in the Parish Church. "

A long dialogue ensued, which ended most satisfactorily for the Quakers.

John ap John was released, and the Governor asked Fox to dinner. They went back afterwards to the house of the magistrate, and he with the Mayor and their respective wives, and several other persons, accompanied the friends to the water side, about half a mile from the town, when prayers were said.

1671. Petition from Tenby to Charles II for suppression of a market in Narberth.

1676. His Majesty (Charles II) retaining a gracious memory of the constant loyalty of that town and how much they suffered in the late times for their fidelity to his royal father and likewise considering the convenience and usefulness of the harbour there for trade and the reception and security of ships in time of danger and that divers able seamen are there bred for his majesties service upon all occasions ordered that no patent be given for a market at Narbeth.

1721. Thomas Athoe was mayor and was later hanged for murdering his nephew. Journeying home to Manorbier one night from a troublesome day at the market in Tenby he murdered his nephew. There had been family rivalry for a while and the dark and narrow bridge over the Ritec was too good an opportunity for settling the quarrel. His trial and execution brought a certain notoriety to the town as he was found innocent by a court in Pembroke and it took the Court of the Kings Bench in Westminster and a New Act of Parliament ordaining that all murders or robberies committed in, on or about the borders of Wales should be tried in any county in England, to finally bring him to justice.

The first Wesleyan sermon was preached at the Market Cross by Thomas Taylor one of Wesley's lay readers. His advent seems to have been peculiarly repugnant to the Mayor, who is said to have instigated a disturbance, which served as a pretext for the reading of the Riot Act and the arrest of the evangelist, who was strictly charged by the Justices to preach no more in the town. But the injunction was immediately disregarded. John Wesley was in Tenby in 1763 and again in 1784. Of the first occasion he wrote: --We reached Tenby about 11 o'clock; the rain then ceased, and I preached at the cross to a congregation gathered from many miles around. The record of the second visit is:--We reached Tenby soon after one. In the evening I preached in the street to a large congregation of rich and poor, all quiet and attentive.

1767. Five Arches originally St George's Gate Sir J. Banks wrote in his diary:

"The gate seems well constructed for defence as there is one gate in the tower and another into the town; so that when the tower gate is forced, that of the town is still to be attacked, and by no more men than can stand in the tower, where they must be subject to the offensive weapons of the besieged".

It only escaped destruction in 1873 through the efforts made by a public spirited resident who appealed to the Court of Chancery and obtained an injunction against the local vandals.

1767. Sir Joseph Banks also records that he saw within the walls most complete ruins of the old town, two large streets, the houses still standing though unroofed.

When the fishermen became less devout it was proposed that services should be abandoned, the rector, it is said was agreeable to this but still required the payment of the tithes. He agreed finally to a sum in compensation. It is believed that this was the last place in Wales where such services were held.

Tis therefore thought necessary to appoint two constables to impound all pigs that shall be found going about the streets and environs of this borough in the common pound". From Princes, pigs and people of Tenby by Wendy Osborne.

1790. The mayors accounts show 15s a week paid to ringers for teaching the town ringers to ring the new church bells to prevent their being broken.

1802. Lord Nelson and the Hamiltons visited Tenby for a performance of the Mock Doctor at the Blue Ball Inn in Frog St . They had been visiting Hamilton lands around Milford Haven and dined at Amroth Castle.

A fellow guest noticed that Lady Hamilton was attired in a white cotton Indian dress, red morocco waistband fastened with a diamond buckle, red morocco slippers and diamond buckles,. Nelson devoted himself to her the greater part of the evening.

The three then spent some time and £8 13s in Tenby where Mr Gore, a strolling player also in the town, wrote of - an exhibition which though greatly ridiculous was not wholly so for it was likewise pitiable and this was in the persons of two individuals who have lately occupied much public attention; I mean the Duke of Bronte, Lord Nelson and Emma, Lady Hamilton. The whole town was at their heels as they walked together. The lady is grown immensely fat and equally coarse, while her companion in arms had taken the other extreme; thin shrunk and to my impression, in bad health. They were evidently vain of each other... Poor Sir William! Wretched but not abashed, he followed at a short distance.

1852 first lifeboat house in Tenby

Built by the the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners Benevolent Society. It is located at the top of the harbour sands, tucked between the harbour wall and the house 'Upper Deck'. It was taken over by the RNLI in 1854, and continued in use until 1862 when a new larger station was built at the top of Castle Sands In 1888 the RNLI handed it over to the Admiralty for coastguard use. The lifeboat house was a simple shed structure, its two side walls formed by the Harbour wall to the west and the western elevation of Upper Deck to the east. The front elevation is of well coursed stone, with a large arched entrance with brick headers and a stone keystone. In front of the building is a well laid stone slipway, with a stone step up to the original floor level of the lifeboat house. The floor has been relaid (and heightened) with concrete in recent years, and a new mezzanine floor laid onto the western half of the original tie-beams. The roof structure is a lean-to one, higher against the harbour wall and sloping down to the east.

It housed a 10 oar rowing boat, some 28ft in length, and its distance from the sea, particularly at low tide, necessitated the use of horses and people to pull the lifeboat on wheeled carriages down to the water. Called Florence , a great awkward looking craft painted light blue, curved and rising to a peak each end. The crew wore jackets of parallel strips of cork bound together.

1858. The Tenby Grammar School was founded.

1863. Pembroke Tenby railway line was opened.

1869. St Catherine's Fort was completed. The island had a chapel on it in ancient times and 1864 a fort was started upon it as part of the defences of Milford Haven and the Dockyard of Pembroke Dock.

1871. Tenby Cottage Hospital was built, had water beds and an ambulance litter.

1876. The crèche and day nursery was opened. To enable mothers to follow their outdoor calling with the knowledge that their children will be duly taken care of, and also allow of the elder children attending school, in lieu of nursing the younger.

Tudor Merchants last survivor of the many fine Tudor mansions that formerly adorned Tenby. Dates chiefly from the 15c or early 16c and originally formed part of a much larger building including the houses on either side, approached by what are now blocked doorways. Built of stone with round Flemish chimney, contains some original fireplaces and windows. On the one remaining original partition on the ground floor under 23 coats of whitewash was discovered some painted decoration on the plaster in red, black and white.

1974. March 19th the last council meeting of Tenby Borough Council under the provisions of a Local Government Act (1972); which ended the corporate existence of the town. Councillor Mrs Iris Davies was the 584th and last mayor of the borough.

1857 Manners And Customs Of The People Of Tenby

IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. Cambrian Journal 1857

THE history of a little town is not without interest, nor are the labours and researches of those who prepare it to be deemed useless or unimportant; for the mind loves to dwell with hallowed pleasure on the records of the dead, and to treasure up the remembrance of the past.

The history of Tenby has not been neglected. Fenton in his Pembrokehire, and Norris in his Etchings, have done tolerable justice to its historical antiquities ; so that, without having recourse to rare manuscripts, difficult of access, little worthy of notice can be added. But though the interest excited by these historical revelations of antiquity may be greater and more permanent, a review of some of the habits and customs, the superstitions and foibles, of the former occupants of our town, cannot fail to prove an interesting study. Nor will the subject be entirely devoid of utility, if we but place the customs and habits of those who went " the way to dusty death," even so recently as at the beginning of the same century, side by side with those of the present inhabitants, and then observe in what we have improved, and in what fallen short. Perhaps we shall not, on the whole, be inclined to regret that we were not born in " the good old times."

The old year the year of our British and Anglo-Saxon forefathers began with Christmas, which was in past times, as it is still, the season above all others of popular customs and observances. With that merry season, therefore, we may conveniently begin our calendar of the customs of Tenby.

On Christmas-eve large crowds assembled, parading through the different streets of the town in procession, carrying lighted torches, which flared about in a manner that threatened at times a general conflagration of the whole town, a fire-engine being then, as now, unknown in Tenby. Cow-horns blown by many in the crowds, perfectly ad libitum, usurped the place of better music, and " racked the listening ears." Verses were shouted by stentorian lungs, containing the valuable information that "Christmas comes but once a year," while the joyous pealing of the Christmas chimes had a most cheerful and exhilarating effect. The insides of the windows of private houses were decorated with a variety of quaint devices, formed of the leaves of evergreens, principally box, myrtle, or holly, the red berries of the latter making a pleasing contrast ; and few places of business were to be seen without these Christmas symbols.

[As a boy we used to say:-

Christmas is coming

The geese is getting fat

Please put a penny in a poor mans hat

If you haven't a penny a happennny will do

If to haven't a happenny

God Bless You

At 4 A.M. on Christmas-day it was customary for the young men of the town to escort the rector, with lighted torches, from his residence to church ; extinguishing their torches in the porch, they went in to the early service, and at its conclusion the torches were relighted, and the procession returned to the Rectory, the chimes ringing till the time of the usual morning service. Then it was that the good folks met their friends and neighbours with a hearty grip of the hand arid, a beaming face, and each wished the other a "merry Christmas;" and, like the " fine old English gentleman," " while feast ing all the great," they " ne'er forgot the small," for the aged poor, going from door to door on their eleemosynary (giving of alms) errand, were rarely sent empty away.

Sometimes before, and sometimes after, Christmas-day, the fishermen dressed up one of their number, whom they called the " Lord Mayor of Penniless Cove," with a covering of evergreens, and a mask over his face ; they would then carry him about, seated on a chair, with flags flying, and a couple of violins playing before him. Before every house the " Lord Mayor " would address the occupants, wishing them a " Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year." If his good wishes were responded to with money, his followers gave three cheers, the masquer would himself return thanks, and the crowd again give " three times three," hip, hip, hurrah !

If, however, the eve of Christmas was a season of mirth and good fellowship, the day after (St. Stephen's-day) was stained with the recurrence, from year to year, of the barbarous and uncouth practice of "holly beating," which consisted in a furious onslaught being made by men and boys, armed with large bushes of the prickly holly, on the naked and unprotected arms of female domestics, and others of a like class; and as the short-sleeved jackets of the Welsh servants pointed them out as convenient subjects for the flagellation, their bleeding arms soon bore testimony to the unrelenting barbarity of their unmanly tormentors. It is not very clear what object the people of Tenby could have had in view by such a performance certainly it was no appropriate offering to the memory of the gentle Stephen; however, we will leave the usage and its commemoration to the past, and congratulate ourselves that the terrors of the law have extinguished this ill-mannered custom of the good old times. Leaving the former occupants of the town to the enjoyment of their roast beef and plum -pudding, we will pass on to

New Year's day.

[My memories of the early 1950's to 1990's -- always just after midnight the house had to be "first footed" by a dark haired man

Who would say

A Happy New Year

A Happy New Year

A pocket full of money and a cellar full of beer and a big fat pig to last you all the year

He would come in the front door and open the back to let the back luck of the previous year fly out

He carried a silver coin and a piece of coal and was given a glass of home made wine]

In the first place, then, there was a general desire to see the old year out and the new year in, which was done according to the several tastes of different parties. Some danced the old year out, some sung it out, some drank it out, for the love of " Auld Lang Syne," some few prayed it out, but very many walked it out, which was done to the intense annoyance of invalids, and of good musicians. For the promenaders, judging that music should herald in the new year, sung away in total defiance of all rules of melody and harmony, perfectly regardless of their distracted auditors, such verses as the following :

" Get up on New Year's morning,

The cocks are all a-crowing ;

And if you think you're awake too soon,

Why get up and look at the stars and moon ;

But get up on New Year's morning."

These lines also are sung in some rural parishes near

Tenby :

" The roads are very dirty,

My shoes are very thin,

I wish you a happy New Year,

And please to let me in."

It is easy to see that the object nearest the singers hearts was, that all who were asleep should "

awake from their slumbers." But there was another reason for the early relinquishment of the downy pillow, as urged by the discordant but importunate singers. To rise early on New Year's morning was generally considered "lucky," on the principle that, as the year was begun, so it would be continued day by day till the next New Year's morn ; for this reason, also, the good and thrifty housewife managed that a fresh loaf should be brought into the house on that morning, while a perfect and rigid quarantine existed with regard to female visitors, till the threshold had been crossed by one of the masculine gender ; and numberless were the instances always at hand illustrative of the evil to be avoided, and luck gained, by the continuance of so ridiculous and, as far as the fair sex were concerned, so unflattering a custom. Even now many people object to the entrance of a female before the incoming of one of the other sex.

From an early hour of the morning a continued assault was made on the knockers by boys and girls with their "New Year's water." Their equipment consisted of a tin, or earthenware cup, filled with spring water, drawn fresh from the well that morning, and a bunch or sprig of box, myrtle, or other evergreen immersed, with which they would sprinkle the hands and faces of those they met, receiving in return a trifling gratuity. When one of these youngsters was admitted into a house, every room from kitchen to attic was sprinkled by him, as well as the inmates themselves. The fee for this performance ranged, according to the liberality of the donor, from copper to silver coins. Among the numerous snatches of songs sung during the ceremony, we subjoin the following, which we quote from the Archceologia Cambrensis, 1849, p. 141, the verse having been taken down by the Rev. J. B. Smith, late curate of Tenby, from the lips of the children themselves :

"Here we bring new water from the well so clear,
For to worship God with, this happy new year
Sing levy dew, sing levy dew, the water and the wine,
With seven bright gold wires, and bugles that do shine ;
Sing reign of lair maid, with gold upon her toe,
Open you the west door, and turn the old year go
Sing reign of fair maid, with gold upon her chin, Open you the east door, and let the new year in."

But of all the holiday seasons kept by the inhabitants of Tenby, the most interesting was the "Maying time ;" for in the thorough innocence and beautiful simplicity of its amusements, which were joined in by all ages and sexes, there was everything to admire, and nothing to regret. On May-eve the inhabitants would turn out in troops, bearing in their hands boughs of thorn in full blossom, which were bedecked with other flowers, and then stuck outside the windows of the houses. May-poles were reared up in different parts of the town, decorated with flowers, coloured papers, and bunches of variegated ribbon.

On May-day the young men and maidens would, joining hand in hand, dance round the May-poles, and "thread the needle," as it was termed. A group of from fifty to 100 persons would wend their way from one pole to another, till they had thus traversed the town. Meeting on their way other groups, who were coming from an opposite direction, both parties would form a "lady's chain," and so pass on their respective ways. The Maypoles belonged to the children of the several localities in which they were erected, and it was the custom for the possessors of a pole to endeavour to pull down those set up in other places. A watch was therefore left round each, and frequently the parents would mount guard to repel the daring invaders. If, however, a surprise was effected, and the assault proved successful, both parties joined in the joke, and everything proceeded amicably. A superstitious notion prevailed that it was fatal for any person to pick up a piece of hawthorn in flower, if found broken off on the road.

Whit-Monday succeeded, when a women's benefit club walked in procession to church, with band and banners before them, and bunches of flowers in their hands. After the service they dined, and wound up the evening by dancing "Sir Roger de Coverley," "John Saunders," and executing various other Terpsichorean feats. Large parties were in the habit of visiting Caldy Island, there to pass away their time with rabbit and puffin shooting, and pic-nics on the beach. As the entertainments were not governed by the laws of temperance, the boatmen were not always in a fit condition to take charge of those who had committed themselves to their care. Hairbreadth escapes from a watery grave were very frequently experienced.

A passing notice of the roystering hay-making customs must not be omitted. If any one was so unfortunate as to enter a field at hay-making time, he or she was immediately pounced upon by the hay-makers of the opposite sex, tossed about on the hay-cocks, and bound with hay bands, till a species of "black mail" had been levied. However inclined to resist, the victim, laid on his back in the broiling sun, was soon obliged to sue for quarter.

The ceremony when performed on females, was termed "giving them a green gown," and when on one of the other sex, "stretching their backs." Neither age or condition was respected, and a hay-field was therefore carefully avoided.

We must not neglect to make mention of St. Crispin's day, the 25th of October. An effigy was made up, and hung on some elevated and prominent place (the steeple for instance) on the previous night. On the morning of the saint's day it was cut down, and carried about the town, a will being read in doggerel verse, purporting to be the last testament of the saint, in pursuance of which the several articles of dress were distributed to the different shoemakers ; at length nothing remained of the image but the padding, which was kicked about by the crowd. As a sort of revenge for the treatment given to St. Crispin, his followers hung up the effigy of a carpenter on St. Clement's-day, 9 the 23rd of November.

We now approach the season of the year when the darker superstitions of our forefathers come into play. Witchcraft, spell-working, and other superstitions were extremely popular in years gone by, and many strange tales are narrated how such-and-such persons were bewitched how such-and-such witches were caught, by making them sit on a chair, and then sticking them through the chair with a two-pronged fork how others saw the spirits of their intended consorts. Nor are there tales wanting of some who had made compacts with the evil one, and how the latter, at the expiration of the contract, came and took away the victim, leaving behind a sulphureous smell. Stories are also told of coffins having been opened, and nothing but stones found in them, Satan having carried off the body, the existence of resurrectionists never once entering into the calculation of the narrators. As it would exceed our limits to give place to all the well attested ghost stories, we will be content to draw the reader's attention to a few of the charms, or spells, employed by love-sick maidens for the purpose of seeing into futurity, and more especially to be favoured with a glimpse of their husbands. For the proper working of these spells, or charms, there were various things indispensable, the absence of any of which was fatal to their successful termination.

The favourite time of the year for these performances was "All Hallows'-eve," when it was customary for females to go alone to cross-roads at midnight, and, having raised a little of the ground, to sow some hemp seed, chanting the while,

"Hemp seed I sow,
Hemp seed I'll mow ;
Whoe'er my true love is to be,
Come rake this hemp seed after me."

It has been affirmed that the shape of the person sought came and raked the hemp seed, while some sowers have been frightened by actually feeling the rake touch their legs.

Another means employed to bring about the same result was to place a table in the kitchen, or hall, to set thereon meat and drink, together with a lighted candle, then putting a wet article of female wearing apparel on a chair before the fire, the expecting fair one would hide in a closet, or cupboard, and patiently wait to see whether any person would come and turn the article. If the person appeared, the same year was to see her a bride ; some, we have been informed, have been much terrified by seeing the apparition of a coffin.

A third recipe was as follows : bore nine holes in the blade bone of a shoulder of mutton; put it under the pillow to dream on ; also place your shoes at the foot of the bed, in the shape of a T, saying these words :

" I put my shoes in the shape of a T,
Hoping my true love for to see,
Not in apparel or array,
But in his clothes he wears every day."

This was pronounced to be remarkably efficacious.

[It is a curious circumstance that we are informed by Giraldus Cambrensis (Itin. i. 11) that the practice of divination by the blade of a shoulder of mutton was introduced into Pembrokeshire by the Flemings, who were brought there under the Anglo-Normans ; and he gives us some curious instances of the purposes to which it was applied. T. W]

We must not omit to notice the way to get a person cured who had been bewitched, the more so as, since the commencement of this year (1857), several cases of supposed witchcraft have been brought before the public in the newspapers, and the recipe for the cure in 1857 is almost a transcript of that of 1757. The finger nails of the bewitched are to be pared close, the parings thrown into the fire, while a near relation of the afflicted stands at an open window. The witch is then seen approaching, writhing in great agony, and when she sees the look-out she will say, " How is so-and-so £ " The answer is, " Very bad to-day." The witch then rejoins, " Poor thing, God bless her then," and immediately the afflicted person regains her strength.

The belief in " corpse lights," or " corpse candles," and " spectral funerals," was formerly prevalent, and is still partially so. The appearance of the former is supposed to betoken the death of some member of the family round whose dwelling-place the light is seen first to hover, and then take the road to the church-yard. It is also seen, some time beforehand, flickering over the place where a fatal accident is about to happen. The appearance of the spectral light is most capricious, comes at no certain time, and is not seen by everybody. The latter (the spectral funeral) bears the shadowy likeness of the persons who will form the funeral procession, and the accompaniments of the rites of sepulture are also visible.

Stories are told of persons returning home at midnight who have become entangled in the phantom procession, and have failed to release themselves, until they had become aware, either by seeing the name on the coffinplate, or learning from one of the assemblage, whose death was thus foreshown.

But before closing our remarks on the superstitious observances celebrated by the old inhabitants of Tenby, let us say a passing word on the funerals. These were seldom select. All who desired to testify respect or regret for the departed, as well as the surviving relatives, were expected to attend, due publicity having been given.

At the appointed hour multitudes met at the house where the corpse lay, and where sometimes a short religious service was performed. They then slowly accompanied, promiscuously, the mortal remains to their resting-place, chanting, on the way, verses of psalms or hymns, expressive of sentiments apt to the occasion, to well known and mournful music, a small knot of singers, who acted as a leading choir, generally heading the procession. The custom of sending out to the waiting crowds " mulled beer" in tankards, which were passed from hand to hand, and mouth to mouth, each taking a passing toll, contrasted rudely with the general solemnity of the arrangements.

Before concluding this brief notice of the customs and holiday usages of the former inhabitants of Tenby, we must own our inferiority to them in one essential, namely, the religious feelings and habits of the fishermen. Although we may, in the nineteenth century, pride ourselves on superior knowledge, and other advantages possessed by us, though we may congratulate ourselves on being less barbarous and superstitious, yet, in some cases, we also may learn a lesson from our predecessors, and, while avoiding their errors, still follow them with advantage in whatever is good. The following may be quoted without much injury to the moral or religious character of those concerned:

" Situated on the end of the old pier head once stood St. Julian's Chapel. In this edifice service was regularly performed : previous to their setting out, prayers were offered up before the assembled fishermen, for safety to themselves, and success to their undertakings : one half- penny was paid the officiating minister, as an acknowledgment for each man, and one penny for each boat ; and, as there could be no mistaking the zeal of those frequenting the service, we may not disbelieve the traditions of those old times, that the draughts of fish taken were all but miraculous. The fishermen did not consider their duty performed till they had offered up thanksgivings in the unostentatious chapel for their safe return and preservation from an element in whose every wave death lay in ambush

The chapel was converted into a bath, then into a blacksmith's storehouse, and finally torn down with the old pier head ; a new pier head has been erected, but we fear the fishermen of the present day do not see the necessity for another St. Julian's Chapel.

Athoe Thomas 1721 Thomas Athoe was mayor of Tenby and was later hanged for murdering his nephew "Journeying home to Manorbier one night from a troublesome day at the market in Tenby he murdered his nephew" There had been family rivalry for a while and the dark and narrow bridge over the Ritec was too good an opportunity for settling the quarrel His trial and execution brought a certain notoriety to the town as he was found innocent by a court in Pembroke and it took the Court of the Kings Bench in Westminster and a New Act of Parliament ordaining "that all murders or robberies committed in, on or about the borders of Wales should be triable in any county in England" to finally bring him to justice

Howells Thomas 1772 a man of a despicable character ChurchWarden St Mary's Church Tenby

The Mayor, Justice, Common Council, Burgesses and inhabitants of the borough and Parish of St Mary, Tenby, to Charles Moss, Bishop of St Davids Thomas Williams was Mayor in 1770-1 and 1772-3

Petition

Humbly sheweth unto your lordship that we have lived in a very unhappy state in regard to our religious worship since our present rector has come here, whose vociferous method of preaching is truly disagreeable to us And though we have made frequent applications to him to preach by notes as his worthy predecessor always did, and all other clergymen of the Church of England still do, yet he obstinately persists in following his methodistical custom of preaching extempore, and that so harsh and unintelligible to all capacities as he has prevented many well disposed Christians from frequenting the church This obstinate behaviour of our rector being truly grievous to your petitioners, they, by their ChurchWarden presented him in your lordship's court at Haverfordwest at your Lordship's last visitation, and also at two subsequent courts In order to prevent your petitioners from having justice done then our rector has for these two years last past elected one Thomas Howells a man of a despicable character to be his ChurchWarden who acts agreeable to the rector's desire and has in his presentment contradicted your petitioners ChurchWarden's presentment As your petitioners have hitherto had no redress, we humbly apprehend we have no other method of being relieved but by applying to your lordship by petition

Your petitioners humble hope that your lordship will take their unhappy case into consideration unhappy, we may truly say, as we cannot go to our own church with any comfort to hear his thundering incoherent doctrine, and grant us such relief as to your lordship shall see fit There were about 70 signatories

“Dreadful accident and loss of lives at Pembroke Dock Pembroke 23 July 1866

The town of Pembroke was, on Monday evening last, the scene of one of the most alarming accidents which have occurred here for many years past From the particulars which have been ascertained it appears that about six o'clock in the evening a party consisting of women and lads and children about 14 in number, were returning from a hay-field in Lamphey Lane in a waggonette drawn by one horse The horse and vehicle were the Property of Mrs Truscott of the White Hart Inn and when they had arrived nearly opposite the Dragon Hotel the belly band gave way and the horse began to kick This so alarmed the women and children that they began to scream and by this means so frightened the animal that it took off at a furious pace down towards the Lion Hotel and from there up by the Old Castle Here PC Davies No 24 attempted to stop the animal but was unable to do so and also got much hurt in the attempt, the shaft having struck him in the side From thence the animal continued its career over the steep and sinuous Westgate Hill and eventually struck the vehicle against the old parapet wall of the Calvinistic methodist Chapel when both horse and vehicle got turned completely over

In this terrible crash a young woman about 17 years of age named Dorcas Ann Truscott, a daughter of Mr W H Truscott of the " Red White and Blue" Inn Quay Pembroke was killed on the spot, while her younger sister, named Olwin Lavinia, age 14 years received a frightful scalp wound, sustained such other serious injuries that she is not expected to survive Ann Moy, a widow , about 60 years of age - so dread fully injured that her death is momentarily expected A lad named John Haran who was driving the horse at the time and his sister - both seriously injured A woman named Elizabeth Williams - much injured Lettice James , a woman who jumped out before the vehicle was turned over, very seriously injured The whole of the other occupants including an infant in arms, are more or less injured Dr H P Jones and Dr Reid were at once in attendance and rendered all the medical assistance they could Extract from the Haverfordwest and Milford Telegraph newspaper July 25th 1866"

Giraldus Cambrensis called Upton Ucketune and Uccetena another old name was Ucton.

Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments

Upton Castle

A small castle was built upon the site indicated in the closing years of the 13th century, probably by the third member of the Maliphaunt family who settled at Upton. (Walter Malefaunt, the third successive bearer of the name, appears as a witness to a grant of Aymer de Valence to the Hospitallers of Slebech in 1323.) In plan it appears to have been similar to Picton Castle, and may have been built by the same craftsmen.

Upton Castle Norris

A sketch by Norris made about the year 1800, shows its appearance at that time, since which extensive alterations have still further removed its earlier features, and there remains little beyond the gateway with its two flanking circular towers

Visited 4th May 1922

Arch Camb. 1852 II, iii, 196; Glynne Notes 1888 V v 125 Castles and Strongholds of Pembrokeshire 1909 p41

The castle was modernized in the 18th century and today is on private grounds not open to the public, however the castle grounds contain a fine arboretum managed by the National Park Authority.

Minor stronghold on creek of Carew river built 13c by a member of the Malefant family who died out in the male line with Stephen Malefant whose daughter Alice married Owen ap Gruffudd ap Nicholas of Dinefwr. 1564 their descendant Rhys ab Owen took the name Bowen after the English manner. 18c purchased by John Tasker and then passed through marriage into the hands of the Rev William Evans 1927 purchased by Stanley Neale a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Pembroke; containing 12 inhabitants. This parish, which was withdrawn, a few years since, from the hundred of Narberth, and included in that of Castlemartin, is exceedingly small, and inhabited only by one gentleman's family, who are proprietors of the whole. It occupies an elevated site above a creek of Milford Haven, and was formerly distinguished for its castle, which, if not originally built, was anciently occupied, by the family of Maliphant, from whom it passed by marriage to that of Bowen. Upton Castle and its dependencies were subsequently purchased by Mr. Tasker, who devised his estates among his three nieces, one of whom, by marriage, conveyed the castle and a portion of this property to the Rev. William Evans, who is now owner of the parish. The remains of the old castle, incorporated in the buildings of the present mansion, consist principally of the entrance gateway, and the two circular bastions by which it was defended; one of these now forming a projecting window in one of the apartments. The seat occupies a charming situation, and commands picturesque views of the surrounding country, and of the ruins of Carew Castle, washed at their base by the converging estuaries which unite to form this branch of the Haven. Upton is annexed to the rectory of Nash. The church, a small edifice, is supposed to have been built at the same time as the castle, to which it was formerly attached. It contains some ancient monuments, among which is one having a recumbent effigy of a warrior in complete armour, under a richly sculptured canopy of stone: a clenched hand, issuing from the wall, forms a candelabrum for a taper, for the maintenance of which some fund has been probably left by the deceased or his relatives. There are also several mural monuments to more recent proprietors of the estate.

UPTON 1839 Lewis

Upton Chapel

dedicated to St Giles

RCAM

This small disused edifice stands closely adjacent to, but not adjoining, Upton Castle, though it is said that it formerly was part of the residence.

The building on plan shows a chancel (16ft by 10 ft 6in) nave (27ft by 14 ft) with a single bell cote above the west gable. In the south wall of the chancel is a single trifoliated lancet, now blocked, and a plain piscine. The chancel arch is a plain circular –headed cut(6ft wide) through the east wall of the nave. The entrance is in the south wall of the nave and has been modernised. The Jacobean pulpit is that formerly used in St Mary's Church Haverfordwest. The font basin is of the square Norman type (26in externally 18in internally 9in deep). It stands on a plain circular shaft and square base, the total height being 31 in. It is one of the most perfect examples of the type in the county (Arch Camb 1880 IV xi 295)

The roof and windows (with one exception) are modern.

Effigies – There are four sepulchral monuments.

Beneath the blocked lancet in the chancel is a 13th century mailed effigy which once stood on a altar tomb in the parish church of Nash. The effigy is of a large man 6 ft even without the lower limbs is considered to be the most ancient of its kind in the country reputed to be a Lord of Upton Drowned in a shipwreck as he was returning home from a long voyage used to be at Nash Church sometimes called the "Admiral".

Against the north wall of the nave and beneath an ogee canopy, is the effigy of a knight girt partly on mail and partly in plate armour. The figure is thought to be William Malefont who died in 1362 and is clad in a complete suit of Chain mail

The effigy of a female under an ogee arch in the north east corner of the Chancel. The corbel supporting the western pinnacle of the arch of canopy is adorned by a grotesque mask , rudely carved. This is suggested by Glynne to be the wife of William Malefant ,from the clothing the figure would appear to be from about 1380 1420 Did this figure also come from Nash Church?

All the above represent departed Maliphaunts of the 14th century

In the chancel is a much worn slab charged with a male full face above a long floriated cross. The head, which Sir Stephen Glynne, who saw it in August 1871, describes (Arch Camb 1888 V v 125) as that of a priest, does not seem from its present state to have been tonsured: the hair is curled over each ear, the head rests upon a rectangular cushion, and no priestly paraphernalia are to be traced.

Along the edge of the stone runs an inscription, practically obliterated except for the letters A C....LAM..IAR: PRE., which appear to be of the 13th century

On the walls there are mural tablets to members of the Bowen, Taskers and Evans families.

Stone Taper Holder Affixed to the north wall of the nave – apparently its original position at a height of 4ft from the present floor level and projecting from the wall 5 ½ in, is a man's clenched fist with a perforation for placing in it a light of taper. (Arch Camb 1888 V v 127)

Cross On the south side of the churchyard stands a stone cross five ft six in high with octagonal shaft; the base has been restored.

Quoting Llwynwormwood Papers

In a case submitted on 23 October 1722, for counsel's opinion in regard to the liability of the owner of Upton for payment of tithes on the demense lands of Upton, it was stated that the benefice was a chapel of ease belonging to Nash. The document adds that "there is a tradition that during the period of celibacy of clergy, the rector [of Nash] always lived at Upton with the patron, and had his diet there, and that there were then four instances within memory where the rector while he was unmarried had his diet in the house whereof the then present incumbent was one"

This benefice is a chapel subordinate to Nash Rectory, and from the earliest recorded institution the rector of Nash has also held Upton or Ucton.

George Owen in his list of benefices compiled in 1594, states that it was a rectory appendant to the manor of Upton, the patron then being Harry Bowen [of Upton].

The place was anciently called Ucceton, Ucton, Ockton, and Octon it is frequently mentioned in the records' Of the original castle, part still remains, together with the chapel, once used as a parish church, which has some interesting monuments It is said that the 13th century effigy, the oldest in the county, which used to be at the mother church of Nash and is now at Upton, is that of the founder of the castle and the builder of Nash church Fenton, who commented upon the disgraceful neglect of this monument, gives a tradition that this first lord of Upton was a man of gigantic stature, that he died at sea, and that his body was brought home and landed at Coshaston Pill He was probably a Malefant but there is nothing to show it The first Malefant recorded was Malefant Walter c1244 , who married de la Roche Avice, and as Upton was part of the great possessions of the de la Roches, it may have come to the Malefants by this marriage Malefant Walter was a witness to the charter of Thomas, Bishop of St David's 1244-1256 to John de la Roche, and according to the Annales Cambrie he was killed fighting the Welsh, at Kilgerran in 1258,

The successor of Henry was his son Sir Thomas,

Malefant Sir Thomas died 8th May 1438 and was buried in the Church of St Bartholomew the Less in Smithfield In the epitaph on this tomb, preserved by Stow," he is described as Lord of Wenvoe and St George's in the county of Glamorgan and of Ockeneton Upton and Pile Pill in the county of Pembroke, but he seems to have been a Glamorganshire magnate rather than a Pembrokeshire one

Upon the death of Sir Thomas, Wenvoe and the Glamorgan estates passed to his son Edmond upon the death of whose grandson John Malefant without issue, in the reign of Henry VII, they were escheated to the Crown

In the same tomb as Sir Thomas, was afterwards buried his wife, Margaret Astley, of whom a curious story, illustrative of the lawlessness of the times, is told in the Rolls of Parliament" Margaret, in her petition in 1439, sets forth that immediately after her husband's death, of which she was then in ignorance, Lewis Leyson, a Glamorgan man and trusted servant of Sir Thomas, enticed her from Upton by forged Letters stating that Gruffydd ap Nicholas and other enemies were lying in wait for her Leyson conveyed her to Tythegston, near Bridgend, and after failing in his attempt to marry her in the church, imprisoned her in the fortified manor house there, whence she escaped to her mother in London --Leyson appears to have fled from the country" It was a second Edmond the father of John whom William Earl of Pembroke beheaded in 1469 desired by his will that his daughter Jane should be married," but Edmond married elsewhere From a charter of 1441 it appears that Malefant Margaret 1441 nee Astley held the Malefant Pembrokeshire estates of Upton, Pile, one fourth of the manors of Hodgoston and Burton for her life " how they descended afterwards is not clear

According to Sir S Meyrick Heraldic Visitations Ap Nicholas Owen second son of Griffith ap Nicholas of Newton or Dinevour married

Warren: A small parish in Pembrokeshire 5 miles SW of Pembroke. Its Church has a tall tower constituting a prominent landmark, but architecturally uninteresting though it preserves a piscina in the S Chapel and an early font. From Warren a road runs south to the coast where the cliff scenery is exceptionally fine. A cliff camp on a promontory encloses a circular chasm (entered at the bottom by the waves through an arch in the face of the cliffs) which is called "The Devil's Punchbowl" and forms a sea cauldron. Off the coast rise two isolated rocks named the Stacks which are the breeding grounds for puffins, guillemots, razor bills and other sea birds. They assemble in thousands at the beginning of May and depart at the end of July. These rocks are really in the parish of Castlemartin.

Acc'to Lewis - A Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1834.

Waren: A parish in the hundred of Castlemartin County of Pembroke 5 miles SW of Pembroke 963 containing 169 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in the south western part of the county is of considerable extent reaching to the coast of the Bristol Channel by which is bounded on the South and South West. It includes the small village of Lenny, on the western coast from which a point of land, projecting into the sea derives its name of Lenny head. The living is a discharged vicarage in the archdeaconry and diocese of St David's, rated in the King's books at £4 8s 11/2d., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 Parliamentary Grant and in the patronage of the Bishop of St David's. The church dedicated to St Mary is an ancient building with a square tower surmounted by a spire of stone forming a conspicuous object on this part the coast. In the Churchyard is the pedestal of an ancient cross, in which is inserted the head of one of the circular kind. According to tradition, there was an ancient religious house on a farm called Warren; but there are no remains of it, and the only records of its existence are the names of several places in the immediate neighbourhood, which would appear to have been derived from such an establishment. Vestiges of an ancient fortification of a circular form and still in good state of preservation may be seen in a field between this place and the parish church of St Twinnel; it was defended by a triple rampart, having an entrance on the west side, an appears to have been a place of great strength the area within the inner rampart, which is the most entire is about one acre in extent. It appears to have formed a link in a chain of fortifications by which the South West coast were protected from the piratical incursions of the Saxons and the Danes. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor amounts to £123 19s.

Pre Norman:

Phillips suggests that Laws may have found an early Christian burial site on the southern coast not far from Warren (P58)

Laws p57

. Edward Laws did excavate what he believed was a large early Christian Cemetery not very far away from the Church with over 200 burials and one special burial which was carefully covered by a large stone slab and among the items found in the grave was a piece of limestone with a celtic cross cut in it. One suggestion was that the cemetery dated to the 2nd Century AD.

He also found what the local labourers described as the ruins of a chapel standing east and west 16ft by 12ft which it was believed had an east window and a stoup 14in by 8in of red sandstone was also found.

Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments records:

Brownslade Tumulus:

This is a much-disturbed sepulchral mound standing in a field called Church-ways belonging to the farm of Brownslade. It was partially excavated in 1880, when remains of burials of men, women and children were discovered on the south-eastern side, the bodies "packed in tiers" of at least three deep. With the remains were found a piece of fine bronze which might have been an ear-ring, a finger-ring, and a small brass ring with a rude pattern of spots punched on it and also a small stoup, which is now fixed in the wall of Flimston Chapel. Mixed with the human remains were animal bones, a few limpet shells, and a flint flake. A little to the north of this find was disinterred a human skeleton, placed on a roughly-prepared clay surface and surrounded by rough dry masonry; with the body was a horse's nipper, some animal bones and sea shells. In the course of the re-interment of the human remains in the centre of the mound, a cist burial was discovered about 3 feet below the surface; the bones were much decayed. In the cist there were some animal bones, a fragment of wheel-turned pottery, a piece of Chert stone bored for use as a hammer, and a block of red sandstone marked with V shaped lines. In the mound, but perhaps not connected with any of the burials was a flat piece of limestone bearing a roughly incised cross within a circle. Laws - Little England beyond Wales, 57-9, ill.)

Brownslade Tumulus Finds:

- (a) Wheel-turned pottery.
 - (b) A piece of fine bronze, possibly the remains of a finger ring.
 - 964(c) A small brass ring.
 - (d) A socketed pivot-stone, probably that of the door of the closely adjacent ruined chapel; also a roughly hewn stoup since fixed in Flimston Chapel.
 - (e) A piece of chert about the size of half a brick, with a deep hollow on each side - possibly a cresset stone from the chapel.
 - (f) A block of red sandstone with indeterminate markings.
 - (g) A flat piece of limestone with roughly inscribed cross within a circle.
- With the exception of the stoup all the above are in Tenby Museum.

Churchways Chapel:

This little edifice stood immediately north of the Brownslade tumulus on one of two fields called Upper and Lower Church Hill (Tithe Schedule, No 376-7). The remains of foundations are now practically buried beneath the sand. When opened up in 1880 the chapel was found to be "very tiny, being only 16 feet by 12 feet and pitched with water-worn stones". (Laws p57).

Crocksydam Camp

This is a promontary camp defended on three sides by steep cliffs, and on the land side by a convex rampart and ditch. The bank which has a length of 300 ft rises 3 ft and falls 8 ft to a 5 ft ditch. The enclosed area of about one acre is rough and exposed; the surface shows slight depressions which may be hut circles. The mid-rampart entrance has a width of 10 ft. The ends of the bank are strengthened by a few large slabs which appear to occupy their original position. Visited 24th May 1922.

Merrion Camp

This earthwork stands immediately north of Merrion Court, on a field called Castle Park. It has greatly suffered of recent years from cultivation

Lt Col W. Ll Morgan R.E. Reports of it in 1889:-

An irregular oval 300ft by 240ft on fairly level ground but slightly falling to the west and south with a narrow gully to the north. The main rampart is seldom more than 2 to 3 ft above the interior, with a 9ft fall on the eastern side, where the defences are best preserved; but 12ft overlooking the gully (where the ditch is 3ft deep). Here this first is the only defence.

To the east are three other banks the crests of which are 4ft, 2ft, and 4ft below the inner rampart. The ditches are on a uniform level with the ground outside, there is here no outer ditch. On the west and south the third bank disappears, and in its place is a level plateau 36ft wide; there is however an outer ditch 2ft deep. As there is no outer ditch where there is a third bank it is evident that the plateau is intentional and is not due to the destruction of the bank. The entrance is at the north west corner. – visited 24th May 1922.

St Mary Church Warren Parish of Castlemartin.

Restored in 1855 altering its appearance but barrel vaulting in nave and south transept suggests 13c. It has a tower with octagonal steeple.

Church closed - restored - and reopened 1988 by the German Army bases at Castlemartin.

The church has an unusual plan. The chancel has a north wall in line with the three bay arcade between a wider nave and a north aisle with a squint. Tiny chapels open off the SW corner of the chancel and SE corner of the nave, and a small gabled tower stands north of the aisle. The whole south side was rebuilt in 1870, in the porch is a tiny figure of a civilian under a canopy. There is a scalloped Late Norman font.

The lofty west tower has lancet belfry windows. The nave, south porch, and south transept are vaulted. They are 13th century but the windows have been renewed. The chancel was rebuilt in 1855. The porch has corbels for the beams of an upper floor.

Pembrokeshire parsons

There appears to be no very early mention of this church, which seems to have always been in the patronage of the Bishop of St. Davids as record shows that the Warren estate was held by the Bishops from before 1293.

On 20 June, 1638, this living, together with the parsonage and church of Lamphey with the glebeland, was leased by the Bishop to Thomas Mayarld, gent., for 21 years, at the annual rent of £26 13s. 4d.

On 26 Dec., 1851, the vicarages of Warren and Twinnells were united under an Order in Council. 1770 November 30.

Abr[aha]m Leach to the Rev. Mr Archdeacon [George] Holcombe at Pulcroghan a letter reporting the poor condition of one of the aisles of the church. A. Leach's father was tenant to his lordship for the tithes of Warren and had care of the repairs of the chancel in consequence of it. Lucas MS 1062.

Church very similar in basic outline to many others in the area; oldest of which is probably St Daniel's. Was the original tower added at the same time? One of a line of churches on the high ground running down the centre of the peninsular.

A peculiar Pembrokeshire style of church but differing in arrangement materially from Castlemartin. It comprises a chancel, nave, south transept, porch, and a western tower with stone spire. The tower and spire seem to be Third Pointed; the tower large and lofty without strings of division, but with stair turret at the north-west. There is neither buttress nor battlement, but a corbel-table near the top; the west door closed; the basement spreads outwards; the west window Third Pointed, and labelled; the belfry-windows are single, narrow lights and there is another kind of lancet opening on the north. The spire is not lofty in proportion to the tower, is octagonal, but not ribbed. Its only openings are a series of single lights; one in each face round the lower part. The lower part of the tower has within a plain vault and a modern wall has been added between it and the nave, perhaps for additional strength. There appears to have been once an aisle or chapel on the north. The chancel inclines considerably from the line of the nave to the north. The chancel-arch is a very rude, mis-shapen one, which can hardly be in its original state. To the north of it is an arched recess in the wall, perhaps a hagioscope. There are stone corbels inside the nave, on the north side. Most of the windows are frightfully modernised; but there is a closed lancet at the south-east of the chancel and another at the north-east. The chancel is long and well developed. There was once an aisle or chapel on the south side opening to it by a Pointed arch and by another to the transept. The sacristy is large. There are some stone brackets in it. The nave has rather a desolate look and is pewed.

The font has a square bowl upon a cylindrical stem which stands on two square steps. The porch has plain, pointed doors.

There is a holy well in the churchyard on the west of the tower, and the steps on which once stood a cross on the south.

Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments in Wales and Monmouthshire.

Parish of Warren:

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Mary 1920

The building consists of chancel (33ft by 16ft) nave (44ft by 18 1/2ft), South Transept (15 3/4ft by 11ft) tower at west end with short spire (19ft by 14ft) and south porch. The structure was restored in 1855 when the windows were renewed and the chancel rebuilt (Arch. Camb. 1856 III ii 331). The chancel arch and that to the south aisle are modern. The nave, south transept, porch and ground stage of the tower have plain barrel vaults of 13c date. In the south east angle of the south transept is a plain aumbry; in the east wall are traces of a blocked window with a pointed arch.

Many corbels are still in situ, notably those of the rood screen on the west face of the chancel arch. The tower has a pronounced batter, and is crowned with a corbel table and parapet. The spire has been rebuilt in stone in succession to a former wooden one which had become unsafe. The font basin (26 inches square externally and 21 1/2 inches internally) is perfectly plain, and bears marks of having had a hinged cover. It stands on a circular shaft and square base.

Churchyard Cross: In the churchyard is a restored cross, the shaft and head in one piece; it stands upon a base of three steps. Visited 24th May 1922.

The area has been inhabited from early times as the name Longstone (owned partly by Sir Hugh Owen and partly by John Campbell and tenanted by Roger Hitching in 1791) is believed to have contained the site of an old burial mound.

Warren listed as among those churches exempted. The goods, church possessions and benefices, in the diocese of St David's which have been diminished, impoverished, and destroyed by wars, fires, ruins, inundations of rivers, and other misfortunes and chances deservedly to be excused from payment of the said four tenths.

Historical records

1265 10 May Hereford.

Whereas John de Warennia and William de Valencia with armed men to the number of about a hundred and twenty men as well horse as foot, have now landed in the parts of Pembroke and keep themselves there, and many adversaries of the king and the realm from beyond seas, if they knew of their landing which has been made without the king's knowledge and will, as their leaving the realm was made peacefully and without impediment, would prepare to enter the realm with more will and spirit, to disturb the peace, or to give aid to the said John and William if they proposed to grieve to the realm; the king has commanded the barons and bailiffs of the ports to keep their shore manfully and strongly against the invasion of anyone; and whereas the king has appointed and aid to the said Brian, in the keeping of the peace and especially in the defence of the maritime parts there; and if any are disobedient or remiss in executing the king's mandates, the king will betake him forthwith to their persons and goods, notwithstanding any liberty, as against those who care not whether the king's and realm be given over to confusion and disherison.

Mandate to the said Brian to be keeper of the peace of the counties accordingly; and the king has commanded the sheriff to be of aid and counsel to him. And as false rumours are being spread of the king, whereby trouble may be again stirred in the realm, the king has written to the said sheriff in the form of these presents, and if the sheriff is lax, the said Brian is to urge him to be diligent for the love of the king and the common utility of the realm.

1326. William Harold of Haroldstone held Warren of the Bishop. He was the William Harold of Haverford who did homage to the King in 1301 and also is recorded as a witness to a grant of land at Llawhadden to the chapter of St David's. His granddaughter and heiress Alice married Peter Perot of Jestington around 1349.

1534. William Waren or Warren was the last prior of Pembroke.

1535. First actual record of the Church in the Valor Ecclesiasticus of Henry VIII. when the value is recorded as £4 8s and the Vicar was John Howell.

Bacon's Liber Regis gives the clear yearly value as £10 and King's books value as £4 8s 1/2d.

Pembrokeshire Antiquities p36.

Henry VIII in the 38th year of his reign grants the same to Richard Devereaux, esq., and his heirs for ever by knights service, paying annually £3 13s 9d by writ of privy seal.

1606. George Owen records in the Taylor's Cussion the parish of Warren as having 3 freeholders and 14 householders. [I believe his handwriting is very difficult to understand.] The Warren family that he records though are of Trewern north Pembrokeshire.

1650. An inquisition on Church lands, impropriations, preaching and related subjects (Lambeth MS 915), record that the minister of Warren was not approved of by the Commission and was ejected and the profits sequestered. Was he replaced ? See list of vicars.

1662 April. Act of Uniformity required all ministers to give their assent to the rites and liturgy of the Church. 130 Puritan ministers left their livings many being replaced with those they had ejected 12 years before.

[The History of Wales - J. Graham Jones].

1710. Erasmus Saunders records that the living of Warren was valued at £10 per year (one of the poorest in the area). St Twinnels was valued at £24 and Castlemartin £20. He says that there being several churches where we are but rarely, if at all, to meet with Preaching, Catechising or Administering of the Holy Communion. In others the Service of the prayers is but partly Read, and that perhaps but once a month, or perhaps once in a quarter of a year; not is it indeed reasonable to expect that they would be better served while Stipends allow'd for the service of them are so small that a poor Curate must sometimes submit to serve three or four Churches for £10 or £12 a year and that perhaps when they are almost as many miles from each other.

1762 October 16th.

Letter from Bishop Samuel Squire of St David's to Mr Holcombe [his newly appointed Agent] re estates belonging to the Diocese of St David's about which "parts of the lands I have reason to believe, have from time to time, been transferred by fraudulent leasees to other owners without the bishops or their agents knowing anything of the matter".

One of the Estates mentioned was that of Warren Rectory leases to Mr Bar. Blaine in 1751.

Church in Wales MS SD/LET/1827.

1770 November 30. Abr[aha]m Leach to the Rev. Mr Archdeacon [George] Holcombe at Pulcroghan:

Some little time ago I took the liberty of mentioning to you an inconvenience which attended Warren Church and Chancel from a vacant aisle adjoining the body of the Church. On a fair survey I find that it's not made the least use of by the parishioners and contributes greatly to make the church very damp, the water in rainy seasons running in streams into the church through the roof and gutter though its vaulted, the parishioners not attending to the repairs as its not made use of. I made a proposal to the parishioners that if they would give me leave I would pull down the aisle and fill up the arch, which would make the church more dry and comfortable. They all consented but one, whose only reason is that some of his wife's family were buried there some years past. As the church is so large and burying ground enough in it for that family, I think his objection very trifling. I therefore beg the favour of you that you would be pleased to represent the matter to the Bishop and beg his indulgence to take down the aisle. You will please to mention to the Bishop that my father is tenant to his lordship for the tithes of Warren and has the care of the repairs of the chancel in him in consequence of it. (Lucas MS 1062).

1786 Land Tax returns: Henry Leach paid £4 on the Great Tithe of Warren; he died the next year age 87. [Pembrokeshire Historian no7 page 38 has much information on Leach's family and yeoman stock in the Castlemartin area]. Henry made his fortune as a merchant in Pembroke then invested in property; acquired Corston and also had investments in mining. It was Henry's son Abraham who wrote the letter above and who took over his fathers business interests and increased the family fortune substantially.

Restored in 1855 altering the church's appearance.

1855, 6, 7. Restored at cost of Lord Cawder by David Brandon architect London. James Rogers of Tenby contractor cost £629 + £82 for Minton Tiles. (Carmarthen PRO Cawder Box 223 & 140).

Letter from David Brandon to Lord Cawder "When I examined the stonework of the spire, I found it much more decayed than anticipated. All the external face had crumbled, particularly on the Southwest side due to the vegetation covering it. It lets water through into the Church. It cannot be repaired and must either be rebuilt or cased in Forest of Dean stone 5 to 6 inches thick".

(Letter CRO Cawder Box 140).

[not clear which option followed, but it was "not quite finished" in another letter of 30 Dec 1857.
 work in the church included new windows, new floor, new pews, new pulpit and reading desk;
all designed by Brandon **

1867. Stained glass window to Major (died 22 April 1864 aged 69) and Mrs Leach (died 1861) of Corston by Hearman of London [a good firm] (Cambrian 29 March 1867).

[This may be the east window, the subject shown was "Jesus rising from the tomb" however see 1922]. Their eldest son Henry inherited. (NLW St David's Faculty paper 672).

1894. Stained glass window put up to Archdeacon Edwards (St David's Archdeaconary Magazine Dec 1894).

1905. Henry Leach of Corston buried at Warren [died 20 June] [see Pembroke Historian vol7 p 50].

1922. His widow died March 1922 aged 86.

1922 the stained glass window in the transept "erected 60 years ago by General Leach" was removed by the family and another one substituted in its place. The old one was "never satisfactory to the family" and was destroyed.

1924. Stained glass window put up to Major General Leach who died in Bath 7 Aug 1923 aged 86 and to Henry Ince of Trecwn by Lady Leach [Ince was her uncle] "This is the 3rd Leach window in the Church".

(Pembs Telegraph 25 Aug 1924).

1930's Memorial to General Leach - stone plaque on wall may be by Eric Gill, sculptor. Brigadier General Sir Edmund Burleigh Leach CB CMG CVO died without issue 16th Aug 1936 ending the Leach association with Corston.

In 1986 the Warren Church Trust was formed as it was realised that there was a need for a place of worship for the many troops who visited the Castlemartin R.A.C. Range. The British and German Forces based at the Castlemartin R.A.C. Range, part of the parish, arranged the funding of the complete restoration which included a new roof. The architects being Michell & Holden, Pembroke. Unfortunately on the 25th January 1990, during a hurricane with winds gusting up to 112 mph, the recently restored roof was blown off, and had to be replaced.

From article by Rev. Hill in Link Up:

Warren Church has a much travelled organ. Built in 1842, it is reputed to have originally belonged to Felix Mendelssohn (1809 - 1857). It was then moved to the church at Sibton Suffolk. In 1867 it was bought by F. & E. Mirehouse for St Mary's Church Angle. 20 years later it was moved from Angle to St Michael's Castlemartin where it remained until 1988. The organ underwent a major restoration in 1916, paid for by Cecil Elinor Lambton as a memorial to her grandmother, Mary Levett, the daughter of John Mirehouse of Angle and Brownslade. By 1988 it was again in need of restoration, and by a happy inspiration was included in the restoration work at Warren.

(Castlemartin) "In the Churchyard a neat gravestone commemorates an old lady of the name of Lovelyn, widow of a former rector, who died at the very advanced age of 104. She was mother to Lovelyn, of Trinity College Oxford, who published a book of poems, elegant specimens of classical latinity, but more honourable to his muse than his morals." (Unfortunately I have been unable to obtain a copy so I cannot comment. Fenton completely missed Warren on his journeying through South Pembrokeshire).

Loveling - 4 generations of Vicars same parish

Loveling William 1613 was the first of four members of the same family who served this church as vicars over a period of one hundred and fourty seven years Is there any other church that can say the same

William only was vicar for 16 years and was succeeded by his son

Loveling Mathias (Mathew) 1629 who also held the living of Castlemartin as did many of the succeeding vicars Mathias although had problems because he was turned out of the benefice for insufficiency by the Commissioners for Propagation in 1650 and the profit's what they were sequestered a successor was not appointed He seems to have regained the living in 1662 when many puritain ministers left their livings rather than give assent to the rites and rituals of the Church under the Act of Uniformity

The Land Tax records give us a picture of the size of the parish at that time of thirty households ten were classed as paupers and onl six had more than one hearth the biggest house in the area has occupied by Thomas, Gough and had five hearths not very big when compared to some of the houses in other parishes

Mathias Loveling 1671 died in 1671 and was succeeded by his son

Loveling William 1718 during his time Erasmus Saunders described the living of Warren as one of the poorest in the area and says of the churches generally in the area that there were many which "" we are but rarely if at all to meet with Preaching Catechising or Administering of the Holy Communion In others the Services of the prayers is but partly read, and that perhaps but once a month or perhaps once in a quarter of a year Curates were submitted to serve three of four churches very often ten of twelve Miles from one another for an annual stipend of 10pounds William was in 1718 followed by his son

Lovering Thomas 1760 Thomas, died in 1760 but his wife lived to be 104
